This is a tremendous opportunity. In addition to recognizing, hopefully, these expanded national park areas, we should note that Mia Lin is developing a series of sculptures, part of a confluence project at a series of installations that will take place at four different locations along the confluence of rivers reflecting the cultural integration, symbolized by the rivers merging. It should be a profound and exciting piece of work and something that will be a treasure for many years to come.

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) for working diligently with me, and I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) for his courtesies.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOLBE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2643, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4609, H.R. 3380, and H.R. 2643.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 6:30 p.m. today.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until approximately 6:30 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT) at 6 o'clock and 31 minutes p.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put the question on motions to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed earlier today, in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

H.R. 4609, by the yeas and nays;

H.R. 2643, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for the second vote in this series.

COMPREHENSIVE STUDY OF THE RATHDRUM PRAIRIE/SPOKANE VALLEY AQUIFER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 4609.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4609, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 340, nays 9, not voting 85, as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 284, I was traveling on official business. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be present for rollcall votes 283 and 284. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on each on them.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, district business prevents me from being present for legislative business scheduled for today, Monday, July 8, 2002. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on the following rollcall votes: H.R. 4609, the Rathdrum Prairie/Spo-kane Valley Aquifer Study Act (rollcall No. 283); and H.R. 2643, the Fort Clatsop National Memorial Expansion Act (rollcall No. 284).

RESIGNATION AS MEMBER OF COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT) laid before the House the following resignation as a member of the Committee on the Budget:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 8, 2002.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
*Speaker of the House, House of Representatives,
The Capitol, Washington, DC.*

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I write to inform you of my resignation from the Budget Committee as I undertake my new role to serve on the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, pursuant to the rules of the Democratic Caucus. I look forward to serving on the Transportation Committee to advance the issues important to my constituents.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL E. CAPUANO,
Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FROST. Madam Speaker, by direction of the Democratic Caucus, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 470) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 470

Resolved, That the following Members be and are hereby, elected to the following committees of the United States House of Representatives:

Committee on Resources: Mr. Holden of Pennsylvania;

Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure: Mr. Capuano of Massachusetts.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT PROCESS FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4635, ARMING PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM ACT

(Mr. REYNOLDS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, a "Dear Colleague" letter has been sent to Members informing them that the Committee on Rules plans to meet on Tuesday, July 9, 2002, to grant a rule for the consideration of H.R. 4635, the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism Act.

The Committee on Rules may grant a rule which would require that amendments be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD prior to the consideration on the floor.

The Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure has filed its report on the bill today. Members should draft their amendments to the bill as reported by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. The text of the reported bill is available on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure's web site.

Members should use the Office of Legislative Counsel to ensure that their amendments are properly drafted, and should check with the Office of the Parliamentarian to be certain their amendments comply with the rules of the House.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTENTION TO OFFER ON TOMORROW MOTION TO INSTRUCT ON H.R. 3295, HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT OF 2001

Mr. LANGEVIN. Madam Speaker, pursuant to clause 7(c) of rule XXII, I hereby announce my intention to offer a motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3295 tomorrow.

The form of the motion is as follows:

I move that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill H.R. 3295 be instructed to recede from disagreement with the provisions contained in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 101(a)(3) of the Senate amendment to the House bill (relating to the accessibility of voting systems for individuals with disabilities).

SPECIAL ORDERS

THE SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

REFORMING THE SECURITIES EXCHANGE COMMISSION

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the President will go to New York, to Wall Street, to give a much-anticipated speech on reforming the mess in corporate America.

Now this will be an interesting day because this is the same President and Vice President and cabinet who have long touted their extraordinarily tight ties with corporate America; the same President who appointed Harvey Pitt, a former securities lawyer, as head of the Securities Exchange Commission; Mr. Pitt, who, when he was sworn in, promised a kinder, gentler Securities and Exchange Commission, even while all these abuses were going on. And, in fact, recently Mr. Pitt was berated for meeting with people from a firm under investigation; and he said, well, how could I not meet with people from firms under investigation who I represented? I represented them all.

He is saying as the head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, basically if he recused himself for conflict of interest from his former clients, and obviously future clients when he leaves his measly government salary and goes back to earning millions of dollars a year, representing these crooks and swindlers, he would not be able to do his job. In fact, he is not able to do his job.

Just the other day, an administrative law judge dismissed a finding by the SEC because Harvey Pitt could not vote, because he can meet with these people, he can consult with them and talk with them and tell them what the SEC is looking at and doing about them, he can do that; but the line is drawn by Federal law at voting. If he has recently represented these people, which he has, he could not vote.

So in the case of Ernst and Young, Chairman Pitt had to recuse himself. Commissioner Cynthia Glassman had to recuse herself. So there was only one person left to vote who was a Clinton appointee, who did not have a conflict of interest, who had not represented these miscreants previously; and an administrative law judge said that is not adequate, you cannot have just one person vote to prosecute these folks.

Now we are confronted with the fact that we have a Securities and Exchange Commission, which has been dramatically underfunded by the Bush administration, 40 percent less than the House budget which was not adequate. In fact, the President, as recently as March, and his staff were representing a zero funding increase for the Securities and Exchange Commission, the one that is so outgunned, and now the one they are bragging on for doing all of this investigating and putting these people in jail and all this stuff they are going to be doing. Of course, they cannot do any of that if the head of the Securities and Exchange Commission is so extraordinarily conflicted that he cannot vote in any of the prosecutions and other members of the board are also conflicted. In fact, the President has nominated yet another person from another accounting firm to be on the board of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Hopefully, what we will hear tomorrow from the President will be something that is a radical change from the first year and a half of his administration, where they have been coddling these crooks and criminals, the Ken Lays of the world, that basically wrote the energy policy of the United States of America. The Bush administration has yet to release the documents regarding the meetings that Mr. Lay and Enron had with the administration in formulating that policy. We do know that Enron met more than once a day, more than once a day, this giant corporation met with the energy commission, more than once a day. That is a real good distance. Those are the kind of watchdogs we want.

Mr. Pitt and the SEC are kind of reminding me of my old chessee bear. He is a wonderful old dog, a great watchdog, but he is now 13½ years old, much past his expected longevity for a chessee. His teeth are kind of worn down and he is still a big dog, and even when he barks, we know it is not very serious. That is kind of what we got at the SEC today, and I am afraid that is what we are going to get from the President tomorrow.

There will be some barking, but there are not going to be any real teeth; and we are going to know it is not very serious because the people that they would have to go after are the same people who contributed to the record fundraiser the Republicans had 3 weeks ago, the record amount of money that President Bush raised in his Presidential campaign. Their largess might be constrained. I mean, sure, they have hidden some of it in places where we cannot go after it, like mansions in Florida and that; but we want to make sure, I am certain, that they have some left to contribute to political causes after all.

So I expect we are going to get the toothless, barkless watchdog tomorrow. We are going to have to watch very carefully what the President proposes.

Will he support the Senate bill, the Sarbanes bill? Thus far they have opposed it and supported the phony bill that passed the House to reform some of these practices.

Will they go after the corporate tax havens? Will they go after these thieves and crooks and criminals and put them in jail? Will they try and get Americans back their 401(k)s and pensions or not? The proof will be in the speech tomorrow. We will all listen carefully.

IN HONOR OF BILL RUGER, SR.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak for a few moments about the passing of one of America's talented inventors, industrialists, and sportsmen.

Bill Ruger, Sr., was a long-time friend and constituent of mine. As chairman of Sturm, Ruger and Company, the manufacturer of the world-renowned Ruger gun, Bill gained recognition as an inventor, pioneer, faithful employer, and patriotic American industrialist. The "old man," as many employees and admirers lovingly called him, was the undisputed king of the American sporting industry.

Building on the first sale of the Sturm Ruger standard pistol in 1949, Bill ultimately created the largest and most widely respected firearms manufacturing concern in the world. For almost 50 years, he built a business, patented numerous innovative ideas and designs, and produced products with legendary appeal and durability. His rare genius was in transforming his innovations into products that won intense customer satisfaction and, in turn, customer loyalty. Bill believed that a well-designed, well-made and reasonably priced product would always attract buyers; and the legions of sportsmen that would never hike a field with anything but a Ruger certainly proved him right.

In some ways, he was the Henry Ford or Thomas Edison of the second half of the 20th century, taking manufacturing processes such as investment casting to new levels, and beating the competition fair and square through timeless quality and efficiency. He had a love for all things mechanical and taught himself most of what he would later use as the basis of his designs. In the process, he became one of the foremost authorities on automotive design and was one of the few people in the world that actually designed and built his own automobile.

Bill Ruger did not build his company in order to sell out and retire, but rather to profit steadily from the success of its products. He believed in taking the long view and built lasting relationships with employees and customers. At a time when manufacturers are heading overseas and across our borders, Sturm Ruger proudly engineers and builds all of its products in the United States.

His success has created great opportunity for many others, including many of my constituents; and his company continues to be a vital part of New Hampshire's economy and community. The "old man," as he was called, leaves a proud legacy to many, not only in New Hampshire but in Arizona and Connecticut as well.

For people who call themselves sportsmen, Bill Ruger was a name that was as celebrated and admired as Ernest Hemingway or Jack O'Connor. Although Bill will be missed by many who take regularly to the field, somehow we will know that he will be along for many more hunts.

Bill viewed a well-crafted gun as a bond that connected families as it was passed from generation to generation. What he may have missed is how one of his creations bonds us to him as his genius and commitment to quality, durability, and affordability live on in perfectly cast steel and finely carved walnut.

That was the gift left to us by the old man. He will be missed by many friends, admirers and employees but especially by his family. I would like to extend my condolences to the Ruger and Vogel families, especially Molly and Bill Ruger, on the passing of their father, a truly great man.

NO VOUCHERS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor because a bill has just been introduced to impose vouchers on the District of Columbia. The Congress had the opportunity to impose vouchers on itself when H.R. 1 was here, the President's Leave No Child Behind bill. Instead, it defeated a voucher proposal 273 to 155; 68 Republicans joined 204 Democrats. It was not even close.

Further, there have been 20 referenda on vouchers, all of them defeated, most recently in California and Michigan. Not only were they defeated overwhelmingly by almost three-quarters of the population in each State but the people of color, minorities, voted even more overwhelmingly against vouchers. In D.C. we had our own voucher vote in the 1980s: 89 percent against, 11 percent for.

What we are asking for in the Nation's capital is the same choices in educating our children that each and every Member of this body has insisted upon already for her own district and in her own State; and do not get me wrong, I do not believe a child can be in the first grade but once. So I strongly believe in choices and alternatives to public schools. The District deserves applause for its efforts on choice because our own efforts far outdo the efforts of any Member of this body. Applause, not punishment, for the choices we have made.

What are our alternatives? First, we have more charter schools in the District of Columbia per capita than any other district. Fourteen percent of our children go to public charter schools. No other Member's district even approaches this percentage of its children in charter schools.

Second, a D.C. child can go out of her own ward to any public school in the District of Columbia. We had children every day going from the poorest wards in 7th and 8th across to more wealthy wards, Ward 3, for example.

Third, I have strongly supported the work of the Washington scholarship fund, a private organization that provides scholarships, mostly to Catholic schools, using private money. I mean that that effort using private money is precisely the way to support our children.

Fourth, D.C. closes schools where it is not up to standard and then reopens them under new leadership. We have done that with nine schools this year with remarkable results.

It is ironic that this bill would come up at this time. Today's Washington Times has an editorial: "D.C. Schools Make Headway." It is an editorial from a newspaper that has been fiercely critical of the D.C. public schools. It opens by saying: "Preliminary test data show that D.C. teachers appear to be teaching and students appear to be learning," and it cites statistics. Fifty percent of the children improved in math and reading. Did they do as well in my colleagues' districts? Children in the most economically deprived neighborhoods improved 20 percent. Did my colleagues' economically deprived children do as well?

All of our charter schools are accountable. We can close charter schools, and have closed three this year, when they are not doing as well with our children. We can close public schools, and we closed nine this year, reopened them and they have done much better under new leadership. We can impose the same requirements on charter public schools as we do on other schools, and those requirements are very stiff. We cannot do that particularly to religious schools because they must not be accountable to the government in the practice of their religion.

I want to be clear about where I stand on the D.C. public schools. I am a proud graduate of the D.C. public schools, but I am not an apologist for them. I am proud of how they are improving. They are not nearly good enough; but by voting against the bill that has been introduced, my colleagues will be voting against choices others have made for their districts, not voting against choice.

We already have multiple choices in the District of Columbia, sufficient choices, so that I invite other Members to look at how to provide choices when their own people have voted against vouchers. There are other ways to acquire and to get choices. We would very much appreciate being allowed to make our own choices the way my colleagues' districts have insisted upon making their own choices.

Read today's Washington Times: "D.C. Schools Make Headway." Add to what my colleagues read. Respect the democratic choices of the citizens of the District of Columbia who are American citizens, entitled to their free choices, in the same way that my colleagues' own constituents are.

DEMOCRATIC PROPOSAL FOR PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention this evening to use the full 60 minutes. I am more likely to use about 20 minutes, but I did want to take the opportunity this evening to talk about an issue which I think was sort of left dangling when we left here a week ago before the July 4th recess.

My colleagues know that in the middle of the night, I guess it was about 2 a.m., we finally voted on the Republican prescription drug plan; and I was extremely disappointed, to say the least, over the fact that there was no opportunity to debate and bring up the Democratic substitute, the Democratic proposal.

Mr. Speaker, for at least 2 years, if not longer, I have been talking about the need for this House to debate the prescription drug issue, and I was glad to see that the Republicans finally did bring their bill to the floor. Although I do not agree with their bill and I do not think it will accomplish the goal of providing a prescription drug benefit, I was at least pleased to see that they were willing to bring it up.

But bringing the bill up also means debating the bill and allowing an alternative by the minority, the Democrats in the House, to debate and argue their alternative as well.

It is the first time in my memory, and I have been here 14 years, that on an important issue like this, that the minority, in this case the Democrats, were not allowed to have their alternative, their substitute, be considered by the full House. I think it was a grave mistake, a major error. I think it portends, clearly, that the Republican leadership in this House is not serious about passing a prescription drug bill. If they really felt they had the votes and they were able to strongly pass their bill and send it over to the other body and then eventually send it to the President, they would not have had any problem in letting the Democratic alternative come up. And the reason they did not allow it to come up, I am firmly convinced, is because they felt it would probably pass.

As it was, I think we had eight Republicans who voted against the Republican proposal, we had eight Democrats that I think voted for the Republican proposal, so it was clearly the case that the votes were very narrow there. And it is very likely if a Democratic substitute had been allowed and considered, it would have carried the day and it would have been the bill that passed this House.

I do not want to spend an hour tonight talking about why I think the Republican bill is a failure and why the Democratic alternative would have been a success. The issue now, of course, goes over to the other body, and the other body will be taking up a prescription drug bill fairly soon, within the next few weeks before the August break. But I will say that the major differences between the Republicans here and the Democrats in the House and the way in which the Democratic bill in the other body reflects the Democratic bill here, is that the Democrats are in favor of expanding Medicare to include a prescription drug benefit.

We have been saying fairly simply that Medicare is a good program; that it works. Whether we like it ideologically or not is not the issue. It works. It provides hospital care, it provides doctor care, and it should provide prescription drug benefits as well. And every senior or disabled person who is covered under Medicare should have the option as well of having a prescription drug benefit.

The Democratic proposal is very similar to what we provide now for doctor bills. In other words, under part B of Medicare now every senior can opt into a Medicare program that covers their doctor bills. They pay, I think, about $45 a month for the benefit. Eighty percent of their costs are paid for by the Federal Government. The deductible is $100, and after they have paid $2,000 out of pocket for the 20 percent copay, all their bills are paid for by the Federal Government.

More than 99 percent of the seniors and those who are eligible for Medicare take advantage of the part B benefit and pay the premium and get the benefit. As Democrats, we are simply saying do the same thing, establish a prescription drug benefit under Medicare. Everyone who is in Medicare is eligible for it. They would pay $25 a month for a premium, have a $100 deductible, and 80 percent of the cost of their drug bills would be paid by the Federal Government. After they paid $2,000 out of pocket for the 20 percent copay, all their bills, 100 percent, would be paid for by the Federal Government. Very simple. Very easy to understand.

The Democrats also are determined to deal with the issue of price, because we know that the biggest problem facing seniors is that the price of prescription drugs is going up. It is not just for seniors, it is for all Americans. So we say, well, bring this prescription drug program under the umbrella of Medicare and we will have 30 to 40 million Americans who now are under the auspices of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, who runs the Medicare program, and he or she would have the bargaining power of those 30 or 40 million seniors, Americans, and would be able to go to the drug companies and say, look, I have 30 or 40 million people; if you want me to buy your drugs, you have to give me a big discount. That discount might be as much as 30 percent across the board. That is a huge savings not only for the Federal Government, which is paying 80 percent of the cost, but also for the seniors who are paying the 20 percent copay.

The problem is, from what I see, that the Republicans in the House do not want any part of this because they do not believe in Medicare. They do not like it. It is a government program. But more than anything else, they do not want to expand Medicare to provide a prescription drug benefit. So what the bill does that passed the House of Representatives a week ago, the Republican bill, is really to further their goal, I think, the Republican goal, of privatizing the Medicare program.

What the Republican bill does is to create a program of subsidies to HMOs and private insurance companies to offer drug-only insurance policies to seniors. Some money in the form of a subsidy, a payment, goes to private insurance companies in the hope they will provide prescription drug coverage, or drug insurance policies, to whatever seniors want to buy them. It does not guarantee any benefit plan. There are going to be areas of the country, just like with HMOs, where these private insurance companies are not going to be offering the prescription drug plan. We do not know what the premiums will be. We do not know what kind of benefits they will offer. That is all up in the air.

And, of course, the insurers have already said they do not want any part of the drug-only policies. In fact, if there was an ability right now for insurance companies to offer drug-only policies they would be offering them. So it makes no sense, in my opinion, to instead of doing what the Democrats do, which is to say we are going to have a Medicare program to cover prescription drugs and guarantee a benefit for everyone, simply hope that the private insurance companies will somehow provide these kinds of policies.

Now, I do not want to just talk myself, because I think some might say, well, okay, here is another Democrat that is saying this will not work, the Republican plan will not work, but every one of the major newspapers, every major media outlet in the country has come out and said this Republican proposal, these drug insurance policies, will not work. I just want to go over a few of them tonight and highlight some of the things that have been said in the last few weeks, just to point out again that there are third-party validators, major newspapers, major insurance companies, executives, or insurance company trade officials who are saying these drug-only policies will never be offered.

This was in The New York Times. It was an editorial on Saturday, June 22, and I will read part of it. It says: "House Republicans, who regard traditional Medicare as antiquated, would provide money to private insurance companies, a big source of GOP campaign donations, to offer prescription drug policies. The idea of relying on private companies seems more ideological than practical. The pool of elderly Americans who will want the insurance is likely to consist of those who have the most need for expensive medicine. Even with Federal subsidies, it's unclear that enough insurance companies would be willing to participate and provide the economies that come from competition."

So The New York Times is saying this will not work; nobody is going to offer these policies, essentially. But we have another article in The New York Times a week earlier, this was from Sunday, June 16, which was giving comments from other insurance people, or people familiar with the insurance business, and the title of this article from June 16 says "Experts Wary of G.O.P. Drug Plan: Some Say 'Drug Only' Coverage Isn't Affordable for Insurers."

Keep in mind that the Republican proposal is a voluntary proposal. Nobody has to offer it. No insurance company has to offer these drug-only policies. Again, I will just read some of the highlights of this article in this Sunday New York Times, June 16.

"Under the proposal, Medicare would pay subsidies to private entities to offer insurance covering the cost of prescription drugs. Such 'drug only' insurance does not exist, and many private insurers doubt whether they could offer it at an affordable price. 'I am very skeptical that 'drug only' private plans would develop,' said Bill Gradison, a former Congressman," and I will add Republican Congressman, "who was President of the Health Insurance Association of America from 1993 to 1998. Representative BILL THOMAS, the California Republican who is chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, insisted: 'We should rely on private sector innovation in delivering the drug benefit. The private sector approach offers the most savings per prescription.' However, John C. Rother, Public Policy Director of AARP, which represents millions of the elderly, said, 'There is a risk of repeating the H.M.O. experience' with any proposal that relies heavily on private entities to provide Medicare drug benefits."

I do not want to go on, Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out that in the same way that we relied on HMOs to provide medicine coverage for seniors and found so many of them basically dropping out of the market, offering it maybe for 6 months and then telling seniors that they could not provide the coverage any more, and so many areas of the country that do not have HMOs offering any kind of HMO, the same problem is going to exist with these drug policies that the Republicans are proposing. There are going to be huge areas of the country where no policies are offered. And if they are offered, they are likely to be so expensive in terms of the premium that seniors just will decide it is not worth paying for them; not worth buying them.

So I think the promise or the commitment that the Republicans say they are making by passing this bill last week saying they are going to provide some prescription drug coverage is really a hollow one. None of this is going to be offered. None of this is going to happen.

There was an article, an op-ed on June 18 in The New York Times, by Paul Krugman, and he basically explained why insurance companies would not offer these kinds of policies. I think he did it very well, and I just wanted to read a little bit from that, if I could.

He says, "The House Republican plan has a bigger flaw. Instead of providing insurance directly, it will subsidize insurance companies to provide the coverage. The theory, apparently, is that competition among private insurance providers would somehow lead to lower costs."

Some of my Republican colleagues said this during the debate, that because of competition between insurance companies, drug prices would come down. But the problem is, there will not be any competition because nobody is going to offer them.

What Mr. Krugman says in The New York Times on June 18 is, "In fact, the almost certain result would be an embarrassing fiasco because the subsidy would have few, if any, takers. The trouble with drug insurance from a private insurance point of view is that some people have much higher drug expenses than the average, while others have expenses that are much lower, and both sets of people know who they are. This means that any company that tries to offer a plan whose premiums reflect average drug costs will find the only takers will be those who have above-average drug costs."

What Krugman is basically saying is that drug insurance is not like traditional insurance. If we think of auto insurance, where maybe there is 100 people insured and one person has an accident, all the others are paying into a pot of money and that one accident is paid for with the pot. But the insurance company is making money because they are only paying out maybe for one accident out of the hundred people. But in the case of a drug insurance or medicine, every senior needs medicine. Every senior has an opportunity to have the need for some kind of prescription during the course of the year.

So it is really a benefit. It is not something you are insuring for a risk of because everybody is going to take advantage of it. So seniors that have very high drug costs, $2,000 or $3,000, they may be willing to buy a drug policy that they have to pay $75 or $85 a month premium, but someone who does not have a huge drug cost is not going to do that and pay that huge cost. So we will have a situation where the insurance companies will say why would I want to provide this kind of coverage; I cannot make any money.

Again, I do not want to just rely on what I am saying. There are a whole bunch of quotes here, and I can just give some about where insurance industry executives are commenting on the Republican plan and saying it will not work. We have Mr. Don Young, President of Health Insurance Association of America, April 24 this year in Congress Daily. He says, "We caution Congress against relying on drug-only insurance as the mechanism to deliver a benefit." We have Charles Kahn, President of the Health Insurance Association of America in The New York Times in February of last year. He says, "I don't know of an insurance company that would offer a drug-only policy like that or even consider it." We have him again saying, "We will withhold judgment on the House Republican proposal until we see it in details. Nevertheless, we continue to believe that the concept of so-called drug-only private insurance simply would not work in practice. Private drug-only coverage would have to clear insurmountable financial, regulatory, and administrative hurdles simply to get to market."

Mary Lehnhard, senior vice president, Blue Cross and Blue Shield says, "It is exceedingly unlikely that any of our plans would offer a stand-alone prescription drug policy in their service areas. The reason is affordability. The absolute cost of an annual rate of increase in the cost of prescription drugs would make a drug-only benefit package so expensive that only those who expect to have very high use of the benefit would initially buy a policy. The package would not appeal to the majority of seniors that have relatively low drug costs. Plans would experience tremendous adverse selection, which would escalate premiums."

I could go on, but I am not going to. It is clear that every major insurance executive and trade association is saying the same thing, that these drug policies will never be offered.

Mr. Speaker, we might ask, the Republican leadership is not badly motivated. They are not bad people. Why are they going in this direction? What is the reason why they would try to pass something in the House on a strictly partisan vote, pretty much, that has no chance of passing the other body; or even if it did become law, have any real impact on seniors in terms of something that they would actually be able to buy or would want to buy.

I think one of the answers is that the real goal behind the Republican bill is not to offer a prescription drug coverage, but rather to take one more step towards privatizing Medicare. I do not know what other conclusion I can come to.

The other conclusion is, somehow they feel it is necessary to come up with something before Election Day so they can say that they passed something, and they will simply go out on the hustings and say we tried to pass something, and hope that Americans do not pay attention to what it is.

Of course, some of my colleagues on the Democratic side, including myself, have cited the fact that the Republican Party in the House is getting huge campaign contributions from the prescription drug industry, and so maybe they want to do something like this bill in order to pretend that they are providing a prescription drug benefit, but do not want to alienate the insurance company by actually doing something that might make a difference. I will go back to that when I talk about the price issue.

I want to talk a little bit about why I think the Republican bill is a bad bill even if it was available. In other words, I do not think anybody is going to sell these policies. I do not think that they are going to be offered anywhere where the premium is going to be affordable; but let us assume for 1 minute that I am Mr. SMITH, a senior in New Jersey, and somehow this bill passes and there is an insurance company in my area that offers a drug-only insurance policy.

Think about the reasons why I would not want to buy it, even if it was available, and there are many. First of all, if we look at the Republican proposal, it is basically going to cover less than 20 percent of prescription drug costs. The Democratic proposal guarantees that 80 percent of your costs are paid for by the Federal Government. The Republican proposal, even if it was available, and I do not think it will be, will probably cover less than 20 percent of the costs. Why would I say that?

Well, first of all, there is a huge hole or gap in coverage. Let us say you pay the premium, whatever it is. For the first $1,000, they estimate that the insurance company would probably offer to pay 80 percent of the cost, and for the second $1,000, they estimate the insurance company would pay 50 percent. They estimate that, they do not guarantee it.

From the $2,000 out of pocket to $3,700 out of pocket, they estimate that the Republican plan will pay no part of the cost. The average senior citizen, 47 percent of the seniors end up with prescription drug bills that fall into that gap, between $2,000 and $3,700 out of pocket.

Again, I would ask, even if this coverage was available, and it will not be, but even if it was, why would seniors want to pay a premium that for a good percentage of their cost is going to pay absolutely nothing by the Republicans' own calculations? We can look at the bill in many ways, but the most ridiculous thing about it at all, frankly, is that there is this gaping hole where there is no coverage at all for 47 percent of the seniors who incur costs over $2,000 a year.

I have already talked about the Democratic proposal and what it would do, so I am not going to go into that anymore this evening. But I did want to spend a little time on the issue of price because I think it is so important. We know, and we do not need statistics, because constituents have come up to Members over the past year and said the price of prescription drugs just keeps soaring, I cannot afford it.

The week before last when we were meeting and we finally voted on the bill, Families U.S.A., which is a health care consumer group, came out with a report on prices for prescription drugs. They basically pointed out very dramatically that for the most popular prescription drug medicines, prices rose three times the rate of inflation last year. I am going to go over some of the highlights from their press release of June 24.

It says, "The prices of the 50 most prescribed drugs for senior citizens rose on average by nearly three times the rate of inflation last year according to a new report released today by Families U.S.A. The study analyzed price increases for the 50 most commonly prescribed drugs for seniors for the last year, January 2001 through January 2002, and then for the past 5 years and the past 10 years."

The report found that last year nearly 36 out of 50 of these drugs rose at least one-and-a-half times the rate of inflation while over one-third, 18 out of 50, rose three or more times the rate of inflation.

Then they go into the specific drugs. It shows dramatically in the report how bad the price situation is and why these prescription drugs are increasingly not affordable.

Well, what is the Republican House leadership's answer to that?

I have discussed the problem of the basic bill, and the gaping hole where almost 50 percent of the seniors would not get any benefit above a certain amount of money that they would have to put out of pocket. But just to ensure in the Republican bill that the price issue could not be addressed in any way by the Federal Government, by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, by the administrator of the program which the Republicans put forward, the Republicans put in the bill a clause that they call the noninterference clause, based on published reports in Congress Daily; and this was put in by the CATS, the Conservative Action Team, a group of conservative Republican Members in the House.

And this noninterference clause, and this is in the bill that passed a week ago, it says that the administrator of the Republican program may not require or institute a price structure for the reimbursement of covered outpatient drugs, and the administrator may not interfere in any way with negotiations between PDP sponsors and Medicare+Choice organizations and drug manufacturers, wholesalers or other suppliers of covered outpatient drugs. What this noninterference clause essentially says is that we do not want the administrator of this prescription drug program, the Federal program, to in any way try to negotiate or interfere with any pricing. Now, how outrageous can this be?

I mentioned before the whole goal of the Democratic alternative was not only to put prescription drugs under Medicare and guarantee that every senior and every disabled person under Medicare had a prescription drug benefit, and the same benefit throughout the country, but that because of the fact that now 30 or 40 million Americans were now under the auspices of Medicare for their prescription drugs, that the Secretary of Health and Human Services would have the power to negotiate price reductions because he represented all those seniors and disabled people.

The Democrats actually put in the bill, in their alternative, a clause that mandates that the Secretary negotiate price reductions on behalf of those 30-40 million Americans. And we know it can be done. It is done by the Veterans Administration, by the military. It is done by other branches of the Federal Government in order to achieve major price reductions, 30-40 percent.

Not only do the Republicans not put their program under Medicare and do all of the other things that I have mentioned, but they specifically put in the bill that there cannot be any negotiations on price by the administrator of their program. Again, people say why would they do this? Why would well-meaning people insist that there be no negotiations over price in whatever program they are trying to set up?

I have no other answer than to say it is because they are essentially in the pockets of the pharmaceutical industry. The pharmaceutical industry insists that the Republican leadership not address the issue of price because they do not want to see any loss of profits.

I do not think that they would lose any profits because the bottom line is, all of a sudden now the prescription drug industry, the brand name pharmaceutical industry, is going to have all these seniors who they would be selling prescription medicine to that are not getting it now. The volume of their sales would skyrocket, but they are so afraid that there is going to be some negotiation over price that would reduce prices and somehow they would be negatively impacted, that they insist that there be a noninterference clause on price.

Mr. Speaker, Members do not have to believe me. I have backup information. The Washington Post, the day that the Republican bill was being considered in the Committee on Energy and the Commerce, of which I am a member, we had to break early at 5 p.m. and not finish the bill until the next day because the Republican National Committee was having a major fund-raiser; and a big part of it was being financed by the pharmaceutical industry. This was an article that appeared the next day in the Washington Post. It says, "Drug Firms Among Big Donors at GOP Event. Pharmaceutical companies are among 21 donors paying $250,000 each for red-carpet treatment at tonight's GOP fund-raising gala starring President Bush, 2 days after Republicans unveiled a prescription drug plan the industry is backing, according to GOP officials."

Skipping down in the article, "Drug companies, in particular, have made a rich investment into tonight's gala. Robert Ingram, GlaxoSmithKline PLC's chief operating officer, is the chief corporate fund-raiser for the gala. His company gave at least $250,000. Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, a trade group funded by the drug companies, kicked in $250,000, too. PhRMA, as it is best known inside the Beltway, is also helping underwrite a television ad campaign touting the GOP's prescription drug plan.

Pfizer, Inc., contributed at least $100,000 to the event, enough to earn the company the status of a vice chairman for the dinner. Eli Lilly, Bayer AG and Merck & Company each paid up to $50,000 to sponsor a table. Republican officials said other drug companies donated money as part of the fund-raising extravaganza.

"Every company giving money to the event has business before Congress. But the juxtaposition of the prescription drug debate on Capitol Hill and drug companies helping underwrite a major fund-raiser highlights the tight relationship lawmakers have with groups seeking to influence the work before them.

"A senior House GOP leadership aide said yesterday that Republicans are working hard behind the scenes on behalf of PhRMA to make sure that the party's prescription drug plan for the elderly suits drug companies."

I am not going to continue to read. But in conjunction with all of this, what is the Republican leadership hoping for? They passed the bill. They are going to go over now to the other body and the other body is going to start the debate, and I hope that the other body comes up with a Medicare plan. But what we are going to see over the next few months, and it has already started, is a huge ad campaign financed primarily by the pharmaceutical industry, to try to convince the American public through TV and other media outlets that the Republican plan is the best bill.

It has already started. The United Seniors Association which is basically a senior group that is put together by PhRMA, the pharmaceutical trade group, they launched a $3 million ad campaign before the debate touting the House GOP prescription drug plan which is based on, as I said, private insurers offering prescription drug coverage.

PhRMA spokeswoman Jackie Cottrell admitted they had recently given United Seniors Association an unrestricted grant. According to the Associated Press, several Republican officials speaking under condition of anonymity said they understood that the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America have provided the funds for the commercials.

Again, this is all in black and white. This is all easily documented. And I just think it is very sad. I think it is very sad that we ended up passing a Republican bill that is nothing more than a sham, something put out by the prescription drug industry so that the Republican leadership can say they have done something. We are talking about a Republican bill that will not work. Even if it did, the benefit is clearly inadequate, and I just think it is very sad that we are here now; and after 2 years of myself and other Democrats talking about the need for a prescription drug plan that all we ended up with was something that is basically a bone for the prescription drug industry and which is probably going nowhere because it will not be taken seriously by the other House and never become law.

But I think we have to continue to speak out; we have to continue to point out that this is a major issue, that the price of prescription drugs will continue to rise, that more and more seniors will not be able to buy their prescription drug medicine and that something needs to be done that is real that is going to make a difference for them. And I would hate to see this just become a campaign issue. I would much rather that this were an issue that was resolved and that actually ended up with a benefit that passed both Houses and that went to the President and was signed into law. But I do not see that happening.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude tonight, but I do intend to continue to bring this up over the next few weeks or the next few months because I think it is important that my colleagues understand that those of us on the Democratic side have not given up in trying to provide a real prescription drug benefit for seniors under Medicare and that as much as there may be ads and paid advertisements telling the American public that the Republican plan will accomplish something, that there needs to be voices here in the House of Representatives that say it will not and that it is just paid-for ads for a meaningless proposal and that at some point we will get together on a bipartisan basis and pass a meaningful prescription drug benefit that will actually provide a difference for America's seniors.

ENCOURAGING TOURISM IN COLORADO

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KIRK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. McINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I hold deep respect for the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), and I find his comments on some occasions to have substantial merit. But let me tell you, having just heard his comments this evening, that was probably one of the most partisan speeches I have heard on this House floor. The gentleman from New Jersey stands up here and acts as if the Democratic Party takes no contributions and as if taking contributions is some kind of evil. I would be happy to yield time to the gentleman if he would like to come up and explain the trial lawyers in this country, where their proceeds go.

It is very easy when you are not charged with getting the mule train up the mountain, it is very easy to sit on sidelines, as the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) has done, and criticize the people who have to get that wagon up the mountain. It is always easy when you are not the one having to push or pull the wagon. It is always easy to sit on the wagon and demand more from the mules that are pulling that wagon.

I found those remarks almost outrageous, almost outrageous. Outside of the person who spoke them, who has, in my opinion, a great amount of integrity, that is the only thing that saved these remarks that we have just heard from being outrageous. Where was the gentleman from New Jersey when it was time for a bipartisan, not a partisan, effort, but a bipartisan effort to put a prescription care bill together? All we see is after we finally get something done, after finally this House begins to move on prescription care services, we always have the Monday morning quarterbacks that show up, and today happens to be Monday evening, so the Monday evening quarterbacks that show up and say, oh, my gosh, this was not right, you should have done this, you should have done that. But you never saw a shovel in their hands. You never saw them helping to dig the ditch. All they do is sit back there under the shade tree criticizing the people that have to dig the ditch. So I hope that we hold those comments in their proper context, and frankly in the future I would expect more from a gentleman of that capability and that integrity.

I want to move on to a couple different subjects this evening that I think are very important. First of all, as many of my colleagues know, I come from the State of Colorado. My district is the Third Congressional District of the State of Colorado, and all the substantial fires in Colorado are in the Third Congressional District and some of the damage by the fire of course has gone beyond the borders of the third district. It certainly has impacted the people of the State of Colorado, and I do not mean to underestimate the damage that these fires caused in their particular areas.

But what I want to stress to my colleagues is a very, very small fraction of Colorado actually went into flames and burned down. What is happening, what we are seeing out in Colorado is we are seeing a lot of negative publicity about the damage that these fires did. And again if you owned a home out there that was destroyed by a fire, you could not get much more negative press coverage. Of course it is devastating to you and of course the loss is terrible, but as a State I think we need to put it in its proper proportion because the impact of the negative stories we are seeing about those fires in Colorado, and by the way, all of those fires are pretty well controlled right now. I think all of them but one are contained, but the publicity in the press that we are seeing as a result of those fires is really impacting severely Colorado's tourism economy. So I want to tonight in front of my colleagues bring up this poster here and show the Colorado fire damage.

Now, according to what my colleagues have read in the media and so on and the pictures shown across the country, the belief would be that a huge amount of the State of Colorado is in flames. Take a very close look at this. It is the blackened areas of the State of Colorado which have been burned and this is a current poster. We have got some down in Durango. This is the big fire outside of Denver right there, and these other little spots, these little black spots including this spot here in Glenwood Springs, Colorado. Look at that in proportion to the rest of the State.

What I am saying is that Colorado is open for business. One can go to Colorado and have a terrific vacation. The mountains of Colorado are still as pristine as they were with the small exceptions of some of these black areas where we have suffered consequences of terrible fire. A couple forests, the Pike National Forest, have shut down temporarily pending more moisture; and we are worried about the fire hazard out there. You will be limited in that you cannot open a can of beans and cook them over an open fire out there in those Colorado mountains. You can use a Coleman stove or something else, but you cannot have open fires. But aside from that, Colorado is open for business.

Colorado has four national parks. They are open for business. The Air Force Academy is open for business. My good friend Bob Zimmerman and his crew down there in the valley with the sand dunes, soon to be a national park, the Sand Dunes National Park, soon to be funded this week we hope in an appropriations bill, which will be good news to Bob Zimmerman, they are open for business down there. Go see the sand dunes.

There is the Black Canyon National Park, open for business. The Colorado National Monument in Grand Junction, open for business. The Aspen Music Festival, open for business. The Steamboat community, and they have a great summer up there, open for business. Denver, the Denver Rockies, open for business.

By far, less than a fraction, less than a fraction of the land in the State of Colorado, was burned, well less than 1 percent. But if you want to help the people of Colorado who have suffered as a result of these fires, go ahead with your planned vacation.

Nothing is worse than having a negative impact upon you as a result of fire, and then turning around and losing your job because tourists have quit coming to Colorado. Colorado is open for business. It is a great place to visit. I would urge my colleagues to head for Colorado, if you get an opportunity, or talk to some of your constituents. Encourage them to go ahead and visit our great State.

Colorado is the highest place on the continent; the highest place on the continent. The low point in Colorado is higher than almost all of the high points in most of the other States. I think we probably have, I am not sure, but it is close, 65 mountains over 14,000 feet. Colorado has 56 of them. Colorado is the only State in the Union that has no water coming in. It is the Mother of Rivers. It is called the Mother State of Rivers. It is a natural beauty.

So if you have an opportunity, go visit the sand dunes, go visit the Air Force Academy, go to a Rockies game, go over in Glenwood Springs. Glenwood Springs, the mountains around it have some scars as a result of this fire, but that famous Hot Springs pool, still open for business. So I would hope that some of my colleagues give that their consideration and head for Colorado. It is a great State.

CORPORATE GREED

Now I want to change subjects entirely. The next subject I want to talk about is on the minds of a lot of people in America. It is on the minds of many of my colleagues here. Pretty simple. It is called corporate greed.

What has happened out there in the world of business in this fine country of ours? What has happened to the Adam Smith philosophy in "A Wealth of Great Nations," the book that he wrote, that really has been a guiding foundation for capitalism in America?

Well, one of the things that has happened is we have had a few, not a huge amount, but a few greedy individuals who have not only taken advantage, in my opinion, have taken criminal advantage of the public's trust, and I wanted to go through a few of those examples this evening. Because in order for capitalism to work as well as it has worked, in order for it to continue to operate, you have to have as an element of it, as a basic element of capitalism, as a basic element of our business system in this country, a business system that is admired throughout the world, you have to have as an element of it public integrity, integrity when you are dealing with the public's money; and that comes not only from the chief financial officer, not only from the chief executive officer, but it also is a fiduciary requirement of your board of directors.

Let me start by looking at the corporate structure as corporations are envisioned in America. A corporation is a legal entity. It is not a person; it is a legal entity. Remember, not all corporations are big. In fact, by far, by far the majority of corporations in this country are very, very small.

I will give you an example. My in-laws have a ranch. They are not big ranchers. They have a ranch. But because of corporate liability, they have incorporated their ranch. I know people who run an ice cream truck who incorporate their ice cream truck. So just because someone is incorporated does not mean they are large, and to throw the same blanket overall corporations because of the misbehavior of a few individuals in a few corporations would be a big mistake to our free enterprise system.

You would be surprised if you just look out amongst your neighbors in the business world. Whether it is a Subway shop, whether it is some other kind of a trucking operation, a farming operation, you would be surprised how many of them are incorporated. So you must be careful before you criticize all of these corporate entities.

Now, in America we have what we call in the corporate structure as it is envisioned, as it has been practiced since corporations first came around, you have the president or the chief executive officer. Let us call it the chief executive officer of the corporation.

Now, a lot of people think that the chief executive officer is the top dog, that is the person, he or she is in charge of that company. Well, the reality of it is the CEO, your chief executive officer, answers to the board of directors.

The board of directors is the top element of management, so to speak. They kind of oversee. They set the policy for management. They set the long-term vision for the company. So, really, the most important entity in a corporation as far as management and as far as overall philosophy are not the executive officers like the president of the company or the chief executive officer of the company or the chief financial officer of the company. The most important aspect, in my opinion, is your board of directors.

Now, board of directors usually consist, in a typical corporation, of anywhere from, say, three, but your average board probably runs more between 20 and 30, members on that board of directors.

They meet on a regular basis, and within the average or the typical board of directors out there, they have subcommittees. They have an audit subcommittee, and that audit subcommittee's job is to oversee the management of the company, to be sure that the management of the company is following the general philosophy of the company as far as the audits, is following the law as far as the audits, and that the audits are making sense, that they are being performed. You have the executive committee of the board of directors which deals with executive compensation, and there are a lot of cases that we are going to question further in my remarks.

For example, how could the executive committee of Worldcom, which all of my colleagues know is right now on the verge of bankruptcy, how could the executive committee grant the CEO, the chief executive officer, a gentleman named Bernie Ebbers, a $400 million loan. Worldcom is not a bank.

I saw an interesting article the other day, and the name of the author slipped my mind, but I want to give credit to whoever that individual is. But they made a comparison to Donald Trump years ago and the troubles he got into as compared to the troubles people like Worldcom or Tyco or Xerox Corporation or K-Mart Corporation, the troubles they are into today, and it said, back then, Don Trump borrowed his money from the banks, and he was able to recover. Donald Trump actually made a pretty respectable recovery from the downfall that he took, but he dealt with banks.

What has happened in the meantime is these corporations have acted as banks. These board of directors have acted as banks. Frankly, they have put a bad name on all board of directors. They have put a bad name on all chief executive officers, and that is undeserved. We have a lot of companies in this country which operate in a very ethical fashion. We have a lot of them that operate a very efficient operation, and they have good products. But the only way for that to continue into the future is we have to have peer enforcement. We have to make it much more significant in this country to steal or take or borrow $400 million from a company that you do not pay back, that you have more consequences as a result of that than you do when you go into Wal-Mart and you steal a candy bar and you get arrested for shoplifting. My concern right now is that some of these individuals will walk away with less of a punishment than would any one of us if we were to walk into a convenience store and steal a candy bar and get arrested for shoplifting.

This is an opportunity for our system to show that the system has self enforcement, to show that the system knows how to stay on the tracks; that when we have individuals that try and derail the train, individuals that try and derail the train, that the system has a way of pulling those people back into place, that the system has a method of punishment towards these people. There are a lot of people, there are a lot of employees that have suffered as a result of K-Mart's bankruptcy. Now, unfortunately, those employees that have suffered as a result of K-Mart's bankruptcy finally are not the chief executive officers, one who gave himself a loan the day before they filed bankruptcy. I am going to go through some of these different examples.

Now, a lot of people say, and politicians love to jump to this, they love to say, well, it is a Republican or Democrat. Let me tell my colleagues something. This has happened while the Democrats were under control, when Bill Clinton was in his office over there. Take a look at Sunbeam Corporation, Waste Management Corporation, and most of the numbers that have been, where the books have been cooked on these corporations that we are talking about today happened during the democratic administration. I heard the President today, under a Republican, our Republican President today talking about the need that we have to crack down and crack down immediately on this, and he gave a bunch of different remedies.

My point here is not to get into a discussion whether the Republicans caused it or the Democrats caused it. Neither the Republicans nor the Democrats caused it. What caused it were some people with greed. I think many of these people acted in a criminal fashion. They are nothing but a bunch of thugs. That is exactly what they are. They are not thugs that were put out there by the Democratic Party. They are not thugs that were put out there by the Republican Party. They are just common, every day criminals who got put into the wrong position and they stole and stole and stole until they finally got caught.

Now, how interesting that some of these people, including Worldcom, today testifies up here on Capitol Hill about look, it was just an accounting problem. It was the accountants. This is during the same time, while they were here today testifying, a gentleman named Scott Sullivan, I think it is Scott Sullivan who was the treasurer for Worldcom, or their chief financial officer for Worldcom, and let me get the name exactly correct here. Yes, Scott Sullivan. He was the chief financial officer. While he was on Capitol Hill today, while he was on Capitol Hill today, refusing to talk to the United States Congress about what went wrong at Worldcom, why thousands, tens of thousands of people will lose their jobs, while he was refusing to talk today, here is what he was having built in Florida. Take a look at this. This home here is about a $15 million to $20 million home, 24,000 square feet. You could park many, many semis in these different structures. That is this 40-year-old's home in Florida on a lake, on a private lake that is being built out there. This is an individual who paid himself out of Worldcom, out of public, out of the public's investment money, paid himself the kind of salaries and bonuses to allow him to build a $15 million to $20 million home. And he anticipated, continuing to go ahead and, in my opinion, rob the people of this corporation on a continuing basis. Just think of the heating bill on this place every month. Think of the taxes on this place. The taxes are probably $10,000 or $20,000 every month. Where does he get the money? Go to the shareholders. Fudging the books, cooking the books. That is what we have going here.

When we have a criminal in our midst, we have to point him out. But because we have a group of several thousands and thousands of people, and in our country, thousands and thousands of people do business in our country. When we find a crook, people will become convinced that all of you are crooks if you do not do something about the crook you can get your hands on. We have an opportunity right now, the United States Congress, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Justice Department, and the President, who has obviously showed his intent; we have this opportunity to get our hands around the crooks. And the society, society today is looking to us to be responsive and to do something to get these people out of our midst, to make sure that we do not have future frauds like this one that just is taking place.

Now, I could care less about the $15 million home; what I care about is the 15,000 jobs. Do we think anybody else besides Scott Sullivan and his fellow executives get to walk away from a job to a home like that? How many Worldcom employees today are without a job and without any future potential for a job because of the greed practiced within the corporate board room, and within the executive offices of Worldcom, Incorporated? Look, I do not just want to pick on Worldcom. Let me talk about a couple of others here.

ImClone Systems. These are the people that find out on Wednesday that their magical cure for cancer will not be certified because it does not cure cancer, and so immediately they start selling stock before they are forced to make the announcement on Friday. There is the case where we heard about Martha Stewart. Whether or not Martha Stewart had inside information, who knows? But it is highly suspicious, that just out of the blue sky, Martha Stewart gets the message, or decides the day before the announcement is made that the stock is going to collapse, the day before, hours before, she sells that stock to some unsuspecting buyer out there. It was not just Martha Stewart that sold her stock on that day. Interestingly, the President of the company made sure his daughter sold her $2.5 million or $3 million worth of stock that day, and made sure the father sold his stock that day, and the stock broker himself, what a coincidence that all of his friends who had heavy investments in this company sold their stock on December 27 and the announcement was made on December 28.

Mr. Speaker, if the SEC finds out, and I suspect that they probably will, that these individuals dealt on inside knowledge, the hammer ought to come down. The hammer ought to come down. Because if it does not, the credibility of the entire system, of the free enterprise system of our country comes into question.

We are presented with an opportunity here. We are presented with an opportunity in the business world of this Nation, in the political world of this Nation that when somebody misbehaves like this, when somebody takes advantage of the public's trust and, in essence, steals from the public, we have the wherewithal and we have the courage to go get them. That is exactly what was expressed by our President today. This President is very focused and very intent on getting these people in a ringer, and that is exactly what we have to do.

Let me talk about a couple of other corporations. Xerox Corporation. When I grew up, everybody trusted Xerox Corporation. And they have restated twice in the last 2 weeks. We notice that they never state positive news. Everything these people are coming out with is negative. And it costs who? Not the chief executive officer; it costs the shareholders and employees of these companies.

Enron; of course, we know about Enron. But it is kind of amusing to hear Andrew Fastow, he set up these quiet, secret corporations, secret partnerships, although he actually got the approval of the board of directors, and it was very interesting that the U.S. Senate report was very critical of these board of directors, and justifiably so. It is the board's responsibility to make sure that you do not have an Enron Corporation, somebody like an Andrew Fastow, who is a crook. That is exactly what he did. A crook. Paid himself $30 million for 4 months of work. Of course, he runs this little partnership. Just to make it a little sarcastic to the shareholders, they name it after different characters or different scenes in the Star Wars movie. They think it is all one big joke. Show up at work every day, Andrew at Enron, and packed the money in his bag. Of course, we can imagine, Andrew also lives in a multi-million dollar home. So we gave Scott Sullivan's home, poor guy, has not finished his $20 million home yet, so he is probably only living in a $5 million home. But he has to live up to his standards, he has to move up in society. The same thing with Andrew down there in Texas.

These people need to have their assets that were improperly and unethically gained by them, taken away from them, under an appropriate judicial process. I am not saying that we become some kind of a dictatorship and that we throw our justice system out the window. Everybody is entitled a fair day in court, but everybody is also entitled to a square deal. And when you do not get a square deal, and you are not on fair negotiating grounds, when you do not get a square deal, we ought to have the process to make sure that those who cheated you, those who stole from you, those who acted in a criminal manner, pay the consequences of their actions.

Now, it does not just stop at Enron, as all of us know; it does not just stop with Worldcom. Look at Tyco International. What does Tyco do? The President of Tyco International, who makes hundreds of millions of dollars, hundreds of millions of dollars in pay, decides to cheat the government, cheat the people, that is who it is, the government is the people; cheat the people of the State he lives in on paying sales tax for the paintings that he bought.

Let me tell my colleagues something: I used to be a police officer. The first clue, when the door is cracked open, it ought to be a hint; if it is not locked, that is a hint. If the door of the House or the building one goes up to to investigate on, if the door is actually cracked open, you better guess something bigger is inside, something is inside. When you have a chief executive officer of a corporation, Tyco International, cheating on really what are small numbers as compared to his net worth, you better open the door, you better go investigate inside the building and see what else this individual has done. My guess is you have just scratched the surface. In my opinion, the Internal Revenue Service ought to be down there doing audits of this individual. Tyco International ought to be filing lawsuits against this individual. The prosecutors in that State ought to be looking into this individual for criminal fraud.

It does not just stop with the chief executive officer. A lot of times when one starts padding the books, cooking the books, one has to bring in partners. In this particular case, he brought in his lawyer.

Let us talk about his lawyer for a minute, or, first of all, his chief financial officer. His chief financial officer and the CEO cashed over $500 million in stocks since July of 1999. Now, that is on top of their salaries. Their salaries are not enough, and they are huge salaries, so they cash in $500 million more, to kind of pad their wallets.

Then they got their attorney, Mark Belnick. He decides that as an attorney he ought to be receiving bonuses, but he does not want these to be disclosed to the public at large, so he devises a way to have the corporation pay him tens of millions of dollars as the lawyer for the company in such a manner that he does not have to release it on the public disclosure statements.

Why does he not want it released on the public disclosure statements? Because he knows the shareholders would have nothing to do with it; that the shareholders would demand, would demand accountability, and would demand that he not receive that kind of pay.

Of course, he is aware of this. He knows that he might get caught in the action. He knows he might get caught with his hand in the cookie jar. So what does he do? He goes to the chief executive officer of Tyco, International, Dennis Kowalski, and says, Dennis, I might get caught at this. This is what I think happened. I might get caught, so why do you not give me a contract as your attorney, and if I get convicted with a felony, you still have to pay me millions of dollars. If I am convicted of a felony, if you decide to fire me because I am, in essence, stealing from the company, you have to pay me tens of millions of dollars.

That is the kind of corruption that goes on in the corporate world that we need to immediately isolate, and we need to cut it out. We need to stop it in such a way that any future chief executive officer and every board of directors is going to understand there are consequences to pay.

That is what we do with shoplifting in this country in every store we go into. I went into Toys "R" Us this weekend. As I walked in, they had a big poster at the front: Shoplifting. Help us keep prices low. Help us stop shoplifting. Shoplifting is a crime.

Yet, nowhere do we go where we find a board of directors where, at the entry into their boardroom, it says, you have a responsibility, board of directors, to the shareholders of this corporation, to the employees of this corporation, and to the public as a whole to make sure that this kind of thievery is not going on, or that these kinds of misleading statements are not going on, and that your management team is, in fact, the best possible management team that could be out there.

What I am saying here is that our country needs to focus, and the businesses and the chief executive officers and the good executives, and we have a lot of good people that run a lot of good companies in this country, they are the ones who need to stand up and speak the loudest about this misbehavior that has gone on in the corporate boardroom and in the corporate executive offices.

I do not want to stop just short of Tyco. I should mention also the board of directors. Tyco had a member of the board of directors named Frank Welsh. Tyco bought another company, and guess what, Frank Welsh decided he ought to have a cut of it, so he got a $20 million little payment on the side for helping merge the company. Where is Frank Welsh tonight? He is probably sitting in a limousine getting ready to go to a play on Broadway or something.

These people need to understand that we will go after them. I will tell the Members, for my part, I have some solutions that I think will work. But I want Members to know that, for my part, I am very committed, as I think most of my colleagues are, Republican or Democrat. And this is not an affront to one political party, this is an affront to the people of this Nation, and we must all remain committed to see that these people pay the consequences for the fraud that they have worked upon the public.

I want to show Members something. I have mentioned a couple of these corporations. Let me go through some others. We talked about Tyco. Remember what Tyco did? That is what I have just been talking about. WorldCom, that is where the chief executive officer, a guy named Bernie Evers, had the board of directors loan him almost $400 million, on top of all the other millions and tens of millions of dollars he has been paid. This is where Scott Sullivan worked, that big mansion. That is WorldCom.

K-Mart, K-Mart has its chief executive officers and some of its other executive officers, they go and first of all they go into bankruptcy. They lay off 22,000 people. K-Mart lays off 22,000 jobs as a result of their bankruptcy. But right before they filed bankruptcy, K-Mart acts and gives their chief executive officer a $5 million loan, and they forgive the repayment of it. Have Members ever heard of a bank saying, here is $5 million, but you don't have to worry about paying it back?

That is exactly what these companies have done, and K-Mart leads the charge. That is exactly what WorldCom did, and they helped lead the charge: Here you are, Mr. Chief Executive Officer, here is $400 million. Do not worry about paying it back. What is going on here?

And then Enron. We talked about Enron. We talked about Xerox. We talked about ImClone: Hey, we have bad news on the cancer drug. Sell, sell, sell. Find some sucker out there that does not have the information we have.

In America we love to compete, but in America we like to compete on a level playing field. Every executive that I mentioned this evening with these corporations did not want to compete on a level playing field. They did not want to come face-to-face where the odds were all the same, they wanted to compete where the odds were overwhelmingly in favor of them and not you, where the odds almost assured that you lost and they won.

The only way to even that playing field out is to clear out the dirt and put grass in there. Frankly, we have got a lot of dirt in some of these companies in these executive officers.

Let me tell the Members what my solution is. This is a little game. When we play the game of Monopoly, if you mess up, you go to jail, move directly to jail, do not collect. Do not collect. These chief executive officers of WorldCom or ImClone or Tyco or Xerox or Enron should not be able to collect on their way to jail. That is where they ought to be. They ought to be on their way to jail.

The justice system, I hope, will prevail here. I hope the Internal Revenue Service takes note of these individuals.

Have Members seen lately that the Internal Revenue Service announced they are going to begin random audits? So, watch out, some out there who are making $15,000 or $20,000 or $30,000 a year, they might be audited by the IRS. My question to the Internal Revenue Service, and I have not put it to them, but I intend to put it to the commissioner of Internal Revenue Service, okay, okay, how many of these people are you auditing? How many of these executive officers, these boards of directors are you auditing? If you are not auditing them, you ought to be, right now.

Now, unfortunately, it does not just stop here. We can continue. We can go with others. This is a cable TV company. They built their own golf course off shareholders' money. They loaned to their family. They started family companies with all their daughters and sons and their families off shareholders' money. Now that company, they are in bankruptcy or on the verge of bankruptcy. How many health care people lost their jobs as a result of this?

Where were the auditing companies? We know about Arthur Andersen. The trouble I have with the prosecution of Arthur Andersen, I know they went after them for obstruction of justice. They went after the company, they did not go after individuals. My suggestion, my humble suggestion to the Department of Justice, is to go after the individuals.

What happened in Andersen is we have now, successfully, Arthur Andersen for all realistic purposes is no longer in existence. Two years from now they will have closed all their books and they will be out of business. Lots of innocent people at Arthur Andersen lost their jobs, but the chief executive officers, and these accountants that dealt with this that were supposed to do the auditing probably have already found jobs with somebody else by now.

We need to go after people. We need to go after the individuals. We need to go after the crooks, because we have got to separate the crooks from the honest people. It has to happen.

Look at this. I mentioned earlier, Sunbeam Corporation. That seems to be about where it started. Global Crossing. Gary Winnick, that guy was paid $700 million or $800 million. They have also destroyed their documents, or admitted to destruction of documents, since they have been under Federal investigation.

My point here is that we have to come up with some solutions. We have to go after some of these companies. We have to go after the Arthur Andersen, the individuals that have fallen on their jobs and are not completing the responsibilities that they have.

I have some recommendations. I think there are some things that we can do.

Let me start out with the board of directors. I think it is imperative, I think it is imperative that we hold boards of directors responsible for the actions of a corporation. I think it is very important that boards of directors, that every corporation in America have, especially if it is a widely traded one, for example, the family farm, like my in-laws' family farm, it would be unreasonable to expect them, they do not have public shareholders, it is held by shares in the family, for them to go outside the farm and bring somebody that is not related to the farm to come in and help with the management.

But where we have a corporation that is widely traded, for example, where we have a Tyco Corporation, or where we have a Xerox or a K-Mart Corporation, that board of directors should consist not only of outside directors. And let me explain what I mean by outside directors. In a corporation, if one is employed, for example, let us take a look at WorldCom, if one is employed by WorldCom and is put on the WorldCom board of directors, then one is what is called an inside director. You are employed by the company and serve on the board.

In many cases, a board is healthy if we have some inside people. They are the people involved in day-to-day operations. So in rare circumstances, it is appropriate to have inside people on that board of directors, because they run the operations. So some of the executive officers probably should be on the board of directors.

But every corporate board that is widely traded with the public should also have outside directors who are not beholden to the president or the chief executive officer or the chief financial officer for their job; that they have a level of independence; that they can come into the boardroom and say, hey, Mr. Chief Executive Officer, hey, Mrs. Chief Executive Officer, tell me exactly what these books mean. Tell me what you are doing. I do not owe my job to you. You respond to the board of directors.

I think there has been a dramatic wake-up call across the country to boards of directors. I am sure that the board members of Enron Corporation, for example, WorldCom, and many of these other companies, K-Mart and so on, will find themselves in litigation for a long, long time as a result of their negligence. And frankly, it is justified. They need to be held accountable. If they accept that position, they must deliver the responsibilities that that position demands.

So that is one of my solutions, revamping boards of directors across this country.

We have to regulate auditors. We cannot allow auditors on one hand, or first of all, we should not allow them into offices. Auditors, not outside auditors, or not the inside auditors, and again, inside auditors are the people that the company employs, their accounting department. They make sure that they audit inside. But we have outside at-arm's-length auditors.

The first thing we should not allow to happen is allow them to office in the same offices. At Enron Corporation, Arthur Andersen shared offices with the people they are auditing. I mean, if one sits next to somebody, offices with somebody, they cannot over time help becoming buddies with them. It happens. So, one, they should not office together.

Two, they have to separate consulting services and auditing services.

The auditors should not be able to accept any gifts, should not office, should not offer any other services other than the fact they are in there to audit, just like in a bank.

I had an opportunity some time ago to visit with the president of some banks in Colorado, a very capable individual, a very capable individual. He explained to me exactly how the government, the FEC, or not the FEC, the banking regulators, exactly how they audit and when they come in. They cannot even offer a pencil to them. You cannot give them a pencil or buy them meals. You cannot buy meals or take the auditor out for lunch.

We cannot let them come in and share offices on a permanent basis. When they are in there auditing our banking system, they are not giving them consulting advice as well. They are an independent arm. Those auditors have a very isolated role. They are to go in there and make sure the books are not being cooked. That is what happens in our banks.

Many, many years ago we had a similar problem with our banks, so the government and the people of this country took an affirmative step. They said, look, we want independence in these auditors. That is what has happened. As a result of that, we have a very accurate picture of a bank's financial condition based on these audits.

That is what has to happen in corporate America. We need to regulate this auditing system. We need to get auditors that are good for the punch; that when the auditor comes out and says, this is what the corporation looks like, it is in fact what the corporation does look like.

Now, we have to have a stronger Securities and Exchange Commission, we have the FDIC, the Federal auditing and banking systems. I think we have a pretty good Justice Department, but I encourage the Justice Department to be very aggressive in its prosecution of these corporate thugs. But, on top of that, we have to have a strong Securities and Exchange Commission.

I find it interesting that in the last few days, a couple of Republicans and many Democrats have demanded the resignation of the head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who has not been in his job very long and certainly was not in his job at the time that most of this happened. Give him an opportunity.

I think, frankly, some of the fault rests with our appropriations. We have to get some cops down there in the SEC. The SEC has to be as aggressive with these corporate misbehaviors as retailers are with shoplifters. That is what is happening here, except these shoplifters are taking from the public in the amounts of tens and hundreds of millions of dollars.

So the SEC has to be stronger. My guess would be especially with the revelations that have occurred in the last week or so that we as a Congress will, in fact, grant more resources so that we can get our SEC cops in place and they can do the job they need to do. So we have to have a strong SEC. And we have got to have a coordinated effort between the Securities and Exchange Commission, which brings the civil litigation, and the Justice Department, which bring the criminal litigation.

If I were the Attorney General of this country, I would contact every U.S. Attorney in every district out there and I would say, go get them. If you have got corporate fraud in your district, in the jurisdiction that you have, go get them. We need to have a public display just like we do with shoplifting. We do not want shoplifting and we do not want corporate thugs taking money from the public, and we have got to go after them, but that requires coordination.

I am a little more encouraged than some of my friends about the ability of the Justice Department and the SEC on their coordinated efforts, but I do think they need more resources, and I think it is incumbent upon us to get those resources for them.

I also want to talk about the compensation package. The compensation package, how can you justify compensation to the president of the corporation, not to the person that invented the better mouse trap, but to the treasurer, in fact, the chief financial officer. How can you justify compensation that allows a 40-year-old person who is the treasurer of the company to build a $15, $20 million home just like this and to walk away with bonuses in the hundreds of millions of dollars? You cannot do it. We have got to adjust the compensation system.

Now, look, we have got to be careful about that. I will tell you, if you told me somebody invented the cure for cancer or the cure for the common cold or a better way to educate our kids in a manner such that we really get the top quality product, who cares if they live like this? You show me the person who can figure out the cure for cancer, for breast cancer, I think that is great. Where it is deserving, where you are getting a square deal, that is okay. But these were not gained through arm's length transactions, through innovation, other than innovation in a criminal fashion, as I have mentioned earlier. These are ill-gotten gains. That is what has happened here. That house was built, in my opinion, by ill-gotten gains, by a 40-year-old person who cared more about his own greed than he did the company which employed him and expected him to carry out his fiduciary duties for the owners of that company which, of course, are the shareholders of that company.

Executive compensation has got to be revamped. I do not care how good of an executive you are, I do not care how fine a company you run, it troubles me that any company in the world would pay you $700-some-million dollars, which I think the head of Oracle or one of the corporations out there just paid their chief executive officer, I think it was $700 million in the last year or two. That includes stock options, I understand that, but, I mean, that kind of compensation is just out of line. We pay the President of the United States a fraction of that.

And not only that, take a look at the retirement package. I have an article here out of Business Week, July 15. This is the newest Business Week. Not only do some of these corporate executives, they rake in the cash while they are running the company at the expense of public shareholders, take a look at their retirement packages. How many people do you think at WorldCom, that got fired at WorldCom got compensation packages? It is the same thing. We can talk about Global Crossing. We can talk about Kmart. We can talk about Conseco, Sunbeam, any number of these. Take a look at what their employees got when they got laid off as a result of this corporate mismanagement.

But let me tell you what happens at some of these corporations and why compensation needs to be readjusted. This is Philip Morris. At Philip Morris, the retired chief executive officer gets for life, gets for life, this guy's name is Jeffrey Bible, this is what his retirement package is from Philip Morris Corporation for as long as he lives, and occasionally for this he needs to be available to consult, which means nothing, but for as long as he lives, he gets an office near his home and that would include a secretary. Remember, he is no longer working for the company. He has retired from the company. By the way, he was not underpaid. His last year with the company, they paid him $50 million. He is now a retired corporate executive. This is what he gets: An office near his home, including a secretary; an unlimited phone calling card; two cellular telephones; two fax machines, plus the cost of the maintenance; security at his home and security for his vacation home.

So the shareholders of this company will pay the former president of the company security money to make sure his home is secure and his vacation home is secure. Access to the corporate jet. Any time he wants, he can call up on the phone, Mr. Bible can, and say, I want the corporate jet and they take him anywhere he wants around the world. Access to the dining room. Access to the gym. A company car and driver for the rest of his life. And if he does not want the car and driver, they will pay him $100,000 a year. So he can go out and spend $100,000 a year on the car he needs. And $15,000 a year for somebody to give him financial advice.

So if he needs financial advice from his tax accountant, the company will pay him $15,000.

That retirement package comes right out of the pockets of the consumer and right out of the pockets of the shareholders. Just like this house built on ill-gotten gains down in Florida as a result of Scott Sullivan and WorldCom Corporation, it is the same thing. That is where that money is coming from.

I applaud the President today. The President came out and I think in very strong terms has set the direction for the House and the Senate to follow, that if we do not have the laws in place, and, by the way, we have a lot of laws in place today, there is a lot we can do today by simply enforcing the laws that are already in existence. I am not convinced we need a whole lot more new laws as far as the criminal behavior is concerned. What we need are more resources out there to these agencies to enforce the laws that exist.

So the President today made it very clear, and I think it would be to our benefit in both the House and the other side, in the Senate, to follow this lead. And this week I hope we can accomplish with some strong firm legislation an enforcement of a policy in this country that makes your punishment from stealing from the shareholders, from stealing from the public, for misappropriating, from lying on your accounting, from cooking the books, makes those offenses much more serious consequences than you would face if you went out and shoplifted a candy bar from the local retail store.

Our business system in this country depends on integrity. Now we know that not everybody is going to be honest. It cannot happen. Any time you get a group of people together, you will have a bad apple. It is the same thing in Congress. It happened in the Catholic priesthood. It has happened in the corporate world. So we have to build in, we have to anticipate that you will have a crooked corporate executive here and there. But the key to it is not to pretend that it is not going to happen or to depend totally on honesty. Our society has never totally depended on honesty. We have always had law. It is to put the laws in place. It is not just to put the laws in place. It is to enforce the laws that you have in place.

Let me conclude by saying this, I hope that we give the support to the President that he has asked; that we give the resources to the Securities and Exchange Commission that they need to police this problem; that we crack down hard on corporate governance; that we crack down hard on the auditing and audit oversight for companies like Arthur Andersen. And, by the way, the five major auditing firms in this country, all of them have been named in some of these transactions. It is clearly a mess out there that can be cleaned up. It has to be cleaned up.

Do not let us forget that what is being highlighted here, and appropriately. I think we need to focus a lot of attention on it, but sometimes when we focus all our attention on the misdeeds by a few, it tars everybody else. I mean, look at the Catholic priesthood. You get a few bad priests and all priests out there are being tarnished unfairly. Let me say we have people out there who do run ethical business. We have people that deliver good products. We have people that care about their shareholders. We have people that are responsible to their board of directors and we have boards of directors that are responsible to the people that they represent and we have a lot of good workers out there. That is what has made the American system great and the American system will stay great as long as we jump on top of people who have committed misdeeds.

SENATE—Monday, July 8, 2002

The Senate met at 2 p.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Gracious, liberating God, who has created us as free women and men to love You and serve You by working to assure the personal, spiritual, religious, political, and economic freedom of all people, today we celebrate the anniversary of the first public reading of the Declaration of Independence by Colonel John Nixon, and the ringing of the Liberty Bell. We remember the words of Leviticus 25:10 inscribed on the bell: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto the inhabitants thereof." We seek to do that today. You have revealed to us Your mandate that all Your people should be free to worship You. Help us to maintain this strong fabric of our Republic. You have placed a liberty bell in all our hearts that rings this afternoon calling us on in the battle for justice, righteousness, and freedom for all Americans and, through our world mission, for the world. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—H.R. 4231

Mr. REID. It is my understanding H.R. 4231 is at the desk and due for its second reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. I ask that H.R. 4231 be read for a second time, and I would then object to any further proceedings on this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the title of the bill for the second time.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4231) to improve small business advocacy, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been heard, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 2673, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2673) to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland, Mr. SARBANES, the manager of the bill, is recognized.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, today the Senate turns its attention to S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, which was reported from the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs on June 18 on a strong 17-to-4 vote.

A unanimous consent agreement was entered into with respect to this legislation prior to the Fourth of July recess, which provided that at 2 p.m. today, Monday, July 8, the Senate would proceed, for debate only, to the consideration of this legislation.

I hope to take a fair amount of time to set out the process through which the committee worked and to discuss the provisions of this legislation.

As I understand it, upon convening tomorrow and going back to this legislation, amendments will be in order. There are a couple of technical amendments that I am hopeful we can approve today by unanimous consent. I will be discussing that with the distinguished ranking Republican member of the committee in the course of the afternoon.

Mr. President, I rise in very strong support of this legislation. This legislation is intended to address systemic and structural weaknesses that I think have been revealed in recent months and that show failures of audit effectiveness and a breakdown in corporate financial and broker-dealer responsibility. In fact, it is very clear that much of this has been happening over the last few years.

Hopefully, we have experienced the brunt of it. Who can guarantee that, however, when every day you come to read in the morning paper yet another story, as witnessed this morning with respect to one of the most respected pharmaceutical companies in the country.

I believe this bill is urgently needed. I hope my colleagues will agree with that and will support its swift passage.

The House, earlier this year, passed legislation on this subject, but I think it is fair to say that the legislation we are bringing to the floor of the Senate is more comprehensive, more thorough, and, I believe, more effective. But, of course, once we complete our work here, we will have the challenge of going to conference with our colleagues on the other side of the Capitol to work out the differences between the two versions of the legislation.

Let me discuss for a few minutes the backdrop against which this bill was crafted. Our financial markets have long been regarded as the fairest, the most transparent, and the most efficient in the world. In fact, I think it is fair to say—and many of us have said it time and time again—that the American capital markets are one of the great economic assets of this country and a very important source of our economic strength.

It is becoming increasingly clear that something has gone wrong, seriously wrong, with respect to our capital markets. We confront an increasing crisis of confidence that is eroding the public's trust in those markets. I frankly believe that, if it continues, this erosion of trust poses a real threat to our economic health.

Let me begin with one of the most obvious symptoms of this problem: the extraordinary increase in restatements of corporate earnings. The Wall Street Journal, citing a study last year by the research arm of Financial Executives International, the organization of the chief financial officers of corporations, reported that there were 157 financial restatements by companies in 2000, 207 in 1999, and 100 in 1998. The 3-year total of 464 was higher than the previous 10 years combined, during which the average number of restatements was 46 each year. This is a dramatic increase in the number of restatements.

Last month's revelation by WorldCom is only one example of a problem that is becoming increasingly disturbing. In a recent article titled "Tweaking Numbers To Meet Goals Comes Back To Haunt Executives," the New York Times described a series of recent corporate failures or near-failures that were characterized by accounting improprieties: Adelphia Communications, "$3 billion in loans to its founding family" had been concealed; Computer Associates was investigated "on suspicion of inflating sales and profits by booking revenue on contracts many years before it was paid"—you raise your revenues, there is no offsetting cost, you boost your profits. Global Crossing is being investigated "on suspicion of inflating sales and profits by making sham transactions with other telecom companies"; Enron, "hiding losses and loans with partnerships that were supposedly independent but were actually guaranteed by the company"—Enron filed for bankruptcy last December—Rite Aid had "four former top executives indicted . . . in what regulators called a securities and accounting fraud that led to a $1.6 billion restatement of earnings"; Tyco International is under investigation "on suspicion of hiding payments and loans to its top executives . . . and its 'shares have plunged 75 percent this year as investigators question whether it inflated its earnings and cashflow'; WorldCom, under investigation for "hiding $4 billion in expenses by wrongly classifying short-term costs as long-term investments."

Commentators have made much of the fact that while Enron had very complicated dealings, off-balance-sheet special entities and a host of other things, WorldCom simply took expenses that should have been treated as short-term costs and set them up as capital investments to be amortized over a period of time. Of course, that was a very substantial reduction in WorldCom's costs. As a consequence, its profits were boosted by $4 billion. The SEC asked them to come clean, and now we think there is probably another billion of faulty accounting with respect to their statement.

Can you imagine—the company went from showing a substantial profit to actually having a loss. People are out in the marketplace making decisions about whether to purchase this stock. Pension plans are making decisions on behalf of their members. And they are making the decision in the belief that this company is making a good profit. Instead, it is losing money.

I read one story where competitors of WorldCom were apparently debating within their own corporate ranks: How do they do it? How are these people producing this profit record? We can't do it. We are competing against them.

We think we are doing everything we ought to be doing, and we just can't produce the same kind of performance. How are they doing it? What is the secret they have discovered?

The secret they had discovered was to hide their expenses by wrongly classifying short-term costs as long-term investments.

The Xerox Corporation, one of the pillars of our economic system, paid a $10 million fine to the SEC in April, the largest in an enforcement case. They reclassified $6.4 billion in revenue and restated financial results for the last 5 years. I could go on and on with other companies: Cendant, MicroStrategy, Waste Management.

What has led to this increase in restatements? The practice of "backing into" the forecast earnings has certainly contributed. The New York Times described this practice as follows:

Some companies do whatever they have to do to make sure they do not miss a consensus earnings estimate. They start with the profit that investors are expecting and manipulate their sales and expenses to make sure the numbers come out right. During the last decade's boom, as executive pay was increasingly based on how the company's stock performed, backing in became more widespread and more aggressive. Just how much so is only now becoming clear.

The distinguished Columbia Law School Professor John Coffee, noted, in summarizing the trend:

During the 1990s, the quality of financial reporting and analysis appears to have declined. While an earnings restatement is not necessarily proof of fraud, this increase strongly implies that auditors have deferred excessively to their clients.

Jack Ehnes, the chief executive of the California State Teachers Retirement System, which oversees $100 billion in investments, put it this way:

This looks like the year of the restatement. It's certainly disturbing for investors who expect financial statements to be accurate.

Clearly, what is transpiring is having a very severe impact on hard-working American families. Corporate wrongdoing is being felt not just at the boardroom table, but it is now being felt at the kitchen table as well.

First of all, there have been tremendous job losses. The Washington Post reported that WorldCom was laying off 17,000 employees. The companies that are going into bankruptcy are shedding employees left and right. Enron laid off 7,000 people after it filed for bankruptcy. Global Crossing laid off 9,300 employees in the last year. Employment at Xerox is down 13,000 from 2 years ago. So there is a direct impact on many working families, simply through the layoffs, as the companies for which they work encounter difficult financial times.

In other words, the company is crashing down, and the workers, amongst others, are paying the price.

Second, the adverse impact on employees clearly extends to the impact of these corporate failures on employee pension funds, an impact that has led many workers to question the security of their retirement. A quick look at the numbers demonstrates how badly public pension funds have been hit.

It is reported that 21 States have combined losses of just under $2 billion from their WorldCom investments. The California public retirement system reported a loss of $565 million. And the numbers go on from there. I won't cite them all, but all across the country there are tremendous losses being incurred. It is said that the loss of value of both WorldCom and Enron has cost public State pension funds $2.7 billion.

Of course, in addition to their impact on workers and pension funds, these revelations have had a negative effect on shareholders generally. Average investors are watching their portfolios plummet and their retirement prospects decline. WorldCom's market capitalization has gone from $180 billion at its peak 3 years ago—this is just WorldCom—to $177 million last week. Tyco lost $90 billion in market capitalization between January 2001 and June 2002, and on and on.

The bond markets have also been affected. WorldCom, for example, has $28 billion in outstanding bonds that are due between now and 2025. Investors, including banks and insurance companies, stand to lose much of this sum. So you are being hit not only if you have a direct connection with WorldCom, but also if you have an equity interest in a bank or insurance company that owns WorldCom bonds. The current market value of these bonds is 15 cents on the dollar.

The same week that WorldCom's auditing irregularities became public, Morgan Stanley observed that the spread between corporate bonds and comparable Treasury bonds had widened by 15 basis points. As the Wall Street Journal wrote on June 27:

That is a dramatic move that will boost the borrowing costs for all kinds of companies.

Now, the problems that I have described did not develop overnight. In many ways, they reflect failures on the part of every actor in our system of disclosure and oversight. Auditors who are supposed to be independent of the company whose books they are reviewing are too often compromised by the fact that they provide consulting services to their public company audit clients. Securities analysts are not in a position, according to observers, to warn investors or direct them to other investments.

As the New York Times reported in an article earlier this year entitled "A Bubble No One Wanted to Pop":

Eager to help their firms generate business selling securities to investors and reap their own rewards and bonuses, Wall Street analysts have made a habit of missing corporate misdeeds altogether.

I will come back to these issues later. But for the moment I simply want to note that the problems leading to such dramatic lapses are widespread and seem to be built into the system of accounting and financial reporting. That is what this legislation seeks to address. Our committee did not engage in an exercise in finger-pointing and placing blame but we held a series of hearings—I will discuss them in a minute—directed toward the future; in other words, we focused on the changes we can make that will help to clear up this situation. It is serious.

The Wall Street Journal, in a recent comment, said:

The scope and scale of the corporate transgressions of the late 1990s now coming to light exceed anything the U.S. has witnessed since the years preceding the Great Depression.

One can run through the figures and find some support for that. Between its peak in 1929 and 1931, the Dow fell 79 percent. Over the same period since its peak in March 2000, the Nasdaq has fallen 73 percent. But rather than work through these figures, let me simply close this part of my statement with a comment from Benjamin Graham's classic textbook on "security analysis":

Prior to the SEC legislation . . . it was by no means unusual to encounter semi-fraudulent distortions of corporate accounts . . . almost always for the purpose of making the results look better than they were, and it was generally associated with some scheme of stock-market manipulation in which the management was participating.

He was writing about the year 1929. Regrettably, that description fits some of today's events. Now, I am certainly not suggesting that this is the practice of a majority of our business people. In fact, most of them, I think, try very hard to play by the rules, and to be honest and straightforward in their dealings, and they recognize how important trust is.

But it is clear, from the number of departures we have witnessed from that standard, that what is involved is more than just a few bad apples. Those bad apples ought to be punished, and punished very severely. I certainly agree with the President when he makes that statement. But it seems to me we have to move beyond that in order to address the incredible loss of investor confidence that is now taking place.

I have been reading the newspaper articles carefully, and sometimes the most apt comments come not from the experts but from ordinary citizens. My colleague from Texas knows that very well because we have a noted citizen of his State, Dicky Flatt, who is constantly cited.

Karl Graf, a financial planner and accountant in Wayne, NJ, is quoted in the Bergen Record as saying:

The integrity of the game is in question for now, and that's a much bigger thing than if the stock market does poorly for two years. You have to have faith in the numbers the companies are reporting, and if you don't or can't, it makes it seem more like gambling all the time. It makes me more cynical, and I'm very discouraged. It's going to take a lot to make people feel confident.

Bob Friend, an aerospace engineer from Redondo Beach, CA, a stock investor for 20 years, was quoted in the L.A. Times as saying:

There's a complete lack of trust in corporate leadership. I think the lack of ethical behavior has destroyed investor confidence.

Morris Hollander, a specialist in financial disclosure accounting with a Miami firm, was quoted in the Miami Herald as saying:

We always had the strongest financial markets in the world, and that was because of credible accounting standards. When you see that confidence eroding, it is not good. It is a real serious credibility crisis.

A recent poll demonstrates that these views are not unique or unusual. When asked this question: "when it comes to financial information the major stock brokerage firms and corporations provide to you, do you or do you not have confidence that the information is straightforward and an honest analysis," only 29 percent of Americans said they had confidence the information was straightforward and an honest analysis. A majority, 57 percent, did not have confidence in the basic information that undergirds our equities market.

The Washington Post, on June 26, reported:

According to economists and market analysts, these still-unfolding corporate and accounting scandals have begun to weigh heavily on the stock market, the dollar, and the U.S. economy. And the effects are likely to linger at least through the end of the year.

The same article quoted the chief economist for one of Wall Street's major firms as saying:

The economy and markets right now are in the midst of a full-blown corporate governance shock. . . . To presume somehow that it's over or that the worst is behind us is naive.

Furthermore, it is not only American investors who are losing confidence in our markets. A recent New York Times article entitled "U.S. Businesses Dim as Models for Foreigners" quoted Wolfram Gerdes, the chief investment officer for global equities at Dresdner Investment Trust in Frankfurt, as saying:

There is unanimous agreement that the United States is not the best place to invest anymore.

According to the Federal Reserve Board, foreign direct investment in corporate equities has fallen by 45 percent from 2001 to 2002. And according to a new OECD report, foreign inflows from cross-border mergers and acquisitions, which in 2001 were greater than direct foreign investment into the United States, have fallen sharply in 2002.

The Wall Street Journal said:

The loss of faith by American and overseas investors in U.S. corporate books is churning global financial markets: Share prices are plunging in America and the dollar is losing value, setting off stock-market plunges in Asia, Europe and Latin America. If the flow of foreign capital to the United States is disrupted as a result, the world economy could be jeopardized, because the U.S. relies on overseas money to finance its huge current-account deficit, and Asia and Europe rely on America to buy imports.

As I draw this preliminary overview of the context in which we are working to a close, I want to speak for a moment about the potential loss of world economic leadership for the United States. The Wall Street Journal had an article entitled "U.S. Loses Sparkle as Icon of Marketplace." It says:

The wave of scandals in corporate America is roiling world stock markets. But the controversy may have an even greater impact in the marketplace of ideas, where the U.S. economic model is coming under attack.

One area of particular importance and now debate is adoption of accounting principles. The European Union—and I do not think many people yet in this country have focused on this matter—has indicated that the rules adopted by the International Accounting Standards Board will become mandatory for all companies throughout the European Union in 2005.

Traditionally, the U.S. has been preeminent in the accounting field. We have by far the largest economy. We have a reputation for high standards for transparency. So generally the American argument on behalf of its standards carried great influence. Now we have the European Union, comparable in economic size to the United States, moving to adopt a uniform set of accounting standards, to be promulgated by the International Accounting Standards Board, for all of the European Union countries. So there is a potential for real challenge to American preeminence in this area, given what is happening over here.

In fact, the New York Times reported on June 27:

There is a groundswell among executives in Europe against the American system of corporate accounting—the so-called generally accepted accounting principles—that was supposed to be the gold standard in disclosure.

Before Enron, Global Crossing and WorldCom, America had been winning the argument on accounting standards. But now, a growing number of Europeans are convinced that the American system is both too complex and too easy to manipulate.

Regrettably, in my view, unless we come to grips with this current crisis in accounting and corporate governance, we run the risk of seriously undermining our long-term world economic leadership. Why do countries look to us? They look to our capital markets. They say: your capital markets are the most transparent; they have the greatest integrity; we can rely upon them; we can make rational business decisions using the information that is provided through your system. If that is no longer the case, we can expect growing difficulties as we continue to argue for our preeminence.

The Wall Street Journal gave this summary of the problem, after which I will move onto the bill itself:

The institutions that were created to check such abuses failed. The remnants of a professional ethos in accounting, law and securities analysis gave way to the maximum revenue per partner. The auditor's signature on a corporate report didn't testify that the report was an accurate snapshot, said [Treasury Secretary Paul] O'Neill. He says it too often meant only that a company had "cooked the books to generally accepted standards."

I want to be very clear about this. I believe the vast majority of our business leaders and of those in the accounting industry are decent, hard-working, and honorable men and women. They are, in a sense, tarnished by the burden of these scandals. But trust in markets and in the quality of investor protection, once shaken, is not easily restored, and I believe that this body must act decisively to reaffirm the standards of honesty and industry that have made the American economy the most powerful in the world. That is what this legislation does, and that is why I urge its adoption by my colleagues.

Let me now turn to the hearings and to the bill. I know others are waiting to speak, and I will try to summarize my remarks. We have been working on this for a long time, so obviously I could go on at some length.

First, we sought to do a very thorough and careful job in developing this legislation. The committee held a total of 10 substantive hearings and heard from a broad range of experts, as well as interested parties. I am not going to name all our witnesses, but, for example, we heard from five past Chairmen of the SEC; three former SEC chief accountants; former Federal Reserve Board Chairman, Paul Volcker; former Comptroller General and chairman of the Public Oversight Board, Charles Bowsher; the present Comptroller General, David Walker; a number of distinguished academics who have been studying these issues throughout their careers; leaders of commissions that studied the accounting industry and corporate governance; representatives of the accounting industry; representatives of the public interest community; representatives of the corporate community, and SEC Chairman Pitt.

It was a very thorough effort to gather the best thinking on these issues and to give all interested parties a chance to be heard. My colleagues on the committee, and the ranking member, Senator GRAMM, participated in this effort seriously and with commitment. Senators DODD and CORZINE early on introduced a bill dealing with oversight of accounting and auditor independence. Many of that bill's provisions are reflected in this legislation. Senator ENZI, of course, took a particular interest. He is the only certified public accountant in the Senate. Many other Members made important contributions as we moved along the way.

I will now turn to each title. Title I of the bill creates a strong independent board to oversee the auditors of public companies. Title II strengthens auditor independence from corporate management by limiting the scope of consulting services that auditors can offer their public company audit clients. This bill applies only to public companies that are required to report to the SEC. It says plainly that State regulatory authorities should make independent determinations of the proper standards and should not presume that the bill's standards apply to small- and medium-sized accounting firms that do not audit public companies.

Titles III and IV of the bill enhance the responsibility of public company directors and senior managers for the quality of the financial reporting and disclosure made by their companies. Title V seeks to limit and expose to public view possible conflicts of interest affecting securities analysts. Title VI increases the SEC's annual authorization from $481 million to $776 million and extends the SEC's enforcement authority. Title VII of the bill mandates studies of accounting firm concentration and the role of credit rating agencies.

It is my intention to go through the bill title by title in a summary fashion, but I will pause for a moment and ask my colleague whether he has any time pressures.

Mr. GRAMM. I don't have a time preference as such. My suggestion is whenever the Senator gets tired of talking and would like me to speak a while, I can speak, and then he can come back to it. But I have no objection if you want to go through your whole presentation. You certainly have that right. If you think it will work better doing it that way, that is fine. If you want to break at some point and have me speak, that would be fine.

Mr. SARBANES. Why don't I move ahead, and I will try to compress it a bit.

Title I creates a public company accounting oversight board. This board is subject to SEC review and will establish auditing, quality control, ethics, and independence standards for public company auditors and will inspect accounting firms that conduct those audits. It will investigate potential violations of applicable rules and impose sanctions if those violations are established.

Heretofore we have relied on self-policing of the audit process, private auditing and accounting standards setting, and, for the most part, private disciplinary measures. But questionable accounting practices and corporate failures have raised serious questions, obviously, about this private oversight system. Paul Volcker stated:

Over the years there have also been repeated efforts to provide oversight by industry or industry/public member boards. By and large, I think we have to conclude that those efforts at self-regulation have been unsatisfactory.

That is obviously one of the reasons we are moving, in this legislation, to an independent public company accounting oversight board. We heard extensive testimony in favor of such a board.

The board would have five full-time members. Two of the members will have an accounting background. All will have to have a demonstrated commitment to the interests of investors, as well as an understanding of the financial disclosures required by our securities law. The board members would be appointed by the SEC after consultation with the Federal Reserve and the Department of the Treasury and would serve staggered 5-year terms. They could not engage in other business while they were doing this work.

Of course, the board will have a staff. We would expect staff salaries to be fully competitive with comparable private-sector positions in order to ensure a high-quality staff.

The bill requires that accounting firms that audit public companies must register with the board. Failure to register or loss of registration would render a firm unable to continue its public company audit practice. Upon registering, a company would consent to comply with requests by the board for documents or testimony made in the course of the board's operations.

The board would possess plenary authority to establish or adopt auditing, quality control, ethics, and independence standards for the auditing of public companies. But this grant of authority is not intended to exclude accountants or other interested parties from participating in the standard-setting process. So the board may adopt rules that are proposed by professional groups of accountants or by one or more advisory groups created by the board.

These provisions reflect an effort to respond to the argument that you need the experts to either set the standards or help to set the standards. The experts in the industry can make these proposals, but the board will have the authority to adopt or to modify such proposals or to act of its own volition.

We provide for the inspection of registered accounting firms by the board. Firms that audit more than 100 public companies are to be inspected by staff of the board each year. Firms that audit less than that are inspected every 3 years, although the board has the power to adjust these inspection schedules.

The board also has investigative and disciplinary authority. Former SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt told the committee:

We need a truly independent oversight body that has the power not only to set the standards by which audits are performed but also to conduct timely investigations that cannot be deferred for any reason and to discipline accountants.

If the board finds that a registered firm, or one or more of its associated persons, has violated the rules or standards, it will have the full range of sanctions available.

The board also has the power to sanction a registered accounting firm for failure reasonably to supervise a partner or employee, but we allow an accounting firm to defend itself from any supervisory liability by showing that its quality control and related internal procedures were reasonable and were operating fully in the situation at issue. I am mentioning this item, even though it may not seem that important in the context of a bill this complex, to point again to the effort that was made in the committee to balance competing concerns.

In effect, we say the firms have this supervisory responsibility. They should not duck this responsibility. Otherwise, how are we going to assure the people working for accounting firms are meeting high standards? On the other hand, we realize it is extremely difficult in large organizations to control right down to the last person. So we provided that if accounting firms have quality control and related internal procedures in place that are reasonable and that are operating fully, the operation of those procedures can serve as a defense.

The bill applies to foreign public accounting firms that audit financial statements of companies that come under the U.S. securities laws. The board is subject to SEC oversight, which is important. Finally, we formalize the role of the Financial Accounting Standards Board in setting accounting standards accounting standards are different than auditing standards, which the new oversight board will set. The bill provides for guaranteed funding of the new oversight board and the FASB by public companies, something I think we all agree is extremely important.

Some have asked, why do we need a statutory board? Why not let the SEC do something of this sort by regulation? But others have raised questions about the adequacy of the authority the SEC has to accomplish all of this by regulation alone. Clearly, a firmer base would be established, a stronger reference point, if the board were established by statute, and the potential of litigation that might arise with respect to some of these disciplinary and fee-imposing powers if they were created solely by the SEC by regulation would be avoided by a clear statutory underpinning.

Furthermore, I believe, frankly, that we need to establish this oversight board in statute in order to provide an extra guarantee of its independence and its plenary authority to deal with this important situation.

Let me turn to title II on auditor independence. This is a very important issue. Each of the country's Federal securities laws requires comprehensive financial statements. That is what is now required under the securities laws for public companies. They have to have comprehensive financial statements that must be prepared—and I now quote from the statute—"by an independent public or certified accountant."

The statutory requirement of an independent audit has two sides to it. It is a private franchise, and it is also a public trust.

The franchise given to the Nation's public accountants is clear. Their services must be secured before an issuer of securities can go to market, have its securities listed on the Nation's stock exchanges, or comply with the reporting requirements of the securities law. In other words, the accountants have been handed by mandate a major piece of business because the statute says to these public companies that they must have comprehensive financial statements prepared by an independent public or certified accountant.

So in effect we have directed to them a significant amount of business. But the franchise, in a way, is conditional. It comes in return for the certified public accountant's assumption of a public duty and obligation.

The Supreme Court stated this well in a decision almost 20 years ago:

In certifying the public reports that collectively depict a corporation's financial status, the independent auditor assumes a public responsibility. . . . [That auditor] owes ultimate allegiance to the corporation's creditors and stockholders, as well as to the investing public. This public watchdog function demands that the accountant maintain total independence from the client at all times and requires complete fidelity to the public trust.

Richard Breeden, former chairman of the SEC from 1989 to 1993, under the previous President Bush, said in his testimony before the committee:

While companies in the U.S. do not have to employ a law firm, an underwriter, or other types of professionals, Federal law requires a publicly-traded company to hire an independent accounting firm to perform an annual audit. In addition to this shared Federal monopoly, more than 100 million investors in the U.S. depend on audited financial statements to make investment decisions. That imbues accounting firms with a high level of public trust, and also explains why there is a strong Federal interest in how well the accounting system functions.

What has happened in recent years is that a rapid growth in management consulting services offered by the major accounting firms has created a conflict in the independence that an auditor must bring to the audit function. According to the SEC, in 1988, 55 percent of the average revenue of the big five accounting firms came from accounting and auditing services; 22 percent came from management consulting services.

By 1999, 10 years later, these figures had fallen to 31 percent for accounting and auditing services, and 50 percent for management consulting services.

In fact, a number of experts argue that the growth in the non-audit consulting business done by the large accounting firms for their audit clients has so compromised the independence of audits that a complete prohibition on the provision of consulting services by accounting firms to their public audit clients is required—a complete prohibition. According to James E. Burton, the CEO of the California Public Employees' Retirement System, CalPERS, which manages pension and health benefits for more than 1.3 million members and has aggregate holdings of $150 billion:

The inherent conflicts created when an external auditor is simultaneously receiving fees from a company for non-audit work cannot be remedied by anything less than a bright line ban. An accounting firm should be an auditor or a consultant, but not both to the same client.

John Biggs, CEO of Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association—College Retirement Equities Fund, TIAA-CREF, the largest private pension system in the world, which manages approximately $275 billion in pension assets for over 2 million participants in the education and research communities, told the Committee:

Because auditors owe their primary duty to the shareholders, questions about the primacy of that duty are raised if the audit firm provides other, potentially more lucrative, consulting services to the company. The board and the public auditor should both see to it that, in fact as well as in appearance, the auditor reports to the independent board audit committee and acts on behalf of shareholders. The key reason why awarding consulting contracts and other non-audit work to the audit firm is troubling is because it results in conflicting loyalties. While the board's audit committee is formally responsible for hiring and firing the outside auditor, management controls virtually all the other types of non-audit work the audit firm may do for the company. Those contracts with management blur the reporting relationship it is difficult to believe that auditors do not feel pressure for the overall success of their firm with the client. Even their own compensation packages may be tied to consulting and non-audit services being provided by their firm to the company. . . .

By requiring public companies to use different accounting firms for their audit and consulting services, and by establishing an independent board with real authority to oversee the accounting profession you will be taking important steps toward reversing the crisis in confidence in financial markets that exists today.

We looked at this carefully. We had testimony on the other side. In the end, we took the approach that is outlined in the bill. The bill contains a short list, nine items, of non-audit services that an accounting firm doing the audit of a public company cannot provide to that company. These include, for example, bookkeeping or other services related to the accounting records or financial statements of the audit client, financial information systems design, appraisal or valuation services, actuarial services, management functions or human resources, broker or dealer or investment adviser services, and legal services.

The thinking behind drawing this line around a limited list of non-audit services, is that provision of those services to a public company audit client creates a fundamental conflict of interest for the accounting firm in carrying out its audit responsibility. If the accounting firm is not the auditor for the company, it can do any of these consulting services—it can do any consulting service it wants. But if it is the auditor—so there is a conflict of interest problem—then we take certain services and say: those services you can't do. And the reason is, first of all, in order to be independent, the auditor should not audit its own work, as it would do if it did financial information system design or appraisal evaluation services or actuarial services. It should not function as part of the management or as an employee of the audit company, as it would if it were doing human resources services, and it should not act as an advocate of the audit client, as it would do if it were providing legal and expert services. Nor should it be the promoter of the audit client's stock or other financial interest, as it would be if it were the broker-dealer or the investment adviser.

They are the public company's auditors. They have a very defined responsibility as the auditors. The bill doesn't bar accounting firms from offering consulting services. It simply says that if a firm wants to audit the company, there are certain services it cannot perform. And even in that case, the bill provides the board authority to grant case-by-case exceptions, so if a case could be made why an auditor's performing a consulting service ought to be permitted, there is some flexibility to permit it.

David Walker, the Comptroller General of the United States, in a statement on June 18 said:

I believe that legislation that will provide a framework and guidance for the SEC to use in setting independence standards for public company audits is needed. History has shown that the AICPA and the SEC have failed to update their independence standards in a timely fashion and that past updates have not adequately protected the public's interests. In addition, the accounting profession has placed too much emphasis on growing non-audit fees and not enough emphasis on modernizing the auditing profession for the 21st century environment. Congress is the proper body to promulgate a framework [on this important issue].

There are a lot of other auditing services, other than the nine I mentioned, that an auditor may want to provide and whose provision we did not preclude. In other words, the statutory system that we are establishing lists certain consulting services that, if you are the auditor, you cannot perform for the public company that is your audit client, unless you can get one of these case-by-case exemptions from the board. And those consulting services were the ones which, upon examination, seemed clearly to raise the most difficult conflict of interest questions that could result in undermining the auditor's fulfillment of his auditing responsibility.

The public company auditor can provide other non-audit services; that is, any but those on the proscribed list, if it clears them with the audit committee of the public company's board of directors. We seek to strengthen the audit committee in very substantial ways, including, as I will mention later, that they should be the ones to hire and fire the auditors—that the auditors really work through the audit committee for the board of directors and that the auditors do not work for the management. I think it is very clear, to some extent, and in some instances, it is management working with the auditors that have done these clever schemes for which we are now paying the price.

We had the issue of auditor rotation before us. Many witnesses thought the audit firm itself should have to rotate every 5 years, periodically. We did not go that far. We recommend here that the lead partner and the review partner on audits must rotate every 5 years—not the audit firm itself. But we do provide that audit firm rotation should be further studied and direct the General Accounting Office to undertake such a study with respect to the mandatory rotation of the audit firm.

I will move more quickly and skip over some sections, but I can always, of course, come back to them if there are any questions.

We were concerned about the movement of personnel from audit firms to the public company audit clients. There we put a 1-year cooling off period with respect to the top positions in the company, so that you can't hold out to the audit team the immediate prospect of an important position in the company. Again, we are trying to protect the independence of the audit.

The next two titles, III and IV, deal with corporate responsibility and enhanced financial disclosure. As I said, we provide for a strong public company audit committee that would be directly responsible for the appointment, compensation, and oversight of the work of the public company auditors, which makes it clear that the primary duty of the auditors is to the public company's board of directors and the investing public, and not to the managers. We provide that the audit committee members must be independent from company management.

We require that the audit committee develop procedures for addressing complaints concerning auditing issues and also that they put in place procedures for employee whistleblowers to submit their concerns regarding accounting.

Where does an employee go when he sees a problem and is fearful of taking it up with management because his perception is that management is involved with the problem? We specifically provide that they should be protected in going to the audit committee.

We have a provision prohibiting the coercion of auditors. Some have asserted that officers and directors have sought to coerce their auditors or to fraudulently influence them to provide misleading information. Obviously, the auditors ought to be protected from that as well.

We have a provision that the CEO and the CFO who make large profits by selling company stock or receiving company bonuses while management is misleading the public about the financial health of the company would have to forfeit their profits and bonuses realized after the publication of a misleading report.

We also address the question of remedies against officers and directors who violate securities laws, something in which the SEC is very interested.

We have a provision on insider trades during pension fund blackout periods. We prohibit the insider trades. So you can't have officers and directors free to sell their shares while the majority of the employees of the company are required to hold theirs—as, of course, has happened in some instances.

On enhanced financial disclosures, we require that public companies must disclose all off-balance-sheet transactions and conflicts. We require that pro forma disclosures be done in a way that is not misleading and be reconciled with a presentation based on generally accepted accounting principles. More companies are doing these pro forma disclosures. They really are not accurately reflecting the financial conditions of the company.

We require very prompt disclosure of insider trades—actually, to be reported by the second day following any transactions.

We require the reporting of loans to insiders. There have been some enormous loans made. At a minimum, those need to be disclosed. Some argue they ought to be prohibited. We didn't go that far. Some testified there are some good reasons on occasion that a company ought to make a loan to one of its officers. But, at a minimum, they ought to be disclosed.

This is a small item, but it may have a good benefit. We require public companies to disclose to the investors whether they have adopted a code of ethics for senior financial officers and whether their audit committee has among it a member who is a financial expert. We don't require them to have a code of ethics, although we think they should. We just require that they disclose whether they have one or not.

Title V deals with analyst conflicts of interest. We have had this incredible situation that was brought to the public attention by the efforts of the Attorney General of the State of New York, Eliot Spitzer, in which research reports and stock trades of companies that were potential banking clients of a major broker-dealer were often distorted to assist the firm in obtaining investment banking business. There was one document that actually acknowledged the conflict and, as a result, stated:

We are off base on how we rate stocks and how much we bend over backwards to accommodate banking.

These analysts would recommend a buy rating on the stock essentially to help out the investment banking firm which was trying to get the company's investment banking business. So they get the analysts to say good things about the company, which will then lead the company to be far more favorably inclined and take on that firm in order to do their investment banking business.

In some instances, they were actually recommending buys and then they were saying to one another what a turkey the company was, but the poor investor was being taken at the time.

We set out a number of provisions in this regard. I will not go through all of them.

We prevent investment banking staff from supervising research analysts or clearing their reports.

We prohibit analysts from distributing research reports about a company they are underwriting.

We have a provision to protect analysts from retaliation for making unfavorable stock recommendations.

We heard moving testimony from someone who said: If you make an unfavorable recommendation, who knows what is going to happen to you?

We also provide—the bill here focuses on disclosure instead of prohibition—that an analyst would have to disclose if he owned the company stock. If you are doing an analysis and if you are doing a report and a recommendation, you ought to disclose whether you own the company stocks or bonds, whether you have received compensation from the company, whether your firm has a client relationship with the company, and whether you are receiving compensation based on investment banking revenues from the company. These are not prohibitions, they are just disclosures.

The thought behind this is, if you are an investor and an analyst is making a recommendation and he puts up front in his analysis that he owns the company stock, or that he is receiving compensation from the company, or that his firm has a client relationship with the company, or that he is receiving compensation based on investment banking revenues received from the company, someone is going to look at this and say: wait a second. I have to take his recommendation in the context of his involvement.

Finally, of major importance is the increase we have provided for the budget of the SEC to, No. 1, provide pay parity for SEC employees; No. 2, enhance information technology and security enhancement; and, No. 3, fund more professionals to help carry out the important investigative and disciplinary efforts of the SEC.

We provide for two studies. One concerns the consolidation of public accounting firms. Senator AKAKA was very interested in this. There has been a constant consolidation trend. We have asked the Comptroller General to do the study. And the other is by Senator BUNNING directing the SEC to conduct a study of the role of credit rating agencies in the operation of the securities markets.

In closing, there has been broad support for this legislation. Just a few days ago, the Business Roundtable came out in favor of it. The Financial Executives International early on in the process was supportive, as well as the Council of Institutional Investors.

We have tried hard to listen to the concerns people raised.

The procedure here was that before the Memorial Day recess—in fact, in early May, we put out a committee print. As we approached markup shortly before the Memorial Day recess, a number of amendments were proposed. It was urged that we put the markup over. We agreed to do that. We took all the amendments that had been put forward, and other suggestions that were being received with respect to the committee print, and went back and reworked it.

I have to say to you that, in all candor, many of those suggestions were meritorious and in fact are now reflected in the legislation that is before the Senate.

So we tried very hard to listen to people at every step of the way. We then reworked the print. We came back with another committee print. We went to markup on June 18. We made a limited number of amendments in markup and brought the bill out to the floor of the Senate by a 17-to-4 vote.

I simply close by saying how strongly I believe that financial irresponsibility and deception of the sort that we have seen in all of the instances that keep appearing on the front pages of our newspapers are a real threat to our economic recovery. We cannot afford to wait for the next corporate deception, followed by the next round of layoffs, followed by the next collapse of a company's pension fund.

We need to take action to restore public trust in our financial markets, and that really begins with restoring public confidence in the accuracy of financial information. That is what this legislation seeks to accomplish. I urge my colleagues to support this critical legislation.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGAMAN). The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I begin by thanking Senator SARBANES for working with me as we have considered this bill. I congratulate him on this day that we are considering the bill in the Senate.

We had a series of hearings that I wish every Member of the Senate could have attended. I am not surprised that at the end of those hearings good people with the same facts, as Jefferson said so long ago, were prone to disagree.

I find myself in a position where Senator SARBANES and I agree on many of the key issues of this bill; we differ on others. It is not the first time in managing a bill that we have been on opposite sides.

I reminded Senator SARBANES this morning that it might very well be this will be the last bill we will ever manage together. Since I am leaving the Senate, and we have something like 40 legislative days left, I do not know whether, after this bill is dealt with, the Banking Committee will warrant any of those 40 days.

But I would like to say for the record that no one can object to the hearings we had, the approach the chairman has taken. Whether you agree with him or whether you do not, I think his approach has been reasoned and reasonable.

It is clear this issue has attracted a great deal of attention. It is clear that there is a mind in the Congress, if not in the country—Congress is not always reflective of the thinking of the country—but there is a sort of collective mind that we need to do something, even if it is wrong.

I lament, as we have gotten into this debate, that the media has decided that the tougher bill is the bill with more mandates; that if you decided to set up a stronger committee, a stronger board with broader powers so they might decide to go beyond the legislative mandates, that that is a weaker proposal than having Congress actually write auditing standards or conflict of interest standards.

I would submit to my colleagues—and I guess I would have to say at this point, I do not know that we will follow this adage—but I suggest this is a very important bill. I urge my colleagues, as you look at this bill, to realize we are not just talking about accounting. If this bill were just about accounting, it could do some good, it could do some harm, but it could not do too much of either.

But this bill is far more than just a bill about accounting. This is a bill that has profound effects on the American economy; therefore, I think it is very important that we try to look at the problem and that we try to come up with a solution that will be good not just for today, not just that will bring forth a positive editorial in a newspaper tomorrow, but I submit we want to try to find one that meets the front porch of the nursing home test. That is the test where, when we are all sitting around in rocking chairs in a nursing home, and we look back at what has happened under this bill, that we will be proud of what we did and how we did it.

I want to touch on several things. I want to go through and make several points, some related to what the distinguished chairman said, some just because I want to say them. I want to talk about what I believe the problem is. And I want to make it clear that I do not know how to fix it. I do not know that this bill fixes it. I do not believe it does. I do not believe my substitute I offered fixes it either. But I think somebody needs to talk a little bit about it. Then I want to talk about the bill that we have before us, and where I agree with it and where I differ, and what those differences are.

I think the good news is—from the point of view of if consensus is a good thing—there is a consensus, and has been from the very beginning, that we need to pass a law. What this President cannot do is provide an independent funding source and a legal foundation for this independent board.

I personally believe the President's 10-point program was a good program. What the Chairman of the SEC cannot do is provide an independent funding source and provide a legislative foundation for the board. The Chairman and I agree on that.

There have been people who have reached a conclusion that if you differed from Senator SARBANES, you did not really want a bill. I believe those of us who have differed do want a bill. And the one thing that we agree on, which I think is at the heart of this whole debate, is a strong, independent board to make determinations about conflict of interest and about ethics.

Now, let me touch on the things that I wanted to touch on.

I personally thank Senator SARBANES for the approach he took in focusing on the problem and on the future. Everybody knows this has now become a political issue. We know that people are either trying to go back and pin this problem on past Presidents or SEC Directors or they are trying to pin the problem on the current President and the current SEC Chairman. I think it is a testament to Senator SARBANES' leadership that he has had nothing to do with that.

The plain truth is we have had a succession of great SEC Chairmen. Arthur Levitt and I disagreed on many things, but I do not think anybody could argue that he was not an effective SEC Chairman. It is true that he had the ability, under existing law, to go back and change GAAP accounting to set up a board, to do anything he wanted to do, and he did not do it. But it is always so easy to see these things when you are looking with that wonderful hindsight.

Anybody has to give Arthur Levitt credit that he was the first to raise an issue about auditor independence. Whether you agreed when he raised it or not that it was a problem, that it was proven, it is clear that he saw a problem which may or may not be the source of our problem today, but many people believe it is. You have to give him credit. And I don't believe anybody else in his position would have done a much better job than he did.

Let me also say that I think Harvey Pitt has done an outstanding job in the short period of time he has been at the SEC. Much is made of the fact that he did legal work for accounting firms. I continue to be struck by this approach that somehow knowledge is corruption, that somehow the perfect regulator is a guy who just came in off a turnip truck and who knows absolutely nothing.

It reminds me of Senator MCCAIN was once telling a story about talking to a journalist who was covering the Vietnam War and asking the journalist if he had ever read this seminal work about the history of Vietnam. And the journalist said: No, he had never read it because he wanted to approach the subject with a totally unbiased mind.

There is a big difference, I submit, between an open mind and an empty mind. We make a grave mistake when we discount knowledge. Everybody today, when they are criticizing Harvey Pitt, talks about the fact that he represented accounting firms and security firms. I guess if he were being more aggressive than is the public mood, people would remember that he was probably the most rigorous chief counsel at the SEC in its history and, in that process, brought cases against numerous major companies. They would be saying that that experience had tainted him for his current work.

The point is, the man has broad experience as chief counsel to the SEC, where he prosecuted major firms, and he has vast experience as probably the Nation's premier security lawyer where he defended associations and businesses. And quite frankly, when in doubt, I will go with knowledge. When in doubt, I will take experience. I do not believe that experience taints you.

Let me also say that there is this current mood that anything having anything to do with accountants is somehow bad. Having just praised Harvey Pitt, let me point out an area where I disagree with him. When he set up his board to oversee accounting ethics and to look at issues such as the independence issue, on ethics issues, he does not allow people with an accounting background to vote.

Now I would have to say that I strongly disagree with that for two reasons: No. 1, since when is a person's background a source of corruption? I will address that a little more in a minute. Secondly, when you are looking at what is and what is not ethical practice, I am not saying it is absolutely essential, but it is helpful to have somebody who knows something about what practice is.

I submit that in all of these approaches, from the SEC approach to the approach of this bill, we are probably going too far in putting people in positions where they are going to have massive unchecked authority and they have no real expertise in the subject area.

Anybody who thinks this board is just going to slap around a few accountants does not understand this bill. This board is going to have massive power, unchecked power, by design. I would have to say the board that Senator ENZI and I set up in our bill has massive unchecked power as well. I mean, that is the nature of what we are trying to do here. I am not criticizing Senator SARBANES. I am just reminding people that there are two edges of this sword. We are setting up a board with massive power that is going to make decisions that affect all accountants and everybody they work for, which directly or indirectly is every breathing person in the country. They are going to have massive unchecked powers.

We need to give some more thought to who is going to be on this board and is it going to be something that is attractive enough to make people want to serve.

In the proposal Senator ENZI and I put together, I thought we could enhance its prestige by making it a little more independent of the SEC. Under the committee bill, which is before us, the SEC would appoint the members of the board. I thought that given the broad nature of its power, which goes far beyond just accounting and far beyond just securities, it would be helpful to have the SEC appoint two members—Senator ENZI and I suggested that one have an accounting background and one not—have the Federal Reserve Board appoint two; have the CFTC appoint two; and then have the President appoint the chairman. I think that board would have a higher profile. With a Presidential appointee as chairman, it would raise the prestige of the board, and we would get better people to serve on the board.

I urge my colleagues, think long and hard when you think about this board exerting tremendous, unbridled, unchecked power, about how many people you want on the board who know something about the subject matter. Today, in an environment where accountants are the evil people of the world, the enemies of the people, having no accountants on this board or relatively few and not letting them vote when ethics matters are being dealt with, I assert that kind of approach means you are not going to have first-rate people who are going to want to serve.

Let me finally get it out of my system by saying: I don't know a whole bunch of accountants. I taught at a public university. About a third of my students in economics were accounting majors. I would have to say that I have a pretty high opinion of accountants. If I had to trust the safety and sanctity of my children and my wife today, after all these revelations about bad accounting, to a politician, a preacher, a lawyer, or an accountant drawn at random in America today, without any pause I would choose an accountant.

I am not saying that there are not bad people in accounting. I am not saying there has not been abuse. But I think we have to separate people from professions.

One of my concerns is, we have already had a decline in the number of people majoring in accounting. I am wondering, I don't care what kind of law you write, I don't care what kind of board you set up, if we don't attract smart young people into accounting, people who understand it is not talent, it is not personality, it is not cool, it is character that ultimately counts, then none of these systems are going to work very well.

Now, I don't buy the idea that legislating something instead of setting up a reasoned system to make decisions is a tougher approach; and if it is, I don't want it. But what we have today is an approach that is largely taken in the media that the more mandates you have, that the more things chiseled inflexibly into law, that the more it is one-size-fits-all, whether it has any rhyme, reason, or responsibility, that that is tougher, and therefore it is better, that in today's environment is obviously appealing.

I hope this doesn't happen, but it would not shock me if we have a series of amendments offered tomorrow when we start dealing with the bill, where people try to out-tough each other—maybe one to kill all the accountants and start all over and train new ones. Well, nobody would offer such an amendment, but I think we could very easily get into this oneupsmanship that we can end up regretting. I hope that will not happen. I want to discourage that.

Let me give you an example of where Senator SARBANES and I differ in our opinions. Who is right, I don't know. I think maybe being in this business for a while convinces you that nobody has a lock on wisdom and nobody knows in each and every case what is right and responsible, but I want you to understand the difference of our approach. Let me just go right to the heart of the matter.

The substitute that I offered in committee with Senator ENZI has an independent board. I think it is better, but you can argue that the two boards are pretty similar. Ours is a little more independent of the SEC; though, in the end, to meet the constitutional test, the SEC has to have authority over it. We went a little further in terms of independence and appointing members, and I have already talked about that. But the whole heart of the difference—let's pick one issue—comes down to auditor independence. If you ask me today, should the same company that does an external audit for a firm be able to do internal audits—and I argue today I don't have the knowledge to say this—I would argue today that I really don't know enough about accounting practice and how the process works, not just at General Motors but at the smallest corporation in America, to make that decision. The bill before us sets out the law. It is written in the law that if you do an external audit, you cannot do any one of these nine different things. I don't know, it may well be that after a reasoned analysis a competent board would decide they ought to do those things. My guess is that if I had to decide today, and you forced me to make a decision that was going to be binding on the country, which is a little frightening to me, I might well agree with most, and in some cases all, of these things. But I don't believe we ought to be writing that into law. I don't think anything is gained by writing it into law, and I think a lot is lost by writing it into law.

Having read editorials, I know this makes the bill tougher, but I don't think it makes it better. What I believe we should do is set up the best and strongest board we can, make it independent, give it independent funding, and put competent people on it. The way Senator ENZI and I did it, and there is nothing magic about it other than that we did it, we decided to have the SEC, the Fed, and the CFTC appoint two members, one with an accounting background and one without, and then have the President appoint the chairman, and he could decide.

I personally think that having more accountants rather than fewer is a plus, not a minus. I don't think they all ought to have an accounting background. I don't necessarily say a majority have to have an accounting background, but I believe that day in and day out, 20 years from now when we have all left the Senate and we are not paying attention to these things, it would help to have people who know what they are doing. I don't buy the idea that people who don't know what they are doing are more moral, other things being the same, than people who do know what they are doing. In any case, I believe that rather than writing out these nine things by law that you cannot do while you are doing an external audit, we ought to set up the strongest board we can, and we ought to give them external funding and plenty of power, and we ought to say to them: you need to look at these nine things and do a reasoned analysis. You need to talk to lots of people, such as smart theorists who are accounting professors at our best universities, and you probably ought to talk to the bookkeeper in Muleshoe who is actually doing bookkeeping work, look at the practical, the theoretical, and make a determination.

Should you be able to do an external audit and do any one of these nine things? You make a decision and set it out in regulation. Why is that better than writing it into law? It seems to me it is better for two reasons: One, if you are wrong, or if accounting practices change, or if your perception of the problem changes, you can go back and change it by regulation. The problem with writing it into law is that Congress then has to come back and change the law. As we know from Glass-Steagall, it took us 60 years to fix something that had it been written in regulation by the 1940s, it would have changed. But we didn't change it until 1999.

The second reason, which I think is equally important, if not more important, is the way the bill is now written might very well make sense for General Motors. That is, it might make perfectly good sense to have a process whereby General Motors might have three or four different CPA firms—maybe more—but they are operating all over the country and all over the world. That is perfectly feasible. But the last time I looked—and I don't know, but some of these may have gone out of business and, God willing, maybe some new companies have come into business—the last time my trusty staff looked, there were 16,254 publicly held companies in America. I don't care how smart you are, I don't care how good your intentions are, you cannot write a mandate, if you get too far in the detail, that fits General Motors and also fits the 16,254th largest company in America. It just doesn't work.

One of the advantages of setting up an independent board, giving them a mandate to look at these areas, but not chiseling it into stone in legislation, is because they can then say, well, here is the principle and if you are General Motors, here is how it applies, but if you are XYZ Paint Company in Montana, or Wyoming, or wherever, you might only have one accounting firm operating in the town that you are domiciled in. I am not saying you cannot hire accountants to come from the Capital City, or wherever, to your town to do work for you, and maybe you ought not to be operating in a little town in a small State; but people choose that, and people who represent small States seem to like these companies being there. I am just saying that giving the board the ability to set a principle and apply it in one way to General Motors and in another way to a small company in a small town makes eminently good sense in practice.

Now, I know it is not a mandate in the same sense as writing it into law, but I think the result would end up being better.

One of the amendments that I will offer—and I thank Senator SARBANES for trying—and one thing I have to say is that nobody on our committee can say that Senator SARBANES did not listen. Nobody can say he failed to try to hear them out on their concerns and that, in many cases, he didn't change the bill to try to respond to their concerns.

One of the changes that I support is giving the board, with the concurrence of the SEC, the ability to grant waivers to these rules and, in fact, to the law. The problem with waivers on an individual company basis is a practical problem, and that is, if 16,254 companies are trying to get waivers under their special conditions—they all come to Washington and hire lawyers and lobbyists; they all petition the board and the SEC—if that board has 16,254 petitions in 1 year, and it could have many times that if people are petitioning for different kinds of waivers, we are going to shut it down for any other purpose except waivers.

What will happen, not because anybody wants it to happen but because of the very nature of Government, the people who will get the waivers will not in general be the most deserving people. They will be the people who hired the best lawyers, who had the best contacts, who knew how to go about it, and who had the money to spend getting the waiver.

My guess is the smallest companies that need the waiver the most will not get them. Surely at some point we are going to fix the bill so that the accounting board, with the concurrence of the SEC, can say: OK, look, in applying this, if you fall into these categories, you have these circumstances, you have a waiver to do things in this way. Clearly, something like that has to make sense.

One of the things we have to come to recognize, and I think we all recognize it, is that having a beautiful law in a law book does not make good law. It has to be practical, and it has to take into account the 1,001—in this case, the 16,254 different circumstances that can apply.

What is the problem? I guess there are as many theories about the problem as there are people. I have my own theory about the problem, and I will share it with my colleagues and anybody else who is interested.

Why is all of this happening now? I believe it is happening because of the problems in GAAP accounting. There are other extenuating circumstances, and I want to touch on them, but here is the problem in GAAP accounting. Senator SARBANES used a perfect example of it, and I will just take his example. He talked about how WorldCom saw its market capitalization fall from $100 billion to $100 million. How is that possible? I remember when Enron went bankrupt. People said: Where are the assets? When a company goes from $100 billion to $100 million, what happened to the assets?

Here is the problem. Increasingly, the asset is a combination of know-how, credibility, and a belief by the public that you are carrying out your business in an efficient and ethical way. Increasingly, the modern corporation does not have 12 steel mills. They do not own massive physical assets. Many companies have tried, basically, to get out of the asset business into the information business. The value of WorldCom was a discounted present value of what the public believed its revenue stream was relative to its cost. It never had $100 billion worth of physical assets, anything like it. That is what the value of the ideal was as the public perceived it in a period where our wise friend, Alan Greenspan, talked about irrational exuberance. That is what they thought that company was worth, but it never had assets that were anything near $100 billion. What it had was know-how, knowledge of a market, and it had credibility.

Enron was like a bank in the 19th century before FDIC insurance. Their reputation was the source of their value, and when they made stupid business decisions that called that reputation into question, they collapsed.

I have a great sympathy for accounting because I used to be an economist, and in economics, we have something called ceteris paribus. It means "other things being the same." So when we do not know what those other things are, we just utter this Latin phrase and pretend they do not exist—literally pretend they do not exist.

That is valuable in physics where you talked about force equals mass times acceleration, or for every action there is equal but opposite reaction. That is an assumption. That is a simplification because it leaves out friction, and it leaves out gravity. There is nothing wrong with it, but the problem is, accounting cannot do those things.

I had a famous and great accounting professor named David McCord Wright. Nobody remembers him anymore. I can visualize him today easily defining WorldCom. He would have talked about the discounted stream of earnings, and he would have talked about the value of their equity or market capitalization and would have plotted out a projection of revenues and a projection of costs and integrating that area to add it up, and that is where the $100 million was.

I doubt if WorldCom's physical assets ever totaled $50 million, probably not $20 million. You are an accountant and you have the job with the directions that are available through GAAP, generally accepted accounting principles. You have the job of trying to model, for accounting purposes, what WorldCom looks like. You do not have the ability to utter a Latin phrase and wish away things you do not understand. Our problem today is that our GAAP accounting has not kept pace with the world in which we live.

In this world where knowledge is power, in this world where know-how is wealth, it is very hard to model with GAAP accounting. In the decade of the 1990s, when this new model was used on a massive basis in the American economy, accountants had to figure up how much all this stuff was worth.

GAAP accounting has not kept pace with our changing economy. Our accounting is based on the old steel mill of the 1940s where you had how much you paid for the furnaces, and you had them a certain period of time, and you have depreciated them.

How do you depreciate an idea? How do you book having brilliant young people who are committed to the future in your company because they own your stock? How do you put that down in value terms?

So when we are pointing the finger at these people who call themselves accountants, when we are blaming them for every problem in the world, accountants did not put WorldCom into bankruptcy. Accountants did not put Enron into bankruptcy. Enron put Enron into bankruptcy by making bad business decisions. The accounting was a problem because it was slow to show it, but it was there. WorldCom's problems were there. The problem was not accounting. The problem was accounting did not show the problem soon enough.

So if anyone is listening to this debate and thinks some investment is going to be more valuable because we have better accounting, in the long run that is true; in the short run, I am not sure that is true. In fact, I argue these companies would have gone broke anyway. Clearly, they would have gone broke, and they would have gone broke quicker had the accounting system been better. It should have been better. It needs to be better.

The point I am trying to make is the following: When you are trying to model a company using GAAP accounting, it is hard. It is something nobody has ever done before.

We are learning how to do this, and we will—using concepts like goodwill to try to be a proxy for things like intellectual capital and know-how. That is the source of our problems.

I think the fact this came at the end of a financial bubble in the 1990s exacerbated the problem. The problem, in my opinion, is accounting was easier—maybe it was not easier initially. We figured out how to do it on the old model. We will figure out how to do it on the new model.

There is some smart accountant, probably at Texas A&M right now, studying accounting, who will probably get an MBA, who will figure out how to get all this goodwill off our books—which is a silly concept in my opinion, but it is the only one we have—and come up with models of intellectual capital that will have meaning, just as that steel furnace in the 1940s and the write-down of it that made sense, but that is not the world in which we live. That has to be dealt with.

Something the chairman's bill does, something that I very much am in favor of, is it gives independent funding to FASB. The two things that have to be done and only Congress can do them effectively, in my opinion, are: No. 1, we have to have an independent, self-funded accounting standards board, FASB, and we have to have accountants setting accounting standards. No. 2, we need to set up this board to oversee ethics in accounting.

I do not think it matters whether it has a majority of accountants or not, but it needs to have a reasonable number of people who have a background in accounting so they know what they are doing and so they have an intellectual stake in it being done right. It is a dangerous thing when there are people with massive power who do not have any kind of intellectual stake in the application of that power, and it concerns me.

So to conclude, let me say this: Senator SARBANES and I, when we were at this point on the financial services modernization bill, were on opposite sides. I was for the bill. I saw it as the epitome of all wisdom. He was opposed to the bill and saw it in less glowing terms. By the time we got out of conference, it was our bill. We were together on it and 90 Members of the Senate voted for it. It passed the Senate initially on a very close vote, a very narrow margin.

I do not think that will be the case here. I think this bill will pass by a very large margin. I also think it is possible that by the time we have reconciled this bill with the House, that we can have a bill that will be very broadly supported. At that point, I hope I will be in a position of supporting it.

There are many good things in the Sarbanes bill. There certainly has not been a bill, since I have been in the Senate, that was better intended than this bill. I do think it can be improved. I think it legislates too much. I think it does one-size-fits-all mandates. It takes them a little bit too far. That, to some guy outside government, does not sound very important, but it is very important when one starts talking about application. If we do this thing right, and if we build a consensus and it works well, that will be the final monument of the bill.

I hope we can offer germane amendments. As of right now, I think there will probably be two amendments I will offer. One will have to do with this issue about granting waivers on a blanket basis so that rather than making every individual company that has specific kinds of problems come in and ask for an individual waiver, that the SEC and the board, when they agree, could simply issue a set of principles, and if you qualify you would get the waiver. If you do not, you do not. Pretty straightforward amendment.

The second amendment I believe I will offer will have to do with appeals. Under British common law, we have always taken a very strong position in affecting the right of a person to earn a living. We have set very high standards when it comes to taking somebody's livelihood. I believe there are people who are practicing accounting, or veterinarians or economists or any profession, there is somebody in it who ought not to be in it. I think when this board, which is a private entity—and again this is not a problem with the Sarbanes bill. This is a problem of our substitute as well. It is a strange kind of entity. We want it to be private, but we want it to have governmental powers. We have tried to structure it in ways to try to accommodate this.

The bottom line is, when this board is taking away somebody's livelihood and that person believes they have been wronged, they ought to have a right to go to the Federal district courthouse. They ought to have a right to say: I do not think that was right, and I want my day in court.

They ought to have to pay for it, and at that point I think all the material involved has to be made public, but that is a right I think people have to have. Those two amendments are very narrowly drawn, and they go to the very heart of the bill. I know some of our colleagues are thinking about offering a whole bunch of other amendments. I submit that trying to work out a compromise with the House is going to be difficult. I think we will succeed at it, but I think if we get a whole bunch of other issues involved, we are making the mountain higher. I believe we are ready to legislate in this area, and I think if we can limit what we are doing to this area that we can pass this bill, we can go to conference, and we can come back and have a bill signed into law before we leave. I think if we get into a lot of other areas, I am not saying the world comes to an end if you put an amendment on here—having us write accounting standards with regard to stock options, for example, that is a tax issue. I would probably want to make the death tax permanent as a second-degree amendment, but I am not saying the world comes to an end if we do that.

I am saying if we get off into those kind of issues, where you have strong feelings on both sides of the aisle—and that would not be any kind of partisan vote—I think it is harder for our chairman and for the members of this committee to get their job done. I hope we will have a limited number of amendments. I hope they will be germane to the bill.

Finally, at some point we are going to take up Yucca Mountain. I am not up high enough in the pecking order to have gotten the word as to exactly when that is going to be. Other things being the same, I would rather finish this bill first and then go to Yucca Mountain than to stop in the middle of it. But it is a highly privileged motion. Any Member can make it. It is not debatable. I assume at some point sometime tomorrow that motion will be made. As I figure the time limit under that privileged motion, it would take about a day.

I don't see any reason this bill should not be finished this week, and maybe much sooner if we can stay on the bill, if we don't drift on into these other areas. When people who are for the bill in its current form want to stay pretty close to the bill and people who are against it in its current form want to stay pretty close to the bill, we ought to stay pretty close to the bill.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence. I look forward to working on this issue. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DORGAN). The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, these are interesting times. I hope colleagues have been listening. The two presentations that preceded me were outstanding explanations of both the bill and the financial problems facing the world today. I don't think you can get a clearer explanation of the problems than those given by Senators GRAMM and SARBANES. They are very detailed and very much to the point and lay the groundwork for what we are about to do.

Usually in this Chamber, we have a solution and we are looking for a problem. Today, we have a problem and we are looking for a solution. We have a problem before the Senate. The way this process works, is that we try to place the solution in the best possible form. Under our form of government, the Senate will work on its bill; the House works on another bill on the same topic. When those two bills have been completed, there will be a conference committee and we will work out the differences. Through every one of those processes, there will be changes to the legislation. We get 100 different opinions from 100 different backgrounds on any piece of legislation. That is what makes our form of government work. At the other end of the building, there are 435 people from different backgrounds. They all lend their opinion issues that come before the House.

It is sometimes a slow process, but it is the best process in the world. It will work on this problem for which we are looking for a solution.

If the economy were different today, we would not have this problem. When there are changes in the economy, we realize accounting problems—or at least that is when the accounting problems become apparent. That is where we are today.

I am the lone accountant in the Senate. There is a good reason for that. Accountants are out there doing very detailed work. When you listen to what is in this bill, you are going to hear details that you do not hear with other legislation. It is the nature of the occupation, of the profession of accounting. In the last 6 months, there has been an increased interest in the accounting profession. Kids in colleges have been asking the Deans about this phenomenon called accounting that nobody has talked about for a long time. It is a tremendous opportunity for accountants to finally explain what they do.

Some of the kids are looking into accounting for the wrong reasons. They want to be one of the green eyeshade people bringing down huge corporations. That is not what it is about. It is an opportunity to make sure everyone understands business in America. Accountants are the people with the very basis who both know it and can explain it. That is their job.

Somewhere along the line, it is possible for people to get distracted from that main goal. We are trying to bring them back to that main goal—providing a basis where everyone can understand the value of the companies in which they are investing.

Today we are addressing accounting legislation that has been reported out of the Banking Committee. It has been through initial scrutiny. It has been through the process that leads us to the floor. I have talked about the floor process, but so far this has only been through the hearings process. We had 13 hearings in the Banking Committee. They were on very diverse topics and a very diverse bunch of people who understood each of those topics testified. I commend Senator SARBANES for the way he conducted the process of the hearings, and then the process of negotiations that led up to the committee vote. That happened over the last several months. On this issue, I can think of no other Chairman in either the House or Senate who did a more thorough job in conducting hearings. The Banking Committee stayed on the substance and did not allow enormous outside pressures on this issue to interfere with trying to get to the bottom of the real problem. The hearings were not finger-pointing. The hearings were an attempt to get valuable information to arrive at the best possible solution.

In addition, the witnesses at the hearings presented objective views. Had it been my choice to call the witnesses, I would have chosen nearly every person who testified. That shows the care and concern that went into choosing the individuals who provided this basic information. The witnesses offered several different views, and they came from diverse backgrounds.

I also thank the Chairman for the way he and his staff conducted themselves through the endless negotiations we had during that same timeframe.

Right now, it seems as if everyone is writing an accounting bill—including myself. In fact, I got calls as soon as Enron occurred from some of the House Members who said they would really like to work on a bill with me. Of course, the first question I had to ask them was, What did you find really happened with Enron? Usually the answer was, We don't know yet. Their response was, but we want to get ahead of the curve.

I am glad we had the patience to wait, to hold the hearings, and then to negotiate through a number of different bills to come up with the one before the Senate today. Those negotiations by Senator SARBANES and his staff were both honest and fair. Although we were not able to agree on everything, which is the basis of negotiation, I believe all negotiations took place in good faith. I thank the Chairman for that. I do think we have a bill that is a good basis for finishing the process and going to conference.

Enron, Global Crossing, WorldCom, and the other numerous restatements that are occurring have caused a ripple effect on the trust of corporate executives and their auditors by the public. These executives, the persons in whom shareholders put their trust, have stained the entire corporate community. A few bad apples have spoiled the bunch. As a result, the legislation we will be debating this week will restructure the way executives operate by increasing accountability and making it easier to discipline fraudulent behavior while at the same time increasing penalties for illegal activity.

This legislation will force the management of companies to be accountable to their shareholders by requiring that they certify the accuracy of their financial statements. In addition, the legislation will require that members of corporate audit committees are independent directors. We provide the audit committee the ability to engage outside consultants and advisers and provide them the resources they need to determine whether the accounting techniques being used are in the best interests of the shareholders.

In addition, all employees should be subject to the same rules when selling company stock. In this regard, the bill prevents officers and directors of a company from purchasing or selling stock when other employees are restricted. And when these officers or directors do sell stock in the companies in which they work, they should report the transaction on the next business day.

However, the cornerstone of this legislation will be to change the way in which a company's auditors interact with their clients, and also to force them to be more accountable. While I believe that accountants have extremely high ethics and standards, I do believe the current environment has highlighted a number of problems inherent in the current oversight structure of the accounting industry.

I do believe it is an awesome task to be the accountant trying to explain this to everybody else. I do need to explain a little bit why there are not more accountants in legislatures or in the Senate or in the House. That is because if you pick up experience in legislating, most of that is done during the tax season and we need the accountants during the tax season. And they need the business during the tax season. If they don't earn at least 70 percent of their revenue during that time, they are out of business, which precludes them from picking up legislative experience. There is no requirement that you have to have legislative experience before you come here. There is no requirement that you have any kind of experience. But that is why there are fewer accountants here than there are a number of other professions—it is a matter of timing.

While I am hesitant to move forward with the number of changes included in the bill, I do believe the legislation is necessary given the current lack of faith in accountants.

Make no mistake about it, this legislation is federalization of the accounting industry. This bill places a Federal Government bureaucracy at the helm of accounting regulation. While the legislation doesn't prevent the State accountancy boards from continuing to regulate accountants registered in their States, it does establish an overlord regulator to oversee the firms which audit publicly traded companies. My hope is that this new oversight structure will renew the faith the public has in auditors and the financial statements which they help prepare.

In addition to my own proposal, over the past several months I have seen a lot of different proposals. I have also spoken to and met with many of my colleagues about this issue. I have spoken with groups from different industries; I have talked to scholars, consumer advocates, and regulators. All the groups agree that steps need to be taken to enhance the oversight of accountants.

I have examined several existing models of quasi-public regulators such as the New York Stock Exchange and the National Association of Securities Dealers. One point is clear: When these organizations were established, there was a desire to appoint the most informed individuals, those who actually deal with the industry on a day-to-day basis, as majority members of the boards that oversee the industry.

For instance, the National Association of Securities Dealers, NASD, has a large board which must consist of anywhere between 17 and 27 members. Nowhere in the NASD rules does it state their board members may not serve if they have previously been involved in the securities industry. As such, the majority of the NASD board members have worked within the industry.

Why should the accounting industry be treated so differently? Why would we create a board which oversees the accounting industry and then require that a minority of its members have ever practiced accounting? The NASD plays just as important a role in the protection of investors as the accounting oversight board will, so why shouldn't the persons who sit on this board have the best possible knowledge of the accounting industry?

I do want to thank Senator SARBANES for the change he made in the legislation. Originally it said there could be no more than two accountants on this five-person board. He made the change so that two will be accountants. It is a very significant change so that accountants are represented on the board. Previously it would have been possible to have no accountants regulating the accounting profession.

Every piece of legislation has its handful of unintended consequences, despite how well-meaning Congress can be. I fear the way in which the accounting industry will change when a group of non-accountants set the standards which accountants must follow. Lawyers do not have non-lawyers setting ethical and professional standards which they must follow, yet I would argue that those standards are as important as accounting standards and ethics.

I don't want my message to be misconstrued. I do believe that a board should be established to oversee the accounting industry. I also agree the board members should have all the tools necessary to effectively oversee the industry. I agree that the board members should be full-time and independent from the accounting firms. I agree that they should be appointed by government and not by industry. But I do not agree that the members of the board should be excluded just because they may have passed a CPA exam 25 years ago.

To the contrary, because I believe this board should be as effective as possible, I believe the board members should know how an audit engagement works and they should know the pressures that are applied to an auditor from a client. I believe with this knowledge the board may in fact apply stricter standards than a board of non-accountants.

As I said, I believe accounting firms should be subject to strict scrutiny. However, I do not believe this legislation should pave the road for the trial bar to open frivolous lawsuits against accounting firms. Arthur Andersen no longer exists. Can we really afford to lose another one or two of the final four firms? We used to call them the big five. Now we call them the final four.

It was mentioned earlier that there are 16,254 SEC-filed corporations. That is 16,254 to be reviewed, primarily by four accounting firms. If the trial lawyers pick off one after another after another of the firms because the Board provides information and because they are handed that information, how will we have those 16,254 audited at all?

I am hoping there are a lot of young people listening who are going into accounting who may start firms and grow the firm themselves so they can handle an audit of a Fortune 500 company. But it doesn't happen overnight. And we have to make sure that there is auditing, and not just consulting, which some people will point out is where most of the money is these days.

It makes me nervous to know that essentially only four accounting firms now have the resources and expertise to audit the world's largest companies. We rely on these firms to verify the books of diverse and complex companies because they are the only firms that can provide this service. If we subject them to the will of the trial bar, they will surely continue to be driven from existence, one firm at a time.

Instead, we should punish the wrongdoers to the fullest extent possible and rely on good managers of companies to do their jobs effectively. In the end, we are going to end up making the audit committee members full-time employees, and then there will not be any independence—another problem about which we have to worry.

Having said this, I do believe this legislation is needed at this time. Congress must produce a remedy to help restore investor confidence. We have seen that real penalties, or at least a threat of strong penalties, need to be hung over the heads of corporate executives to assure they maintain their obligations and responsibilities. The moral and ethical breakdown among some of those executives is disgraceful, and investors must know these executives will be punished severely when they make selfish judgments.

A major concern, as we have gone through this legislation, trying to put the bill in its present form, has been the relationship to small business. As I mentioned 16,254 companies are the ones that are registered with the SEC. There are thousands of companies out there that are not SEC registered businesses. There are thousands of entities out there that hire auditors to give confidence in the financial statements they have that are not SEC filed.

One of our concerns has been that we not change business so drastically that these small businesses will no longer be able to afford auditors. So we built in protections for the small businesses. Our intent with this bill is not to have the same principles that apply to the Fortune 500 companies apply to the mom-and-pop business. When they hire an auditor, they want that auditor to give them every bit of information they possibly can so the information they get improves their business and doesn't hide anything from investors. Mom and pop are the investors.

We have taken a lot of care to be sure we are not cascading the provisions down into small business. We will look at additional ways, I am sure, to make sure that does not happen. This is not a license to States to do the same thing that we are doing on a Federal basis. There is recognition that on a Federal basis there is a bigger problem than on a State-by-State basis.

I also want to point out there is also a responsibility by the individual investor. They have to learn to diversify and not to keep all of their eggs in one basket. I hope we can turn this situation into a chance to educate small investors as to how best to manage and invest their money. Nothing will bring back the billions of dollars employees of some of these companies have lost. But hopefully the collapse in confidence will ensure that individuals will never again lose their life savings because of a lack of diversification or knowledge of finance.

What will this legislation provide? It will provide a strong oversight body to watch the accounting industry. It will provide a set of corporate governance laws that will require corporate executives to become accountable for their financial statements. It will provide assurances that corporate boards watch the management of the company with a more critical eye—no longer will board memberships be cushy jobs with no responsibility.

It will also provide assurances to the American people that Congress will not allow these millionaire and billionaire executives to steamroll their obligations to the shareholders. It will also ensure that research analysts aren't being told what to say by the investment bankers.

To a great extent, I believe the marketplace has made remarkable changes to address a number of the issues which were highlighted by these corporate failures. First and foremost, corporate boards and audit committees will no longer turn their head when management wants to engage in questionable ethical engagements. Also, credit rating agencies will impose much more scrutiny on the companies they rate to protect financial institutions and other lenders. Lenders themselves will require more information about the stability of the companies in which they invest. Research analysts will ask more questions about the company, and more importantly, they will demand more answers from executives. But perhaps, most important of all, is the fact that investors, both institutional and individual, will be more critical.

Shareholders will wake up and learn about the power of their votes on corporate actions. We've already seen great strides from some institutional investors in that they plan to use their votes in shareholder meeting to keep executives honest and accountable. They also plan to use their votes to impact executive compensation packages. These private sector solutions will be more effective than any legislation which can be passed out of Washington.

One of our country's greatest strengths rests in the dominance of our capital markets. But the strength of our markets is only as strong as the underlying confidence in the listed companies. When these companies build facades instead of standing on principle, it shatters the entire system. Congress and the SEC must find a middle ground where we allow the marketplace to continue to operate in the capital markets to the greatest extent possible but also assures investors, both domestic and internationally, that the U.S. capital markets will continue to be worthy of their investments. We must continue to convince investors, that at the core of the American capital markets, there must be a high level of integrity and ethics by all players.

I want to reiterate another message that has been prevalent this afternoon.

As we get into this bill, there are virtually no limits on what amendments can be put on—at least unless there is a cloture motion.

I hope people will recognize the need to have something done, the need to get it done quickly, and not try and make this a vehicle for everything they ever thought needed to be done with corporations.

The purpose of this bill is not to solve the international problems of business for everything that we ever thought of.

I hope my colleagues will constrain their amendments, keep them to the corporate governance and accounting area we are working on, and help us to get this bill finished as quickly as possible.

Again, I thank Chairman SARBANES and Senator GRAMM for their tremendous efforts and insight which they provided in the previous explanation of this, and for the hours of work they have put into the solution that is before us today. I hope we can keep it to a limited solution, take care of the problems that are recognizable, and reach agreement so we can get this to conference and get a bill to the President for his signature.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to send an amendment to the desk and have it immediately considered. This amendment makes two simple changes to the bill. One is a technical change to conform to the budget rules, and a conforming change involving the definition of "issuers." We have discussed this. It has been cleared. I would like to go ahead and take care of that business, if I could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, there isn't any objection. I think this clarifies the bill. I think it is something that both sides are for, even though we had a previous agreement not to do any amendments today. It is simply so technical that I don't think anybody would have any concerns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4173

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES] proposes an amendment numbered 4173.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To make technical and conforming amendments)

On page 65, line 11, strike "All" and insert "Subject to the availability in advance in an appropriations Act, and notwithstanding subsection (h), all".

On page 76, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 10A(f) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78k(f)) is amended—

(1) by striking "DEFINITION" and inserting "DEFINITIONS"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: "As used in this section, the term 'issuer' means an issuer (as defined in section 3), the securities of which are registered under section 12, or that is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d), or that will be required to file such reports at the end of a fiscal year of the issuer in which a registration statement filed by such issuer has become effective pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77a et. seq.), unless its securities are registered under section 12 of this title on or before the end of such fiscal year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4173) was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I first want to extend my appreciation to the Senator from Maryland for this bill. It is really well timed and well done.

I received a letter today from the Secretary of State of the State of Nevada, a Republican.

By the way—the Senator from Connecticut is in the Chamber—the Secretary of State worked very closely with the Senator from Connecticut. As the Senator will recall, he is a very fine man. I wish he were a member of the Democratic Party. He is not. But he is an outstanding public servant.

He wrote me a letter, which said:

DEAR SENATOR REID: Investor confidence in the integrity of U.S. securities markets has been badly shaken as a result of Enron, Global Crossing, WorldCom, and other alleged wrongdoing. The failure of several large corporations to police themselves cries out for reform before the negative impact on our markets damages our National economy.

The Senate is to begin consideration of S. 2673, The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, on Monday, July 8. I fully support S. 2673 and oppose any efforts to weaken its provisions.

If I could have the attention of the Senator from Maryland, the manager of this bill, I have here a letter from the secretary of state of the State of Nevada, who says:

I fully support S. 2673 and oppose any efforts to weaken its provisions.

I say to the Senator, one of the things the Secretary of State of Nevada is worried about is someone attempting to weaken the bill that you have brought forward to prevent State securities agencies from looking at wrongdoings in the State of Nevada.

As the Senator from Maryland knows, the attorney general from New York, who has been here, is very concerned about this. It is my understanding this bill does nothing to weaken that; is that true?

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator would yield.

Mr. REID. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. That is correct. At one point there was talk of an amendment floating around but—

Mr. REID. But the point is, it is not in the bill?

Mr. SARBANES. No, it is not in the bill.

Mr. REID. On behalf of the secretary of state of Nevada, who I indicated earlier worked closely with the Senator from Connecticut in bringing forward a very good election reform bill—he is very progressive, and a fine secretary of state—throughout this letter, he acknowledges how important this legislation is. I wanted this to be spread on the RECORD before my friend's attention was diverted.

Mr. SARBANES. I appreciate the Senator's comments.

Mr. REID. My friend, secretary of state Heller, goes on to say:

As Nevada's chief securities regulator, I believe there is an immediate need to restore investor confidence in our securities markets.

I stand with my fellow state securities regulators in endorsing Title V, Analyst Conflicts of Interest, in its current form and strongly oppose any amendment to this title that would reduce our ability to investigate wrongdoing and take appropriate enforcement actions against securities analysts. However, an industry amendment has been circulated that would prohibit state securities regulators from imposing remedies upon firms that commit fraud if it involves securities analysts and perhaps even broker-dealers that serve individual investors. If Nevada's investigative and enforcement authority in this area are weakened, so too will the confidence of Nevada investors.

He certainly opposes this.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from our secretary of state be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
July 8, 2002.

Hon. HARRY REID,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR REID: Investor confidence in the integrity of U.S. securities markets has been badly shaken as a result of Enron, Global Crossing, WorldCom, and other alleged wrongdoing. The failure of several large corporations to police themselves cries out for reform before the negative impact on our markets damages our national economy.

The Senate is to begin consideration of S. 2673, The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, on Monday, July 8. I fully support S. 2673 and oppose any efforts to weaken its provisions. As Nevada's chief securities regulator, I believe there is an immediate need to restore investor confidence in our securities markets.

I stand with my fellow state securities regulators in endorsing Title V, Analyst Conflicts of Interest, in its current form and strongly oppose any amendment to this title that would reduce our ability to investigate wrongdoing and take appropriate enforcement actions against securities analysts. However, an industry amendment has been circulated that will prohibit state securities regulators from imposing remedies upon firms that commit fraud if it involves securities analysts and perhaps even broker-dealers that serve individual investors. If Nevada's investigative and enforcement authority in this area are weakened, so too will the confidence of Nevada investors.

An amendment may be offered on the Senate floor under the guise of creating national uniform standards for securities analysts. Its real intent, I fear, is to eliminate remedies that state securities regulators may impose on firms should fraudulent activity be unearthed in an investigation. This approach is clearly ill-advised in today's climate of investor uncertainty.

As Nevada's Secretary of State, my office is charged with administering the Nevada Uniform Securities Act. My office is in current negotiations with Merrill Lynch regarding a possible settlement of analyst conflicts discovered in a lengthy investigation by the New York Attorney General's office. My staff is also participating in a task force investigation of UBS Paine Webber/UBS Warburg. This amendment would greatly hamper our ability to investigate analyst conflicts and would have a detrimental effect on Nevada investors.

I urge you to support S. 2673 and to vote against any amendment to weaken the enforcement powers of state securities regulators. The result of an amendment such as this could be that virtually every one of the thousands of actions brought by state securities regulators every year would be preempted, as well as all civil suits and arbitrations under state law. In light of the recent Enron and WorldCom debacles, it simply does not make sense to limit or preempt the state's ability to bring enforcement actions against analysts who lie to Nevada investors. The public is looking for elected officials to help them regain their confidence in corporate America.

As Nevada's Secretary of State, I have a duty to protect our state's investors. Any measure that dilutes my authority as the state's chief securities regulator is counter to the mission of my office and to state securities regulators nationwide. Accordingly, I again urge you to vote against any amendment to S. 2673 that would weaken the enforcement powers of state securities regulators.

Please call me at (775) 684-5709 if you have any questions or need additional information
Sincerely,

DEAN HELLER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, our Nation is experiencing a crisis in confidence among the investing public. Americans hear on the news and read in the papers every day more and more cases of corporate executives bilking employees and investors, and of auditors who looked the other way, of boards of directors failing to provide the oversight expected of them, and of well-connected investors buying and selling stock based on insider information. Investors do not know who they can trust.

We have been in a mad rush the last many years to make sure that the quarter you are involved in has a good financial statement. People go to whatever ends they can to make sure that that quarterly statement looks good to keep the stock price up. That is all that matters. It does not matter whether the company is losing money. It does not matter if their employees are being laid off. It does not matter, as long as they do everything they can to do what can be done to make sure that stock price stays the same or goes up.

I have spoken previously on efforts of Senators to secure the future for American families. In fact, Senate Democrats are using that as a theme: to secure the future for all American families. Securing our future means not only making sure our borders are safe but also securing educational opportunities for all our children and access to affordable prescription drugs and affordable health care.

We must also provide pension protection for American families. In part, that means extending pension coverage. There will be an opportunity, before this legislative year ends, where we can have a good debate.

The vast majority of workers in Nevada have no pensions. As a consequence, they face their retirement years with inadequate resources. Senator BINGAMAN, chairman of a task force, has raised awareness of the lack of pension coverage for American workers and is working on legislation to address that problem.

My colleagues have also led the way with other legislative initiatives to restore investor confidence and provide safeguards to secure Americans' investments, pensions, and retirement savings.

Chairman SARBANES has introduced important legislation that will create a strong, independent oversight board to oversee the conduct of auditors of public companies, and he has done this on a bipartisan basis. That bill was reported out of committee, as I recall, by a vote of 17 to 4, with overwhelming bipartisan support.

This legislation would establish guidelines and procedures to assure that auditors of public companies do not engage in activities that could undermine the integrity of the audit. It ensures greater corporate responsibility by setting standards for audit committees and for corporate executives, but it would, we would hope, impose penalties when standards are violated. It would establish additional criteria for financial statements and require enhanced disclosures regarding conflicts of interest.

This legislation also directs the Securities and Exchange Commission to adopt rules to improve the independence or research and disclose potential conflicts of interest. It also would provide a significant boost in funding for the SEC, the Securities and Exchange Commission, to help it carry out its responsibilities in a fashion that would help restore investors' confidence in the markets.

This legislation goes a tremendous distance in addressing some of the major concerns I have heard from people in Nevada. And I am pleased this bill has gained, as I have indicated, bipartisan support.

Indeed, it seems that after staying silent for so long, and after allowing a permissive atmosphere where businesses could do no wrong, the President, our President, and Republicans in Congress, quite frankly, are now reversing course. Some are falling all over themselves to jump on the bandwagon and support this legislation. They have done it after hearing from an outraged public. And that is good.

Tomorrow I will be eager to hear what the President has to say in New York. I hope that he does not say we are going to have to enforce the law that we have, because the law we have has not been enforced, especially by the people who surround this President and his administration.

For him to go to New York and say we need to enforce the law more strongly will not do the trick. He needs to jump on the bandwagon with this legislation. We need additional legislation.

The President ran a campaign based on themes such as responsibility and accountability, but recent news reports suggest that both have been lacking in his explanations of his past dealings in the business world.

Prior to holding public office, our President has parlayed his connections as a member of a wealthy and powerful family to arrange a number of, some would call, sweetheart deals. In editorials they have been referred to that way for the past several days. Despite a string of business failures, our President always seemed to land on his feet and seemed to profit.

Now there are disturbing indicators that he has played fast and loose with some of the rules that he is now being asked, through his administration, to enforce. When asked about his business dealings, the President has not accepted personal responsibility, instead shifting blame to accountants and lawyers or implying that he was just doing business as usual.

I would have to say there are questions not only about the Harken business dealings but about the business and accounting practices of Halliburton, where Vice President CHENEY enriched himself, walking away with tens of millions of dollars.

So the problems we have heard go far beyond Enron and the President's friend, as he referred to him, "Kenny boy," Kenny Lay. They are not limited to the handful of companies getting most of the media coverage in recent weeks. Instead, there are fundamental and systematic problems that have to be corrected. That is what this legislation is all about.

I applaud the chairman and the committee for reporting out this bipartisan legislation.

I hope, I repeat, that the President will join in supporting this legislation. We need to make sure that those who serve as corporate executives and on boards accept the responsibility of their roles when they sign their name on a financial report. The American people need to be able to trust corporate leaders.

Likewise, the President, and those in his administration who came to office from the corporate world, need to show more transparency in letting the American people know how they are making policy decisions, who has access to them, who is influencing them, who is meeting with them.

I joined in an amicus brief with the General Accounting Office to have the Vice President disclose who he met with to come up with energy policy that this administration enumerated. We need to know with whom he met, when he met with them, and why he met with them. They refused to give us that information. That is why I joined in that litigation.

This administration must set aside what I believe and agree with some—again, it is replete in the editorials of the last few days—is their arrogance and secrecy and instead be open and forthcoming public servants.

This legislation is timely. The Banking Committee jumped right on it. Most of us thought the Enron thing was something that was a rare dealing in corporate America. We have come to find out it is not a rare dealing in corporate America. It has happened since then time and time again. We have only seen the beginning of it, I am sure.

The Banking Committee is to be applauded for moving this legislation forward on a bipartisan basis. By a vote of 17 to 4, it was reported out of committee. I would hope we can get this bill out of the Senate as quickly as possible. It is good legislation. It is legislation that the American people need to reestablish confidence in corporate America and those people they rely on so that they feel better about having their pensions supplemented with investments made in the stock market.

The stock market is an indication, as far as I am concerned, of how people feel about what is going on in business. As we know from recent days, people have not felt very good about it. We have had tremendous losses. I heard the chairman of the committee, Senator SARBANES, speak about the Nasdaq losing some 74 percent of its value. That is a significant loss to our country.

I know the Members of the Senate understand the importance of this legislation. I hope that they understand why it is important to move it as quickly as possible. We have a few short weeks to complete lots of extremely important legislation prior to the August recess. As I have said on four separate occasions, this legislation is as important as anything we could do, and it is very timely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, let me begin my remarks by commending the distinguished chairman of the Banking Committee. I have said on other occasions and in other places that for students of the Congress who wish to find a good example of how to prepare a committee and ultimately the Chamber for a moment such as this, a good model to use would be the hearings conducted by the chairman of the committee on this very question.

There were 10 hearings—there may have been more, certainly 10 full hearings—to which were invited virtually everyone from across the spectrum on this question. This was hardly a set of hearings where we heard from one side. We literally invited the best experts in the country; they came and shared with us their views and thoughts on what sort of steps we should be taking to reform the accounting profession, to reform the rules affecting the accounting profession.

I begin by extending my compliments to the chairman and his staff for the tremendous job done to lay the groundwork. Oftentimes we will see, particularly in light of a crisis that occurs, there is a rush to judgment. We will come very quickly to the floor with a sort of a cut-and-paste job with the legislation. I am not suggesting intentions are not good, but that is oftentimes how we react.

This set of hearings did, very deliberately, with a great deal of patience and thought, lay out the foundation for the legislation now before the Senate.

Certainly, while there will be ideas offered to improve the legislation, we think the committee has produced a very fine product. The best evidence of that is the fact that 17 of us in the committee found this proposal to be worthy of our support. There were four dissenters. I think even among dissenters, there was a sense that we were heading in the right direction. Some may have fundamentally disagreed, but if there were one in the four, I don't know which one it would have been. Most thought we were doing the right thing, either that we went a little too far or didn't go far enough possibly, but this is a very balanced approach.

I urge our colleagues to be careful of two potential actions in the coming days. One would be to dilute this product in some way. We are not suggesting we have written perfection here, but we think this is a well-balanced proposal.

Senator SARBANES has worked closely with our colleague from Wyoming,

Senator ENZI, who is the only Member of this body who is actually a former member of the accounting profession. He brings a wealth of personal knowledge and awareness to the issue. He worked very closely with him and other members of the minority, as well as with those of us on the majority side, to finally bring this product to the Chamber. It already has involved some compromise.

At this hour, when investor confidence is going to be absolutely critical and the steps that we take and the language we use will in no small measure contribute to the restoration of confidence, it can just as easily do the opposite, if we are not careful. This is a critical moment in the economic history of our country.

The steps taken by those who are in significant positions to affect the outcome of the course we are on are going to be critically important.

The second caution I express is that we don't try to also overburden this bill to say that this is the only opportunity for us to deal with every other issue affecting corporate business life in America. I am not suggesting the ideas Members will want to bring to the table are bad. But we can so load down a good bill that we can sink this effort if we are not careful. I urge my colleagues as well to be restrained in the temptation to bring up every other idea and incorporate it as part of an accounting reform proposal. Those are the two cautionary notes I have.

Let me also add my voice to those who have expressed theirs earlier today. Tomorrow I know the President of the United States is going to give a very important speech on Wall Street in New York, the financial capital of our country. I commend him for doing so. I think it is extremely important that he actually go to Wall Street to share his views.

My hope would be that this evening, as he makes the final preparations for his remarks, he would come out four square and endorse this proposal that we have brought out of our committee by a vote of 17 to 4. I can't think of anything more the President could do in the next 24 hours, aside from the rhetoric he will offer, than to endorse this bill and to say this was a good effort and to talk about the laborious hearings we have held to learn exactly what was necessary to incorporate in this legislation.

Lastly, I would hope we would get this bill done fairly soon and not let this go on too long. We would love to be able to not only finish our work here but to go to conference with the House, which has another proposal. It is a weaker proposal, in my view, but nonetheless we will have to work with them to resolve our differences and to send a bill to the President for his signature.

I would hope that before we leave for our August break less than 3 weeks from today we would actually be able to give to the President a bill for his signature and not let it drag on over into September and October. It is important we act in a timely fashion.

With those background thoughts, I would like to share some general comments about the bill itself. The importance of this issue cannot be overstated. Anyone who has read a paper or turned on the news or flipped on their computer is aware of the crisis in our financial markets and, in fact, beyond that, in our Nation. No rule or regulation is enough to address this fundamental problem.

The issue causing all of this turmoil is about the simple word of "trust." The question that the world is asking is not whether our companies or corporations or the workers who toil in them or the products and services are competitive, but simply whether we are telling the truth. Are we telling the truth?

The reason people of the world so often have come here and invested their hard-earned resources is not because there is a better deal to be made financially speaking. It is because there is a sense that our structures are sound, transparent, and they are fair. You may end up losing your investment; you may make money on your investment. That is always a risk when you make a financial investment. But the one thing you could always say about the United States, as opposed to almost any other place around the globe, is that when you come to America and invest your money, there is a sense of fairness and trust and soundness to our financial institutions and the structures that we created to protect them.

That trust has been fractured by the events that have occurred over the last 9 months. And it continues to be fractured with daily reports. So it is vitally important that we respond in an appropriate and thoughtful manner as the Congress of the United States. We have done so, in my view, with the proposal the chairman has brought to our attention. The very integrity of our markets is being questioned, and the Congress must respond cautiously, prudently, and also expeditiously.

Enron's collapse in December was, of course, an enormous shock to all of us. Seven or eight months later, we have seen that Enron was not an isolated incident. There have been a whole host of corporate accounting scandals and collapses—names such as WorldCom, Global Crossing, Tyco, Adelphia, the list goes on and on. I fear, as my colleagues do, that the latest corporate accounting scandal with WorldCom will not be the last. I hope it will be, but my fear is it will not be.

The Congress should address the critical issue of accounting reforms as quickly as we can. America's financial engine does not need a tuneup, it needs an overhaul. We must disassemble it in some ways, examine every nut, bolt, and working part, and reassemble it to reflect the days in which we live.

The fact is, if we fail to act on serious reforms, America will see a continuation of the dangerous and discredited corporate accounting practices that have, in the past 7 months alone, cost American shareholders and workers billions of dollars in their savings and pensions. This has deeply shaken investor confidence, and that serves as a cornerstone of our economic system.

It is important to note that in the dozens of hearings surrounding Enron's collapse, no committee has engaged in a more nonpartisan examination, focused not just on what went wrong with Enron but, far more important, what Congress can do to prevent future Enrons from occurring in the days ahead.

On March 8 of this year, Senator JON CORZINE and I introduced legislation, S. 2004, that addressed what we thought were some of the tough issues on improving regulatory oversight of the accounting profession and restoring investor confidence. I worked closely with the chairman, as did Senator CORZINE, to incorporate some of the language and spirit of S. 2004 in the legislation before us today.

I thank the chairman for including in the product before us much of what we wrote in S. 2004. I thank his staff, and I also thank my colleague from Wyoming.

Congress must act quickly. If nothing else, we must address the most prominent cause of the recent corporate scandals, the practices inherent and common to the accounting profession, and particularly the ability to audit a company's books while simultaneously providing other services to that same corporation. We saw this with Enron and Andersen. Now we see it with WorldCom and the pending investigations that have greatly contributed to the public's loss of confidence in our financial marketplace.

Since the beginning of the year, while our economy has been rebounding from last year's economic downturn and most economic indicators point to a bull market, the Nasdaq is down more than 20 percent, the Dow is down more than 3 percent, and trading volume has declined. One reason may be investor skepticism that companies are not as financially healthy as they have said they were. More restatements on corporate earnings have been filed in the past 7 months than in the last 10 years combined. Most of these restatements dramatically downgrade the financial health of the companies in question.

Not surprisingly, the public is quickly losing trust in disclosed corporate financial information. Although the investing public may be reacting to the bad behavior of a few, the possibility of conflicts of interest between accounting firms and the companies they audit creates a perception that this aggressive accounting is commonplace, even when it may not be. This perception, which takes on its own sense of reality, has led to a very dangerous, least-common-denominator thinking in which the estimated worth of all public companies may become undervalued because some are proven to be seriously overvalued.

The fact is, a few key reforms included in this bill can go a very long way toward shoring up the public's confidence in the integrity of America's financial marketplace.

Most importantly, to enhance auditor independence, the legislation restricts the ability of accounting firms to audit a company's books while simultaneously providing other services. It also addresses the revolving door through which executives from one firm leave to work for the companies they audit.

This reform legislation includes the creation of an independent body to oversee the accounting profession, with substantial authority to ensure auditor discipline and improve audit quality. The Securities and Exchange Commission will also be given the resources to hire more accounting "cops" to handle increasingly complex oversight responsibilities and improve the agency's investigative and disciplinary capabilities. The Government must be able to assure the public that audits meet the high standards of independence and objectivity that have been the hallmark of America's accounting profession.

The accounting profession is a great profession. There are thousands of highly qualified, talented, ethical people in the accounting profession. I feel for them at this hour. Because of the malfeasance and fraud committed by some, the many who work in this profession feel tainted by it. I regret that. The best way I know to recover the confidence people have in this profession is to provide some regulatory framework that would allow for auditor independence and for professionalism to be restored at a time when it has been so badly damaged.

Investors are depending upon us to act on this issue and set aside partisan conflicts. As I said, we should not dilute this legislation and make it far less important, less meaningful, or overburden it by trying to add too much to the bill. It is not an easy path to walk down. I urge my colleagues to listen to those of us who worked on this bill, particularly the chairman, as we try to balance the particular needs of our members and the desire to come up with a good, competent, bipartisan piece of legislation. This is not an easy path to walk down, but it is critically important if we are going to contribute to the restoration of investor confidence as part of our responsibilities as members of this historic Chamber.

The purpose of the original securities laws of the 1930s was to increase public trust in America's financial markets, the reliability of disclosed corporate financial information. The resulting openness and accuracy of corporate disclosures to the investing public paved the very way for America's rise as the unrivaled economic superpower that we had achieved. The collapses of Enron, WorldCom, and other corporations, and the accounting scandals have ended any question about whether these laws need reexamination. They do. We know that reforms are mostly needed to protect and strengthen the public trust in America's financial markets, and the time to enact them is now. I am confident and hopeful that we will do just that in the ensuing days.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I thank the very able Senator from Connecticut for his kind remarks about our work together on the committee as we tried to move this legislation forward. I particularly want to underscore the very substantial and significant contribution that the Senator from Connecticut and his colleague from New Jersey, Senator CORZINE, made when they came forward fairly early on in the process with S. 2004.

Much of that legislation is included in this legislation, and it was a seminal contribution early on in our consideration and it helped us to move ahead. I am grateful to him for that and for his efforts and support throughout this process as we have tried to move this legislation forward.

The Senator from Connecticut, of course, is a chairman of one of our subcommittees and has been enormously effective within the committee in his efforts on this legislation, and I appreciate that. I am very hopeful that we are going to get a good product at the end of the path—of course, we are not there yet—which the President will sign and which will make a substantial difference.

It is a tragedy, in a sense. The founder of the accounting firm Arthur Andersen was a man of great rectitude and very high principles. He had the slogan "think straight and talk straight" to guide him.

His successor, Leonard Spacek, also was a man of very high principle. For that company with those origins, in that tradition, to in effect have happen what has happened to it is a tragedy, there is no question about it.

We are anxious to reassure accountants all across the country that we think this legislation will help bring the profession back to the standards that marked it at an earlier time and which standards more thoughtful and more responsible members hope will mark it once again.

The point the Senator from Connecticut made in that regard is an interesting and important one.

Mr. DODD. I thank the chairman.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DODD). Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I begin by saying the Senator from Maryland has done this Senate and this country a great service, along with his colleagues, including the Presiding Officer, by writing legislation that addresses a critically important topic at a very important time in this country.

As much as I appreciate the work done on this bill, I would still like to speak about a few ways in which we can strengthen it. I listened with some attention in the last hour or so as I presided in the Senate to the suggestion that we ought not change it much. I do not disagree with that assessment, but we ought to change it some, in my judgment. There are some areas we can strengthen, and I hope we can strengthen this legislation and send it on to the President and have the expectation the President will sign it.

This Chamber has long been the site of debates about excesses and abuses, especially in America's poverty programs. We have heard over a couple of decades, and appropriately so, anecdotal stories about the Cadillac welfare queen who spends food stamp money to buy cigarettes. Congress has clamped down on all of that and said: Shame on you, you cannot do that, that is abusing the public trust. And it is. So we have taken aggressive action as we have seen these abuses.

Today this discussion is not about the abuse of the poverty program or the abuse at the bottom, this is about fraud in the boardroom; it is about abuse at the top. It is important for all of us to understand that accountability and responsibility do not just apply to poor people in this country, accountability and responsibility apply to everyone, and that includes the people at the top of the corporate structure.

I wish to talk about fraud in the boardroom, about deceiving investors, about cooking the books, about accounting firms that cannot account, about law firms that turn a blind eye. I wish to talk about the situations the country has seen in recent weeks and months that we have not seen for many decades in this country.

The victims, of course, are the people in this country who have invested in stocks, who believed in the certification of financial statements by some of the biggest accounting firms in the country that these were good corporations, that they had good income, that they were moving in the right direction, taking steps so that the funds in corporations were accounted for properly. And now we discover that was not necessarily the case in all too many instances.

Of course, there are a lot of wonderful corporations in this country, wonderful companies with terrific top executive officers who do the right thing, always do the right thing. Yes, they take some risks, but they do it in anticipation of gain for the stockholders. We ought not tarnish with the same brush all American corporations, but we ought to determine what is happening within some of these corporations that has caused the collapse and the devastation of a lifetime of savings for many Americans.

Let me use Enron as an example. We spent a fair amount of time with Enron hearings in the Commerce Committee. We had top executives of that company who had been cashing out prior to Enron going bankrupt. I have a chart that shows the way in which the top management of Enron made fortunes on the sale of Enron stock, from 1998 to the present, at the same time that they were driving their company into the ground.

Contrast this with a call I received from a fellow in North Dakota one day who said: I worked for Enron for a good number of years. I had a retirement plan, and all my retirement plan was in Enron stock. Mr. Lay and others repeatedly encouraged us to do that. My retirement plan was in Enron stock. It was worth $330,000. Now it is worth $1,700. He said: That is what happened to my life savings—$330,000 to $1,700.

What happened to the folks at the top of the ladder in Enron? Mr. Lay, the chairman of Enron, from 1998 to the present, sold $101 million worth of stock. That is what he received. Mr. Rice, $72.7 million; Mr. Skilling, $66.9 million; Mr. Fastow, $30 million.

Mr. Fastow was able to have an equity role in the special purpose entities, the off-the-books partnerships, and in one of them he actually invested $25,000 of his own money. He invested $25,000, and 2 months later paid himself $4.5 million. I do not know anybody who gets returns like that anywhere in America, except by cheating.

In the year 2001 in American corporations, the average pay for top CEOs increased by 7 percent, despite falling profits and stock values. Is there a relationship at the top between people who run the companies and the performance of the companies themselves? It does not look like it, does it?

In 1981, the average executive compensation of the top 10 highest paid CEOs was $3.5 million. In the year 2001, the average was $155 million. So we can see what has happened in this country at the top in the boardroom.

Let's look at the number of times that CEO pay exceeds average worker pay: In 1980, they made 42 times the pay of the average worker in the company. In 1990, they made 85 times the pay of the average worker in the company. But in the year 2000, it was 531 times. So forty-two-fold to five hundred and thirty-one-fold. That is what has happened to executive compensation at the top of the corporate ladder.

We have seen story after story about what is happening in some of the boardrooms. There are a lot of wonderful companies, and I do not think this ought to tarnish all American corporations, but we ought to be very concerned about what is happening inside some publicly traded corporations and why the safeguards have not been able to provide early warning to investors and others.

Adelphia: The drop in their stock value is 99 percent. The question is whether it failed to properly disclose $3.1 billion in loans and guarantees to the family of the founder.

Dynegy: Whether the Project Alpha transactions served primarily to cut taxes and artificially increase cashflow, 67 percent of their value lost.

Enron lost 99.8 percent of its value. In fact, as I have mentioned before, the Enron board of directors commissioned a report called the Powers Report which looked at only three partnerships, and they described what was happening inside this company was "appalling." The board of directors of the company itself said what was happening inside the company was appalling. They said that in one year they reported $1 billion of income they did not have.

Global Crossing: Whether it sold its telecom capacity in a way that artificially boosted 2001 cash revenue, 99.8 percent loss in value.

Halliburton: Whether it improperly recorded revenue from cost overruns on big construction jobs.

The list, of course, goes on.

Qwest: Whether it inflated revenue for 2000 and 2001 through capacity swaps and equipment sales.

On the weekend talk shows, I heard a panel discussion about this, and one of the panelists who is kind of an academician said the market is just adjusting. That is an antiseptic way, by an economist I suppose, to ignore the fact that families are losing their life savings.

Sure, the market is adjusting, but it means families are losing everything they have. It means investors with 401(k)s see that 401(k) shrink so their life savings are disappearing right before their eyes.

The question with all of these issues is: What has changed? Why, with big accounting firms taking a look at what is going on—and today there is a hearing on WorldCom in the House of Representatives—why, with big accounting firms looking over their shoulder, has this sort of thing occurred?

With Arthur Andersen and Enron, they had a $25 million relationship by which Arthur Andersen audited the Enron Corporation, and Arthur Andersen was also paid $27 million by the Enron Corporation for consulting services. That is one of the things that is at the root of this bill: Is that not a clear conflict of interest? Is there not enormous pressure on the accounting firm then to become an enabler for that corporation? The answer clearly is yes, and that is why this legislation takes action to deal with some of those issues.

I was driving in the car over the weekend in North Dakota and saw that the Xerox Corporation had a substantial restatement of earnings. It indicated that the SEC had previously taken a look at it and fined Xerox $10 million, which seems to me like pretty much a slap on the wrist when you consider the billions of dollars involved in the restatement. Then we hear this big story this weekend about yet another restatement. So what we have is a restatement, and then a restatement of the restatement of earnings.

What is the cause of all of this, and what is enabling it? With Enron, for example, it was an accounting firm that became an enabler; it was a law firm that became an enabler; it was CEOs who became greedy, officers of the corporation who did not pay much attention, who also, incidentally, were making a great deal of money selling stock, board members selling stock. It all became a carnival of greed.

I indicated, after having spent a lot of time looking at Enron, that there was a culture of corruption inside that corporation. The CEO of Enron took great exception to that, but it is clear every passing day, with more and more evidence of what happened inside that company, that there was in fact a culture of corruption.

How do we respond to that, and how do we deal with that? I think that, first of all, the rules have to be changed some, and that is what this legislation attempts to do. Second, even if there are changes in the rules, there must be an effective referee, a regulator. In this system of ours, we have to have effective regulation. And frankly, that has been lacking.

Mr. Pitt, who is the head of the SEC, I know has taken great exception to statements that have been made by my colleagues and myself. But the fact is that a system like this cannot work unless there is effective oversight and regulation, and that has been lacking.

Consider some of the statements that Mr. Pitt has made. This is Mr. Pitt speaking at the AICPA, which represents the accounting industry:

For the past two decades, I have been privileged to represent this fine organization and each of the big five accounting firms that are among its members. Somewhere along the way, accountants became afraid to talk to the SEC. Those days are ended.

That was to the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

Then Mr. Pitt, who is, again, the head of the SEC, said:

The agency I am privileged to lead has not, of late, always been a kinder and gentler place for accountants; and the audit profession, in turn, has not always had nice things to say about it.

So Mr. Pitt was concerned about ensuring a "kinder and gentler" SEC.

The New York Times did a story as a result of the initial speeches Mr. Pitt gave when coming to the SEC. It noted that Pitt "spoke favorably of pro forma earnings reports in ways that no doubt heartened accountants who have worked so hard to find ways to make even the worst profit figures look pretty."

It also noted that "A major embarrassment for accountants is having the SEC force a client to restate its numbers. Mr. Pitt and his chief accountant, Robert Herdman, are sending signals that fewer such demands will be made."

We can change the law, but if we do not have a tough, no-nonsense regulator, then it will not work.

We all watch basketball games, and we see referees. They are the ones who enforce the rules in basketball. We see a game from time to time where it is quite clear right at the start the referees are not going to call them close, and then pretty much it is "Katy bar the door," and things get out of hand. Then we see other games in which it is quite clear they are going to call up close, and nothing gets out of hand. The same is true with the attitude and mindset of Federal regulators. We have regulatory agencies for a purpose. That purpose is to enforce the rules. Fairly, yes, but also aggressively.

If someone who comes from that industry and says, I represented all of you, and suggests it will be a kinder and gentler place, I wonder whether that is the regulator we ought to have.

No matter who is heading the SEC, I want that person to be a fierce advocate on behalf of the rules that protect investors. I want someone that can make this system work and require everyone to own up to their responsibilities. So people who never enter a corporate office or know nothing about a corporation but who want to invest in American business, can buy a share of stock, having never met an officer of the company, having never visited the company, and can have confidence that what the accounting firm has said about that company, what the financial statements represent about that company, are absolutely fair and accurate.

That is the only way in which the American people can participate in the raising of capital for America's business. If we do not do that and do that quickly, we undermine the entire system by which we raise capital in this country. We undermine the entire system. That is why this piece of legislation is important and timely.

There are several amendments I would like to have considered, some I hope will be accepted, and some, perhaps, we will discuss at some length, and I may or may not prevail. There are some amendments that can strengthen and improve this legislation.

One of the provisions in the legislation calls for CEOs to return profits and bonuses they wrongfully reaped in the 12 months following a published earnings report that require a restatement. I would propose that this provision apply when a company goes bankrupt, as well. This idea has been endorsed by former SEC Chairman Richard Breiden, Goldman Sachs CEO Henry Paulson, and others.

There also ought to be some provision with respect to loans to CEOs by corporate boards of directors. I don't know what that limit ought to be, but I mentioned one corporation where over $3 billion was loaned to one family of the founder. This is a publicly traded corporation. I believe we ought to discuss that.

I may offer a provision dealing with something called inversion, a mechanism whereby some American corporations have decided they want to renounce their American citizenship and move their official headquarters to another country—Bermuda, for example. I want to be certain that CEOs of such companies cannot escape the requirement of this bill that they certify the accuracy of their financial statements. I do not think that, in addition to avoiding their fair share of U.S. taxes, these companies ought to be held to a lesser standard of reporting accuracy than U.S.-based firms. So I will offer an amendment, if needed, and visit with the chairman and the ranking member about that subject.

Another issue, one requiring disciplinary proceedings to be open to the public was discussed in committee. Transparency and having those hearings open to the public are important. I hope we can consider an amendment on that.

The other issue that was discussed in the committee at great length: What is the definition of the division of responsibilities between auditing and consulting? That definition, determined by the SEC or the Congress, is critical to determining whether there is a conflict.

Having said all that, let me say to the Senator from Maryland, we are in the Senate the first week after the Fourth of July. I listened to the Senators from Texas and Wyoming and Connecticut and others speak about this bill. This is a good start. If this legislation passed without one word changed, it would make a magnificent contribution to a problem we face, a gripping problem in this country.

Having said that, I do not subscribe to those on the committee who say not to change anything. That is not what the chairman said. There are some suggestions that will come from other parts of the Senate that can strengthen and improve this legislation, a couple of which I suggested. When it goes to conference with the House, we will have something we can be proud of.

The most important thing is to show to the investors in this country who have lost, in many cases, their life savings, that we are taking action to respond to the conditions that caused this to happen.

When we talk about the people at the top getting rich and the people at the bottom losing their life savings, the American people have every right to ask: By whose authority can this happen in this kind of economy? It cannot happen if the rules are fair. It cannot happen if the rules are enforced.

The American people have a right to expect the regulators, the SEC, and the Congress to take action now to address these issues.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLSTONE). The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I initially came to the floor to talk about this bill and another issue. The Water and Power Subcommittee of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee is holding a hearing on Wednesday, and I asked to testify about the views of Missouri on the Missouri River issue. Initially, the staff said I was not going to be able to testify, and I was going to therefore have to share my testimony with the entire body. However, I have now been advised by the chairman of the committee I will have an opportunity to testify, so I will save my comments for the committee hearing.

I thank the chairman for giving me that opportunity.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BOND. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DORGAN. Let me explain to the Senator what my hope was. The Senator asked to testify, quite properly. The Missouri River manual issue is a highly controversial issue. The Senator has been involved with it for some long while. We are having a hearings. The Corps of Engineers and many others are testifying. My hope had been we could hold a hearing with all of those groups, then have a separate meeting, hearing from all Members of Congress who want to testify. It appears that that will not be the case.

We will hear from Senators at the front end of that hearing. I assume it will take some time. As the Senator from Missouri knows, having indicated, yes, we would entertain his testimony, there are a number of other Senators who have already gotten in line saying, if that is the case, please hear my statement, as well. Of course we will.

It was never a case where we would not hear testimony. The question was whether we would have a separate hearing and hear Members of the Senate. I understand the Senator's concern. Senators DASCHLE, JOHNSON, CONRAD, CARNAHAN, and many, many other Senators have great concerns about this issue.

I will lose some sleep Tuesday night with great anticipation hearing your testimony on Wednesday morning.

Mr. BOND. I thank my good friend from North Dakota and assure him I hope to be brief and to the point. I am somewhat disappointed I will not share all that testimony with my colleagues, but there will be another opportunity.

I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for his kind indulgence.

Today I rise to join in expressing my concern about recent accounting practices in publicly held companies and their auditors. As a former State auditor, I have an interest in that profession being performed properly. Obviously, something is seriously broken. We hear about Enron, Global Crossing, WorldCom, and Arthur Andersen. The people of America are very concerned. We have seen millions of families with their investments diminished or even wiped out. That is not acceptable. The vast majority of investments were not in the volatile sectors, or not what we thought were the volatile sectors of the stock market. They were invested in the so-called blue chip companies. The families who made those investments on their strong belief in the integrity of our financial markets and accounting industry now find that because of corporate shams, accounting gimmicks, and inadequate auditing, they have lost significantly the investments they planned for education or retirement—for their families.

As far as we know, overall the overwhelming majority of publicly traded companies are in full compliance with corporate accounting standards. But the fact that there has been a significant deception by a handful of companies raises suspicions of all companies. In addition, we don't know how many others will come forward in coming weeks.

We must restore the public's confidence in the market. Without this, the economic recovery which should be beginning will remain elusive.

While much of the focus in the debate here and in the news media is on the auditing problems of the big conglomerate companies, unfortunately little attention has been paid in this bill to how the impact will fall on small publicly traded companies and small auditing firms. As the ranking member on the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, I have some concerns, after reviewing this bill, that we may be pushing ahead without considering the serious effect and the unintended consequences the bill could have on smaller firms—both small auditing firms and small publicly traded companies.

The bill is clearly targeted towards abuses in extremely large businesses, which we all think should be dealt with. I personally hope it will result in prison sentences for people who are proven to have committed criminal acts in their accounting activities.

But the SEC is not even aware of how many small auditing firms there are auditing small, publicly traded companies. There are some 2,500 small companies, and we believe many of them are audited by small- and medium-size auditing firms. For small auditors, the bill will require many new elements including registration, annual filing requirements, as well as partnership rotation of lead auditors. In addition, the bill would codify a list of banned services or nonauditing services that an auditing company might conduct for a company that it audits.

While some of these elements clearly are necessary to restore confidence, and I think are going to be dealt with by regulatory action and maybe even by the industry itself, no one knows how these requirements will affect the small firms. It has been argued that the bill allows for a case-by-case exemption, but that exemption process itself could be extremely costly and untimely for small firms and lead to inconsistent results.

I fear that some of these small auditing firms will not have the resources to implement these requirements and will stop auditing services or just go out of business. The result may be that small, publicly traded companies may not be able to obtain auditing services at reasonable cost. As a result, the bill might be setting up a hurdle for small companies to reach the public markets, one that is too expensive and too great to overcome.

Clearly, when we deal with the major problems we ought not cause significant problems for the smaller, growing entrepreneurial sector of our country.

As for publicly traded companies, the bill also places new requirements for auditing committees and for corporate responsibility. Again, many of these may be necessary. However, we need to look at how these requirements will affect the small, publicly traded companies.

The entrepreneurial spirit of our country is really the envy of the world. People know that entrepreneurship works in America. That is where we get the new ideas. That is where we get the growth. That is where we get the new services and the products. We should be careful as we adopt reforms not to put a disproportionate burden on these companies, dampening the entrepreneurial spirit or impeding access to the public markets.

I fully support accounting reform and the taking of steps necessary to restore investor confidence in the market. I think we should pass a balanced bill that will not overburden small firms and not create additional hurdles that will impede them from growing. We don't want an incidental consequence of this bill to be a monopoly of large accounting firms when it comes to corporate audits.

I agree with the other speakers that the American public is looking to us for answers. I intend to work to see that the needs of the small businesses, publicly traded small companies, and small auditing firms are protected. I am committed, and I think we all are committed, to restoring the public's confidence in the markets so families can feel safe once again in investing in America and in America's future.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to secure a balanced bill which will do that without bringing unnecessary hardship on the entrepreneurial sector of our economy.

I thank my colleague from Wyoming for the courtesy in allowing me to go ahead. I yield the floor.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, during the course of the Fourth of July recess, I traveled through Pennsylvania holding some 16 town meetings, and I found many concerns among my constituents: The issue of prescription drugs; the concern about what is happening with respect to Iraq; the issue of terrorism, which confronts the United States; the concern about what might happen on July 4; concern about the suicide bombers from the Palestinians terrorizing Israel.

But high on the list of public concern was what has happened with Enron, WorldCom, and many other companies on the stock exchange, where so many of my constituents in Pennsylvania—like tens of millions of Americans, really, and even more—have had their savings decimated in their retirement accounts of a variety of sorts. The issue that was raised consistently was: What happens next?

I think it is very good that the Senate is now considering legislation to deal with the fraudulent conduct that has plagued so many companies in corporate America. There is no doubt that there is a clear-cut conflict of interest for an accounting firm to be both an adviser and an auditor. An adviser has a close relationship with a company—call it cozy, or intimate, or friendly—but that is very different from the function of an auditor, which ought to be at arm's length, scrutinizing what the company has done. That kind of a conflict should certainly be prohibited in the future. If the accounting firms do not have enough understanding of the ethics, then laws have to be enacted, with very tough penalties to follow. When you find companies having so much debt off the books, subsidiary corporations, that is a matter of fraud. Fraud is a misrepresentation of a fact where someone relies to their detriment, and that is a crime. When you have companies putting expenses in, say, a capital account that shows billions of dollars in additional income or assets of the corporation, that too is fraud.

A good part of my career has been as an assistant DA and then as district attorney. I believe this kind of white-collar crime is certainly susceptible of deterrence, providing that standards are established and penalties are provided for a breach. It is my hope that from the Senate's current consideration, some very tough legislation will follow.

LOW MEDICARE REIMBURSEMENTS

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, for a considerable period of time, there have been a number of counties in Pennsylvania that have been suffering from low Medicare reimbursements, which have caused them great disadvantage because their nurses, their medical personnel, are moving to surrounding areas. I refer specifically to Luzerne County, Lackawanna County, Wyoming County, Lycoming County, Mercer County, and Columbia County in northeastern Pennsylvania. Those counties are surrounded by MSAs—metropolitan statistical areas—in Newport, New York, to the north; in Allentown to the southeast; and to the Harrisburg MSA to the southwest.

When these counties are so surrounded by—and a similar situation exists in Mercer County, which has higher rates in immediately adjacent areas—there has been a flight of very necessary medical personnel. Last year, in the conference on the appropriations bill covering the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, the conferees were in agreement that there should be relief for these areas in Pennsylvania that were surrounded by areas that had higher MSA ratings. At the last minute, word came from the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that there would be an objection to including language in our conference report because it was not included in either bill—in the House or in the Senate. That does make it subject to a point of order, so we had a discussion. I went to the office of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, and did my best to persuade him to make an exception in this case because of the extraordinary hardship. Senator BYRD, understandably, declined.

We then talked about bringing the matter forward in the supplemental appropriations bill. I thought it highly likely that, given the immediate history, we could accomplish this accommodation, this correction, in this appropriations bill. The House of Representatives came forward, and the House leadership on the Ways and Means Committee and the House leadership generally agreed with Congressman SHERWOOD, who represents these counties in northeastern Pennsylvania in the House of Representatives, and also Congressman PHIL ENGLISH, who represents Mercer County, that these were indeed meritorious—not that there were not other counties that had similar problems, but these counties were meritorious and should have a change in the MSA.

When the matter reached the Senate floor and I filed an amendment to have a similar result, there was resistance because, after all, it was in the House bill and it could be taken up in conference. It is custom on a matter that a colloquy was entered into between Senator BYRD and myself, and Senator BYRD said he would give every consideration to it in the conference.

It is true that there are other places in the United States that have problems, but I believe none is so pressing as what is occurring in these counties in Pennsylvania, as is evidenced by the fact that the leadership in the House of Representatives—as I say, the Ways and Means Committee chairman and the leadership of the House—agreed to these changes.

A week ago today, on July 1, I visited in Wilkes-Barre, PA, at the Gossinger Clinic, with representatives of the hospitals and went over with them the situation that had occurred and asked that they submit memoranda, which showed the extreme plight, which I could then share with my colleagues in the Senate, which I am now doing, and it will be in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for everyone to see.

With competing institutions located within a 30- to 60-minute drive from our front doors—and able to pay up to $4 per hour more to attract staff—the Greater Hazleton Health Alliance has experienced an out-migration of clinical staff to those areas.

In the last 18 months, 52 employees—including registered nurses, licensed practical nurses, pharmacists, radiology technologists and physical therapists—have resigned.

Then he goes on to say:

Nearly three-quarters of our inpatient population are Medicare recipients. It is often difficult for them to find reliable transportation to out-of-town healthcare facilities.

So they are serviced at Greater Hazleton causing these hardships and losses.

The senior vice president of operations at Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center, Conrad W. Schintz, wrote on July 3 as follows:

There are 10 vacancies in the support departments, such as laboratory and radiology. A significant factor in these vacancies is the higher wages and benefits that are paid in the Philadelphia and New York metropolitan areas that are within a 2.5 hour drive from our hospital.

Similar concerns were noted by the Community Medical Health Care System of Scranton, PA, where Dr. C. Richard Hartman, president and CEO, wrote a detailed memorandum, a part of which is as follows:

Community Medical Center Healthcare System's exit interviews with employees indicate greater opportunities outside the MSA.

The hospital currently has 67 openings, 45 full-time-equivalent positions, and further noted the problems with retaining nurses there.

Similar concerns were expressed in a memorandum from Mr. William Roe, vice president of finance for the Moses Taylor Health Care System, pointing out that "while 30 percent of all hospitals in Pennsylvania had negative total margins for the 3-year period between 1999 to 2001, nine (9) of the thirteen (13) hospitals located in this MSA have had negative total margins."

Then the memorandum from Mr. Roe goes on to point out the difficulties which have occurred as a result of out-migration of medical personnel.

Similar comments were made by Vice President William J. Schoen of Allied Services from Clarks Summit who points out:

Pocono and Allentown area hospitals are recruiting [our] workers by offering more generous wage and benefit packages.

Of course, that is made possible by the higher reimbursement because the MSA area is different.

A similar note was offered by Mr. James E. May, president and chief executive officer of Mercy Health Partners who pointed out:

The Scranton/Wilkes-Barre/Hazleton MSA is surrounded by facilities with significantly higher Medicare reimbursements.

The balance of his memo, which I will ask be printed in the RECORD, details further the difficulties which his hospital system faces.

The Wyoming Valley Health Care System, in a letter dated July 5 from Dr. William Host and Mr. Michael Scherneck, the president and chief executive officer and the senior vice president and chief financial officer point out the problems in retaining registered nurses because of the lower MSA which the Wyoming Valley Health Care System has.

CEO Robert Spinelli from Bloomsburg Hospital wrote to my executive director in Harrisburg, Andrew M. Wallace, dated July 3:

The current wage index rates have contributed to three years of deficit income, which has resulted in the inability to recruit qualified staff.

The Wayne Memorial Hospital, which is in the Newburgh, NY, area in a letter from director of finance, Michael J. Clifford, dated July 3 made the same point:

The increase in Medicare payments that would result from this change in MSA to Newburgh, New York, would mean approximately $450,000 of additional Medicare reimbursement for Wayne Memorial.

Tyler Memorial Hospital in Tunkhannock, PA, sent a memorandum expressing the same basic point.

A similar letter has been submitted by the Marian Community Hospital by Chief Financial Officer Thomas L. Heron from Carbondale, PA.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these memoranda and letters all be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

Mr. SPECTER. These letters set forth in some detail, Mr. President, which I will not take the time to read now, but the theme is the same. These are hospitals in great financial distress. These are hospitals which are serving an aging population in northeastern Pennsylvania. Similar circumstances exist in Mercer County. The way to correct this is to make the adjustment which is present in the House bill which can be accomplished by the Senate receding to the House position.

As I say, last year on our conference report, we had agreed among the conferees to make the adjustment, and then did not proceed in that way because there was a technical problem with the provision not having been included in either bill. But this year, the leadership of the House of Representatives has included these corrections for these areas, and now I call upon my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee to recede and I call upon my colleagues in the full Senate to approve a conference report which will include these very important corrections for these six counties in Pennsylvania which perform great service. But because of their being surrounded by other hospitals with MSAs, metropolitan statistical areas giving greater reimbursement, they cannot compete with nurses and other medical personnel.

POINTS FOR CONFERENCE COMMITTEE ON WAGE INDEX—BERNARD C. RUDEGEHR, GREATER HAZLETON HEALTH ALLIANCE

With competing institutions located within a 30- to 60-minute drive from our front doors—and able to pay up to $4 per hour more to attract staff—GHHA has experienced an outmigration of clinical staff to those areas.

In the last 18 months, 52 employees—including registered nurses, licensed practical nurses, pharmacists, radiology technologists and physical therapists—have resigned. More than half of them cited the opportunity to earn higher wages at other hospitals as the reason for their departure.

And though our staff is mobile and may be willing to commute up to an hour for a more lucrative position, our patient base is not.

Nearly three-quarters of our inpatient population are Medicare recipients. It is often difficult for them to find reliable transportation to out-of-town healthcare facilities.

As of July 1st, our malpractice insurance increased nearly 50 percent. Staff continues to find opportunities elsewhere, driven by higher wages and attractive sign-on bonuses. We have been forced to adjust salaries to stay competitive. That has had a significant impact on our bottom line—a $3.2 million loss in fiscal year 2000.

In this new age of domestic security awareness, our hospitals have become even more important fixtures in our communities. In the event of a tragedy or terrorist event (a nuclear power plant is located just miles away), our communities would look to our hospitals, not only as sources of emergency medical care, but as places of refuge, information and comfort.

Our elderly patients are the ones who need us most. Many of them toiled in the local coal mines and served our country in foreign wars. Their strong work ethic and love of country has often led to illness and injury that will plague them for the rest of their lives. This is a proud population that we are committed to caring for far into the future.

GEISINGER HEALTH SYSTEM,
Wilkes Barre, PA, July 8, 2002.

Senator ARLEN SPECTER,
Scranton, PA.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: Thank you very much for your continued work on the Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) Amendment Issue. This is a most important topic for the future well-being of hospitals in Northeastern Pennsylvania, including Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center.

There are a number of ways in which Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center is currently disadvantaged due to our region's rural designation for Medicare reimbursement.

Our area is losing a tremendous amount of health care professional talent to neighboring areas with urban classifications and higher wage and salary structures. RNs R Us advertised in the Wilkes-Barre last week specifically to transport nurses to both the Allentown and Philadelphia areas. Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center recently lost one registered nurse to the Philadelphia area and two registered nurses to Sacred Heart Hospital in Bethlehem for better wages.

Despite our intensive recruitment efforts over the past 6-12 months, it is obvious that we cannot recruit nurses from the Allentown/Bethlehem area due to the higher wages offered in that area.

Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center and other local hospitals have lost numerous nurses over the years to Philadelphia hospitals—where the nurses work two, 16 hours weekend shifts, receive full time wages and full time benefits.

Geisinger Wyoming Valley experienced a 47% increase in insurance costs from the previous year ($1.8 to $2.7 million).

Uncompensated Care for fiscal year 2002 (annualized May) at Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center is approximately $2.4 million. This includes charity care, bad debt and community services.

Reclassification of the MSA would result in an approximately $2 million Geisinger Wyoming Valley Medical Center. Such an improvement to our bottom line would allow us to further invest in providing excellent health care for the people of Northeastern Pennsylvania. Once again, thank you for your efforts on our behalf.

Sincerely,

CONRAD W. SCHINTZ,
Senior Vice President/Operations.

Re Wage Index (Medicare), Scranton/Wilkes Barre/Hazleton MSA, Financial Condition of Hospitals.

Senator ARLEN SPECTER,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: I want to thank you for your commitment expressed July 1, 2002 and your efforts on behalf of the hospitals in the Scranton/Wilkes Barre/Hazleton MSA relative to rectifying the Medicare Wage Index issue. As requested, and knowing of your active interest and efforts in attempting to find solutions to restoring the financial viability to the hospitals of Northeastern Pennsylvania, I am writing to you on the issue and request your continued assistance and support. The events of September 11 and bioterrorism threat have reinforced the need to ensure that the healthcare delivery system's infrastructure of Northeastern Pennsylvania, by virtue of its location to multiple major metropolitan areas, remains intact.

Nationally, operating margins of hospitals continue to exceed that of Northeastern Pennsylvania. The Voluntary Hospital Association's (VHA) HBS International benchmarking system is reporting a 3.7% operating return nationally and a 2.6% Mid-Atlantic Region for 2001. Pennsylvania continues to be viewed negatively on Wall Street, thus placing access to capital in jeopardy. Moody's short term forecast cites risk and uncertainty arising from the sector.

Healthcare providers here in Northeastern Pennsylvania have not received adequate, fair reimbursement under the Medicare Program. Our facilities have been and continue to be penalized for managing the costs of delivering healthcare in light of this. The May 2002 release from the Pennsylvania Health Care Cost Containment Council's Annual Report on the Financial Health of Pennsylvania's Hospitals regarding the Fiscal Year 2001 financial performance confirms this. According to the report, Pennsylvania's average operating margin is 2.1%. Region 6 facilities, which include Northeastern Pennsylvania and the majority of Scranton/Wilkes Barre/Hazleton MSA hospitals, collectively produced an average negative 1.51% operating margin, the worst in the Commonwealth.

As requested, I am providing you some specific information relative to Community Medical Center, Scranton, PA, and my concerns despite CMC's ability to continue to provide access to vital services to our community as of this date. CMC provides many tertiary and secondary services including being the Regional Trauma Center, and Cardiac Surgery, Neurosurgery, Neonatal Intensive Care Program, etc. CMC incurred a $3.1 Million operating loss during Fiscal Year 2001 and will be posting another year of operating losses this year. CMC's Net Patient Service Revenue Per Adjusted Discharge, when compared against similar facilities, is approximately $1,200 per adjusted discharge less. (Note: CMC's annual adjusted discharges approximates 20,000.) With respect to Medicare reimbursement above, CMC receives significantly less than others providing the same services in surrounding MSAs. The need to retain our talent critical to these highly specialized services cannot be underestimated.

Medicare—Base Rate: CMC's current Medicare Base Rate is $3,708; July 1, 1984's Medicare Base Rate was $3,421.

Net increase over 18 years to CMC: $287; 8.4% change over 18 years.

Re: Not kept pace with inflation, wage increases, technology etc. A comparison of all MSA's Base Rates (today vs 1984) would demonstrate Northeastern Pennsylvania's dilemma. In the material attached, you will find a graphical representation of CMC's Medicare Base Rate vs the Market Basket Increase. A lot has happened in healthcare since 1984.

In addition, the uncertainty surrounding the further regulations (HIPAA) effects of the new Outpatient Prospective Payment System and proposed less than Market Basket increases for FY 2003 make this initiative critical for NEPA.

I am disappointed to learn that without this "area adjustment", based on the Preliminary regulations (Federal Register Vol. 67, No. 90) and despite the collective efforts of the fiscal intermediary, and the hospitals in the Scranton/Wilkes Barre/Hazleton MSA, our Medicare Regional Wage Index, a critical variable in calculating Medicare reimbursements to providers in projected to not exceed the rural wage index for all of Pennsylvania (.8525).

The issues facing Northeastern Pennsylvania hospitals include:

Immediate financial pressures on "core operations", medical malpractice crisis. CMC's medical malpractice increase alone on the primary layer went from $512K to $1.2 Million on 9/1/01 and our carrier has exited writing medical professional liability insurance in our Commonwealth. In addition, number of our physicians (OB) have retired or left the state to practice elsewhere (e.g., Neurosurgery) as a result of the increases. We are concerned with what we face I just over 2 months (anticipate > 100% increase) in addition to the continued exportation of talent.

Labor/Wage pressures as a result of shortages, retention needs, and an industry need to attract talent. CMC's exit interviews with employees indicate greater opportunities outside the MSA. For example, a significant number of vacancies exist at CMC. Currently CMC has 67 openings (45 FTEs). CMC's RN vacancy rate is 18%. Recruitment activity from outside the MSA is commonplace. CMC has seen a 15% RN turnover rate.

Dramatic reductions (greater than 2x anticipated) in Medicare reimbursement along the delivery continuum as a result of the Balance Budget Act ("BBA") of 1997 with a partial return of the excess reduction retrieved through the Balanced Budget Refinement Act and BIPA.

Managed Care ("cost") pressures on operating margins through a variety of techniques including the domination of few payers, utilization management, and further reimbursement pressures.

Soaring pharmaceutical expenditures and new technological introductions at a rate far in advance of appropriate reimbursement recognition with little supply side pricing constraints.

An increase in uncompensated care being provided by our hospitals, in particular our Trauma Center. In addition, access to services such as CMC's trauma services, given the malpractice crisis, for our community is threatened. CMC has incurred in excess of $5 Million in uncompensated care year-to-date.

Employer Health Insurance premium cost are increasing in the double digit ranges (Financing Side of the System) with limited or no relief to hospitals (Delivery System) as providers of care for such cost exigency.

The financial market's performance that its effect on earnings and cash reserves of the organization directly limiting our ability to plan for and reinvest in facilities, etc.

In closing, thank you for the opportunity to express my concerns for our delivery system and allowing the expression of the desire that a fair, adequate return be provided to hospitals, specifically here in Northeastern Pennsylvania, which have served the residents of Northeastern Pennsylvania with quality, cost effective healthcare. The economic impact of the healthcare system on Northeastern Pennsylvania is significant.

As you have seen day in and day out, our healthcare delivery system in Northeastern Pennsylvania is undergoing rapid change and challenges. As such, time is of the essence within this marketplace. I look forward to your support and successful outcome in the Conference Committee. Feel free to contact me should you require further information.

Sincerely,

C. RICHARD HARTMAN,
President/CEO.

MEMO

ReMSA Amendment

Senator ARLEN SPECTER.

Several important factors highlight why the thirteen hospitals located in the Wilkes-Barre Scranton Hazleton-MSA need relief. Reports produced by the Pennsylvania Health Care Cost Containment Council (PCH4) and the American Hospital Association indicate that all of the hospitals are very efficient and effective healthcare institutions. Despite that fact this region has suffered losses substantially above both the state and national level.

The Financial Analysis of all Pennsylvania Hospitals is a report produced by PHC4. The most recent report shows that while thirty (30) percent of all hospitals in Pennsylvania had negative total margins for the three year period between 1999-2001, nine (9) of the thirteen (13) hospitals located in this MSA have had negative total margins.

Every hospital in the MSA has had a negative operating margin over that period. These losses are causing a significant reduction in the capital base of the institutions in this MSA. An MSA where over 45% of the Net Patient Revenues are provided by Medicare patients.

In terms of the total labor expense per adjusted inpatient day, the MSA is 25% below the national average and 22% below the state average. (MSA—$826.92, United States—$1,102.61, Pennsylvania—$1,052.53).

In terms of total full time equivalent personnel compared to volume the MSA also compares favorably. The MSA utilizes 15% less FTE's than the nation and 12% less than the state. (MSA—4.01 fte's per adjusted occupied bed, United States 4.61, Pennsylvania 4.52).

This MSA has very efficient, very effective hospitals (see the Hospital Performance report published by PHC4) that are losing significant amounts of money while serving the Medicare population.

In addition to losing significant amounts of capital, the MSA like the nation is undergoing a nursing shortage. Every institution in the MSA has a number of open nursing positions, especially RN's. The situation is exacerbated by the fact that most if not all of the adjacent MSA's advertise locally for nurses. Ads appear on a regular basis from Allentown, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, and Monroe County each extolling the fact that they can offer higher wages. This has forced the local hospitals to use agency nurses at considerable expense.

As I am sure, you are aware CMS recognizes that there are issues with the data used for the wage index. For one example most if not all hospitals in our MSA, employ their own dietary and housekeeping personnel and provide benefits to these positions. This decision actually hurts our wage index number as many other areas of the country now contract for those services. Quoting from the Federal Register of May 9th page 31433, "Therefore, excluding the costs and hours of these services if they are provided under contract, while including them if the services are provided directly by the Hospital, creates an incentive for hospitals to contract for these services in order to increase their hourly wage for wage index purposes." I do not believe that the Congress intended the wage index to drive low hourly rate employees off hospital payrolls.

There are other examples including the amount and type of administrative personnel that affect the wage index. We believe that several of the proposed alterations to the data collection process for the wage index will help to address some of those concerns. However, our MSA cannot wait for these measures to take effect, the wage index currently lags 3 to 4 years behind the current data. Any substantive change will take at least 5 to 7 years to make an impact on the payments to our MSA. We need help now.

Thank you for your efforts in this regard.

WILLIAM ROE,
Vice President of Finance.

ALLIED SERVICES,
Clarks Summit, PA, July 1, 2002.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

SENATOR SPECTER: The following are some information points regarding the wage index and how a re-classification would aid Allied Services:

As northeastern Pennsylvania's largest rehabilitation medicine provider, Allied experiences a high volume of patients covered under Medicare. This, coupled with a low wage index rate, impacts Allied's ability to recruit and retain healthcare workers. Re-classification to the Newburg, NY, MSA would provide over $6 million in additional funds while re-classification to Allentown adds over $3 million for use in employee recruitment/retention programs.

Pocono and Allentown area hospitals are recruiting NEPA workers by offering more generous wage and benefit packages. This is being promoted through ads in local newspapers, on radio stations and on billboards. This impacts our workers as recruitment for healthcare workers is extremely difficult. This problem is further exacerbated when competing providers recruit away workers thanks to their higher wage rate reimbursements.

Despite staff shortages, the need to provide services continues to be high. This is particularly so given the large elderly population in northeastern Pennsylvania. A wage rate re-classification is a fair way to "level the playing field" for healthcare providers.

In 2001, Allied Services provided $2,751,610 in charity care/uncompensated care and governmental subsidy. Services are provided without regard to patients' abilities to pay. This impacts Allied's financial health.

Hopefully, this helps outline some important points regarding the wage index issue. All of us here thank you for your work on this issue and stand ready to assist in helping you achieve a successful conclusion.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM J. SCHOEN,
Vice President.

MERCY HEALTH PARTNERS,
Scranton, PA, July 3, 2002.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: I want to thank you and Congressman Sherwood for meeting with the representatives of all the hospitals in Northeastern Pennsylvania on June 1, 2002. Your continual efforts in seeking a resolution to our Medicare wage index problem, and in particular your support of Congressman Sherwood's amendment to the 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Bill, is critical for the survival of our hospitals.

The Scranton/Wilkes-Barre/Hazleton MSA is surrounded by facilities with significantly higher Medicare reimbursement. Our hospitals have struggled for many years now with an unfair Medicare reimbursement rate. We at Mercy have continued to lose health professionals to other regions around us. On a weekly basis our local newspapers carry employment ads recruiting these individuals from our facilities as well as local colleges and universities outside our area. An example of these ads are attached for your review. Even billboards have sprung up within our MSA such as the one discussed in the November 11, 2001 Times Leader. I have attached this as well to illustrate our point.

Our problem will further deteriorate when the proposed Fiscal Year 2003 wage indexes based on our 1999 fiscal year that we were published in the May 2002 Federal Register are finalized in September 2002. Our MSA has once again fallen below the Pennsylvania rural rate. This has occurred from 1999 through 2001, a period when employment expenses have risen 14%.

This will put even greater pressure on our institutions which in turn jeopardizes the quality of care that our institutions provide to our communities in general and our large Medicare age population in particular.

This reduction could not come at a worse time. Per the most recent Pennsylvania Cost Containment Council Financial Analysis. Our region, Region 6-Northeastern Pennsylvania, had the worst operating margin of all Pennsylvania Hospitals—1.51% and a total margin at -0.23%. I have attached this report for your review as well.

These statistics are even more eye-opening when you compare them to national averages. The average total margin for hospitals across the country is 4.5% based on the latest American Hospital Association data in conjunction with the Center for Medicare Services.

In closing, I would like to once again emphasize the importance of this legislation and its impact on the Mercy Health System. Listed below is our Net Operating Income for our last three fiscal years and the first five months of 2002.

May 2002 ($2,582,000).

These net operating losses couples with competition in recruitment from surrounding areas make it imperative that this legislation be passed.

Thank you again. I hope this information will be helpful as you work on our behalf.

Sincerely,

JAMES E. MAY,
President and Chief Executive Officer.

WYOMING VALLEY, HEALTH CARE SYSTEM, WILKES-BARRE GENERAL HOSPITAL,
Wilkes-Barre, PA, July 5, 2002.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: On behalf of Wyoming Valley Health Care System, Its Board of Directors, and the entire Wilkes-Barre/Scranton community, we would like to thank you for the efforts that you, Representative Sherwood, and your respective staffs have committed to addressing the disparity caused by the Medicare wage index.

While you certainly have developed an appreciation for the challenges facing the hospitals in our region, we would like to share with you the following points that we believe are relevant to our situation:

WVHCS-Hospital (comprised of Wilkes-Barre General Hospital and Nesbitt memorial Hospital), the largest provider in both the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre Metropolitan Statistical Area and the Northeastern Pennsylvania region (Region 6) as defined by the Pennsylvania Health Care Cost Containment Council (HC⁴), has suffered operating deficits in each of the fiscal years since the year ended June 30, 1998. The smallest operating deficit was $5,542,000 in 1998, and the operating loss for the year just ended is expected to exceed $10,000,000.

In the face of adversity, our Hospital has done everything possible to manage the extent of those losses, including numerous staff reductions. The total number of paid full time equivalents (FTE's) for 1998 was 2,708 FTE's. As of May 31, 2002, that figure had dropped to just over 1,809 FTE's, a reduction of almost 900 FTE positions.

Medicare beneficiaries account for almost 3/4's of the inpatient days within our Hospital. Furthermore, the Medicare payment program has become the basis for several other payment programs in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, including auto insurance and workers compensation services. There is no opportunity for a shortfall in Medicare payments to be absorbed by other payers, which had led to our significant operating deficits.

Luzerne and Lackawanna counties have the highest concentration of Medicare beneficiaries of all counties throughout the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania with populations of 200,000 residents or greater. And, the proportion of Medicare beneficiaries within those counties are among the highest of any major county throughout the country.

Based upon data presented by the HC⁴ for the 2001 fiscal year, seven of nine regions within Pennsylvania enjoyed positive operating results ranging from 0.81% (Northwestern Pennsylvania) to 3.75% (Lehigh Valley). Altoona area hospitals experienced a slight operating deficit of -0.27%. Most notable in the most recent HC⁴ release was the fact that hospitals in Northeastern Pennsylvania were faced with operating deficits averaging -1.51% of revenue.

Of the 13 hospitals within our metropolitan statistical area, the four largest providers experienced operating deficits ranging between -2.56% and -4.81%. Five of the remaining nine hospitals also experienced significant operating deficits.

As the largest hospital in Luzerne County, and sponsor of a very active family practice residency program, WVHCS-Hospital provides a significant amount of free care. For the year just ended, it is estimated that WVHCS-Hospital provided uncompensated care valued at over $6,000,000. In addition, there were almost 18,000 patient encounters within our family practice residency program, the majority of which were to Medical Assistance or other uninsured/underinsured patients who otherwise would have ended up in emergency rooms.

Under the current rules, Medicare applies the wage index to about 71% of the average hospital's non-capital cost pool. Based upon our calculations, the portion of our costs to which that index should be applied is estimated to be far less, approximately 58%. The result is that areas like ours, where the wage index is less than 1.00, are paid less than cost for a portion of their supply expenses.

For the 2002 fiscal year, we have experienced registered nurse (RN) staffing turnover approximating 15% of our total RN pool. This is driven by the fact that the average wage rate which we can afford to offer for a registered nurse is $20.28, well below other contiguous metropolitan statistical areas. In addition, the current vacancy rate for certified registered nurse anesthetists is 25%. Despite the fact we operate one of the largest and most successful schools of nurse anesthetists in the nation, surrounding areas are paying $5 to $6/per hour more than our region.

Registered nurses are not the only area of need with which we are faced. For example, radiology/imaging technologists are earning (an average hourly rate of $14.88, again, well below other nearby metropolitan statistical areas). The result is that for the first half of 2002, we have experienced almost 20% turnover in imaging technicians, particularly in the areas of nuclear medicine, CT scanning, magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) and general radiology services.

Without additional relief, we are losing staff to surrounding communities!

In addition to these labor related pressures, we are faced with other issues affecting costs including the malpractice insurance crisis, bioterrorism preparedness, as well as, added regulatory requirements under the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA). While it is not our intention to redirect wage-related reimbursements to those areas, the fact remains that the amount of funds which we will have available to address our staffing needs will be even further limited.

Once again, we would like to thank you, Representative Sherwood, Representative Kanjorski, Senator Santorum and each of your respective staffs for all of the efforts which you have put into this important cause. In particular, we would like to thank you and Representative Sherwood for spending time with representatives from area hospitals on Monday, July 1, 2002.

We look forward to hearing from you as to when the conference committee hearings will be scheduled as we would like to be present to represent our community and this critical issue.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM R. HOST,

President and Chief Executive Officer.
MICHAEL D. SCHERNECK,
Senior Vice President and Chief Financial Officer.

THE BLOOMSBURG HOSPITAL,
Bloomsburg, PA, July 3, 2002.

Memo to: Andrew M. Wallace, Executive Director, Northeast Region.

From: Robert J. Spinelli, CEO, The Bloomsburg Hospital, Bloomsburg, PA.

The Medicare Reimbursement issue currently debated is extremely important for The Bloomsburg Hospital. As a community hospital located in Northeast Pennsylvania, the current wage index rates have contributed to three years of deficit income, which has resulted in the inability to recruit qualified staff. In addition, our hospital has had to furlough individuals and not fill positions as vacancies become available.

Your help in this wage index change is greatly appreciated. Thank you.

I will be available to attend the Conference Committee meeting. Please contact me.

WAYNE MEMORIAL HOSPITAL,
Honesdale, PA, July 3, 2002.

Senator ARLEN SPECTER,
Scranton, PA.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: Thank you for holding the briefing on the Medicare reimbursement issues and the Wage Index issue in particular. We truly appreciate all your efforts on our behalf to assure that Medicare Reimbursements to providers of services are adequate.

I am summarizing a few of the issues facing us in our fiscal 2003, which began on Monday, July 1, 2002, the same day as your briefing.

We are anticipating an increase in our Medicare payment rate of approximately 3% effective with the beginning of the next federal fiscal year on 10-1-02. The increase is based on a Market Basket increase less .55%, as I recall has been the reduction factor over the last several years. Medicare is saying that, inflation is running 3.55% and we'll give you a 3.00% increase in rates. This makes it extremely difficult to keep net revenues above expenses when by definition, expenses are increasing faster than revenue or rates. Capital costs are included in this same methodology. Wayne Memorial is currently in a planning process that may well identify the need to spend capital dollars. Medicare reimbursement will not change as a result of this capital project and the proposed increase for fiscal 2003 will make it difficult to cover additional debt service on any new debt that may be required.

We have also recently absorbed an 80% increase in our annual General and Professional liability (malpractice) insurance premium that must be paid from this 3% increase from Medicare. We are facing serious physician recruitment issues related to the malpractice crisis here in Pennsylvania, as well. The increase in our malpractice premium will total over $725,000 on an annual basis. The increase in Medicare payments that would result from this change in MSA to Newburg, New York would mean approximately $450,000 of additional Medicare reimbursement for Wayne Memorial.

I want to thank you again for your hard work on these serious issues facing healthcare providers in Pennsylvania and hope that all of our efforts, together, can move us toward a Medicare payment system that is more adequate.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL J. CLIFFORD,
Director of Finance.

Mr. SPECTER. In the absence of any other Senator seeking recognition, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, are we in a period of morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are not.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to a period for morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FOURTH OF JULY DEDICATION OF THE LOVELL VETERANS MEMORIAL CENTER

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, all of us are just returning from the Fourth of July recess. It is a grand time, I am sure, across the United States. It was particularly a grand time in Wyoming. I get to go to a lot of parades and fairs and rodeos. It is really our only time outdoors to get a little bit of suntan that, unfortunately, goes from the wrist to the tip of the fingers, and the neck up. But it is a grand time. I want to share with my colleagues one of the adventures of this Fourth of July recess.

I got to be in a place called Lovell, WY. It is in the northern part of Wyoming. They had a dedication of a veterans memorial center that features a huge mural that includes pictures from all of the wars in which we have participated. The mural goes down into a rocky beach that contains rocks from different wars that we have been in as well. They had a dedication of this veterans memorial center.

The dedication was also attended by Commander Lovell, whose town is now his namesake. That is the Lovell of Apollo 13 fame and ingenuity.

Of course, it reminded me of that time in 1957 when the United States realized that we were behind in all of the scientific races. It challenged many of us to improve education in the United States. I think that continues today. The United States met that challenge. I remember when Sputnik went up I was appalled and I immediately became one of those rocket boys, one who was anxious to learn as much about science and space as possible.

I am pleased to say the Explorer Post that I was in launched a rocket with electronic ignition the second time we did it. We also learned on the first one that you have to clear that with the FAA so you don't shoot down airplanes. There have been a lot changes in that.

I got to go to this parade and dedication of the mural. It was very patriotic. At the beginning, as they unfurled this new flag on a huge new pole, we did say the Pledge of Allegiance. There was a reaction to the previous Wednesday's Ninth Circuit announcement because when the words, "under God" were said, they were louder than the whole rest of the pledge, just as an affirmation that the people of Wyoming were upset with the decision that had been made. But it was that kind of event that makes your heart swell and brings tears to your eyes.

There was a song about heroes sung by elementary students. It reminded me that community, and communities across this country, are made up of heroes. Heroes are just ordinary people who do extraordinary things. Fortunately, in America we have a lot of those.

We are in a rapidly changing world. In April, I had an opportunity to go over to Russia with three interpreters. We worked on an international agreement of cooperation on controlling weapons of mass destruction, on export controls. That meeting was a tremendous shock for me. All the time I was growing up, Russia was our enemy—the Soviet Union where the people were out to get us. I was sitting across the table from their equivalent of the Senate and House talking about cooperation.

I also had an opportunity to meet with some small businessmen while I was over there. I think it was an even bigger shock for them to be talking to a capitalist about free enterprise. I think we will learn a lot from each other as the world changes.

I have to tell you that the people in Russia today have a tremendous amount of respect for us. Part of it comes from the action the United States took in Afghanistan. We did in 1 month what Russia wasn't able to do in 7 years. That did get us some respect.

The rest of the world anticipates that the reason we are able to do things such as that is the tremendous technology we have, the inventions and weapons we have developed. Some people think it is because of this capitalism, of businesses—and businesses deserve tremendous applause for the role they have played.

Since there was a parade that day and a lot of Tootsie Rolls were thrown out to the kids along the streets, it reminded me that Tootsie Rolls had been a part of every war since World War II.

That company has donated Tootsie Rolls. It is one of those chocolates that don't melt in the heat. For Afghanistan, they donated eight semis loaded with Tootsie Rolls. But I also heard about a little event that happened in Korea. They used to be able to call in the plane, and the plane would dump Tootsie Rolls on little parachutes. But one day, they got a little confused on the code word, and when a bombing run was called in on North Korea, they used Tootsie Rolls for the code word for it, and the North Koreans had Tootsie Rolls dropped on them.

We have businesses that participate in all kinds of ways in making sure our country is a better country. But what they usually miss in all of the discussions about why America is great doesn't have to do with technology. It doesn't have to do with capitalism. It has to do with the people. As a people, we have developed over the years of our existence the promotion to the rest of the world of the kind of government that works, and that has worked better and longer than any other government. But it isn't the Government either. It is the people. We have people who have values, enthusiasm, ideas, and community.

That came out on September 11. On September 11, there were a lot of people around the world who were pretty sure there was a major tragedy which hit this country and that we would fall apart. Instead, what they saw was America coming together. We came together with a sense of community which they didn't expect, with patriotism that has been unequalled, I think, in our history, with voluntarism, and, most of all, faith. Those are the things that make us different from the other countries. Those are the things that have made us great.

It is exciting to have an opportunity to participate in ceremonies, such as the Lovell Veterans Memorial Center dedication.

I ask unanimous consent that the speech of MG Ed Boenisch, Adjutant General of the Wyoming Military Department, given at that dedication be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEDICATION—LOVELL VETERANS MEMORIAL CENTER, JUNE 29, 2002

SPEECH BY MAJ GEN ED BOENISCH, ADJUTANT GENERAL, WYOMING MILITARY DEPARTMENT

I'm honored to be here sharing the podium with an astronaut. I'm proud to be here with proud civic leaders, citizens and veterans who make dreams a reality.

Today renews my hope and faith in the spirit of America and in our great flag and the freedoms it represents. This spectacular memorial is a fitting honor to the men and women who sacrificed so we can be here today, free and safe.

Today is 29 June 2002. It's been 291 days since terrorists attacked our country. Remember all the innocent civilians who were killed that terrible day. It's been 265 days since we began our Global War on Terrorism. Remember the 51 U.S. military men and women who have died in that war. Remember all those who are deployed today, fighting our War on Terrorism so our country and our world can be safe for our children and our grandchildren.

I am so encouraged when I see the spirit of Americans manifested in displays of patriotism, respect and remembrance, especially with a beautiful and permanent display such as this Lovell Veterans Memorial Center.

Thank you for having such a grand and beautiful dream! Thank you for your financial contributions and hard work to make this a reality. Thank you for remembering!

May God bless you!

May God bless America!

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the speech which Commander Lovell gave at that ceremony be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEDICATION OF VETERANS MEMORIAL CENTER, JULY 29, 2002, LOVELL, WYOMING

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: My son Jay and I want to thank the people of Lovell for the wonderful hospitality we received during our visit—and it is an honor for me to say a few words in the dedication of Veterans Memorial Center honoring the men and women who served in our Armed Forces.

In 1944, Journalist Ernie Pyle wrote these words to describe the beginning of the Normandy invasion.

"Darkness enveloped the whole American armada. Not a pinpoint of light showed from those hundreds of ships as they surged on through the night toward their destiny, carrying across the ageless and indifferent sea tens of thousands of young men, fighting for . . . for, well, at least each other. For Americans, these words paint a picture of the fear and confusion surrounding soldiers on the eve of battle. Yet, they also impart the sense of determination those young men must have felt. Through his words, Ernie Pyle puts us in touch with our understanding of who we are and how we came to be a nation.

Even more, these words impel us to remember the cost of bringing America this far and also forces us to admit the price is not yet paid in full. This is what the dedication of the Veteran's Memorial symbolizes—when the people of Lovell can take a clear look at both your past and your future. And acknowledge the debt we owe to those men and women who—because they so cherished peace—chose to live as warriors.

Could anything be more contradictory than the lives of our servicemen? They love America, so they spend long years in foreign lands or at sea far from her shores. They revere freedom, so they sacrifice their own that we may be free. They defend our right to live as individuals, yet yield their individuality in that cause. Perhaps most paradoxically of all, they value life, and so bravely ready themselves to die in the service of our country.

For more than 220 years our military has provided a bastion against our enemies. In that time, our world has changed and our armed forces have changed with it, but the valor, dignity, and courage of the men and women in uniform remain the same. From Valley Forge to Enduring Freedom, from San Juan Hill to Pearl Harbor, the fighting spirit of the American Serviceman permeates the history of our nation.

The founders of the United States understood that the military would be the rampart from which America would guard its freedom. George Washington once stated, "By keeping up in Peace a well regulated and disciplined militia, we shall take the fairest and best method to preserve for a long time to come the happiness, dignity and Independence of our country." The prophecy of those words has been fulfilled time and again.

The cost of that vision has been tremendous, for the periods of peace our country has enjoyed are few. The longest time of complete tranquility for our armed forces was the 23 years between World Wars One and Two. Since the Revolutionary War, more than 42 million men and women have served in America's military. More than 600,000 of those dauntless, selfless warriors died in combat.

But why are we so seemingly willing to fight and, if need be, to die? The answer to that question is as simple—and yet as complex—as the soul of America itself. We fight because we believe. Not that war is good, but that sometimes it is necessary. Our soldiers fight and die not for the glory of war, but for the prize of freedom. And, the heart of America is freedom, for ourselves and all nations willing to fight for it. Yes, the price is high, but freedom is a wealth no debt can encumber.

But, what of the soldiers whose death has brought the liberty of our nation? Soldiers who did not even enjoy the status of veteran? They were all different; yet share a sameness that is deeper than the uniform they wore. They were black, white, man, woman, Hispanic, Indian, Asian, Catholic, Jewish, Protestant, Buddhist, Muslim, and a hundred other variations and combinations. What is most important—regardless of race, creed, color, or gender—they were American.

These courageous men and women, each so different in heritage and background, shared the common bonds of the armed forces—duty and sacrifice. All of them reached a moment in their lives when race and religion, creed and color made no difference. What remained was the essence of America—the fighting spirit of a proud people. They are servicemen who paid the price for freedom.

As we dedicate this memorial to the brave veterans of the past, we must also look to the future. In today's world, of terrorism freedom comes cloaked in uncertainty. America still relies on her sons and daughters to defend her liberty. The cost of independence remains high, but we are willing to pay it. We do not pay it gladly, but we pay it with deep reverence and thanks to those who have sacrificed their lives for America. We know that in the years to come, more brave souls will sacrifice their lives for America. We should include them in our thoughts when we view this symbol of freedom.

Let me conclude my remarks by reading a few excerpts from a letter that exemplifies why we honor our people in uniform. It was written by Sullivan Ballou, a Major in the 2nd Rhode Island volunteers, to his wife Sarah a week before the battle of Bull Run.

Dear Sarah: The indications are very strong that we shall move in a few days—perhaps tomorrow. Lest I should not be able to write again, I feel impelled to write a few lines that may fall under your eye when I am no more. Our movements may be of a few days' duration and full of pleasure—and it may be one of some conflict and death to me. If it is necessary that I should fall on the battlefield for my Country, I am ready.

I have no misgivings about, or lack of confidence in the cause in which I am engaged, and my courage does not halt or falter. I know how American Civilization now leans on the triumph of the Government, and how great a debt we owe to those who went before us through the blood and sufferings of the Revolution. And I am willing—perfectly willing—to lay down all my joys in this life, to help maintain this Government, and to pay that debt.

Sarah my love for you is deathless, and yet my love of Country comes over me like a strong wind and burns me unresistably on to the battlefield.

The memories of the blissful moments I have enjoyed with you come crowding over me, and I feel most gratified to God and to you that I have enjoyed them so long. And it is hard for me to give them up and burn to ashes the hopes of future years, when God willing, we might still have lived and loved together, and seen our sons grown up to honorable manhood. If I do not return my dear Sarah, never forget how much I love you, and when my last breath escapes me on the battle field, it will whisper your name. Forgive my many faults, and the many pains I have caused you. How thoughtless and foolish I have often been.

But, O Sarah! If the dead can come back to this earth and flit unseen around those they loved, I shall always be near you; in the brightest days and in the darkest nights, always, and if a soft breeze falls upon your cheek, it shall be my breath, as the cool air fans your throbbing temple, it shall be my spirit passing by. Sarah do not mourn me dead; think I am gone and wait for me, for we shall meet again.

Sullivan Ballou was killed a week later at the First Battle of Bull Run.

That is why I am proud to be in Lovell, today to participate in the dedication of the Veteran's Memorial honoring the men and women who served our country.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I know it was a great day across America when we celebrated the Fourth of July. I look forward to the future Fourth of July and the daily events when patriotism and community and faith are shown in our country.

TRIBUTE TO CAPTAIN (SELECT) BENNY G. GREEN, U.S. NAVY

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to recognize and say farewell to an outstanding Naval Officer, Captain Benny Green, upon his change of command from Special Boat Unit Twenty-Two. Throughout his career, Captain Green has served with distinction. It is my privilege to recognize his many accomplishments and to commend him for the superb service he has provided the Navy, the great State of Mississippi, and our Nation.

Captain Green enlisted in the Navy in September 1972. After an initial tour at the Aircraft Intermediate Maintenance Department at Barbers Point, Hawaii, he attended Basic Underwater Demolition/SEAL Training in Coronado, California, and graduated with class 83, for further assignment to SEAL Team One. Captain Green received a Bachelor of Science Degree from the University of Louisville in 1980, and was commissioned an Ensign in 1981. He attended flight school at Pensacola Naval Air Station and upon graduation was assigned to Fighter Squadron Eleven at Naval Air Station, Oceana, VA as a Radar Intercept Officer. He flew numerous combat missions over Lebanon in response to the 1983 terrorist bombing attack of the Marine Barracks in Beirut. In February 1985, Captain Green returned to the Special Forces and was assigned to SEAL Team Four, in Little Creek, VA, as the Platoon Commander of the newly formed Sixth Platoon. In his next assignment, Captain Green was a plank owner of SEAL Delivery Vehicle Team One Detachment Hawaii, on Ford Island, Oahu, HI, where he served as Dry Deck Shelter Platoon Commander. Other operational tours in Naval Special Warfare include: Dry Deck Shelter Department Head, SEAL Delivery Vehicle Team Two; Operations Officer, SEAL Delivery Vehicle Team Two; Maritime Special Purpose Force Commander for Central Command Amphibious Ready Group 3-91; Executive Officer, SEAL Delivery Vehicle Team Two; Naval Special Warfare Task Unit Commander for the Theodore Roosevelt Battle group 1-96; Operations Officer, Naval Special Warfare Group Two; Chief Staff Officer, Naval Special Warfare Group Two; and Requirements Officer for Naval Special Warfare Development Group. Captain Green also completed a joint tour as the Counter-narcotics and Maritime Officer, Special Operations Command, Pacific.

As Commanding Officer, SBU-22, Captain Green's leadership firmly established his unit as the premier facility to train special operations forces in the riverine environment. His determination and oversight hastened the construction of new state-of-the-art facilities that provide for the training in the maintenance and repair of combatant craft, an armory, a supply building, a swim training tank, and a detachment building/administrative headquarters, with plans under development for a land-water range, a 30-unit housing facility, and a mini Navy Exchange/gas station. His rapport with senior military leadership was essential to theater commander exposure to SBU-22 capabilities in support of Special Operations Forces, SOF, throughout the world. During his tenure, SBU-22 hosted two major Joint Combined Exchange for Training, JCET, exercises, executed 13 counter-drug missions in South America, and trained over 450 foreign military personnel in all facets of riverine operations. His realignment of the Combatant Craft Training Curriculum fully addresses the requirements of the Naval Special Warfare Force-21 initiative and is typical of the exceptional foresight Captain Green demonstrated throughout his tour as Commanding Officer of SBU-22. His vast Special Operations experience proved to be a major resource in the identification, testing and implementation of the new Special Operations Craft-Riverine, SOC-R, that promises to revolutionize riverine tactics and capabilities.

Throughout his distinguished career, Captain Green has served the United States Navy and the Nation with pride and excellence. He has been an integral member of, and contributed greatly to, the best-trained, best-equipped, and best-prepared naval and special operations forces in the history of the world. Captain Green's superb leadership, integrity, and limitless energy have had a profound impact on SBU-22 and will continue to positively impact the United States Navy, our Special Operations Forces, and our Nation. Captain Green relinquishes his command on July 12, 2002 and reports as Director, Concept Development Directorate at Special Operations Command Joint Forces Command, in Norfolk, VA where he will continue his successful career. On behalf of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, I wish Captain Green "Fair Winds and Following Seas."

COLONEL DOUGLAS JOHN WREATH OF THE UNITED STATES AIR FORCE RESERVE.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on March 29, 2002, Douglas John Wreath was promoted to the grade of Colonel in the United States Air Force Reserve. Major General Mike Hamel, USAF, administered the military oath of office to Colonel Wreath on that date in a ceremony that was held in the Reserve Officers Association of the United States Building, in Washington. It is my pleasure to join those who are congratulating Colonel Wreath on this achievement.

Since 1997, Colonel Wreath has been an active duty Reservist, assigned to the United States Air Force Office of Congressional Affairs. During part of this time, Colonel Wreath served as the Acting Director of the United States Liaison Office in the Senate, where he became known to many Senators and members of their staffs. Colonel Wreath is currently assigned to the United States Air Force Headquarters, at The Pentagon, where he is implementing the recommendations of The Commission to Assess United States National Security Space Management and Organization, as well as serving as the Air Staff Legislative Liaison for Space Integration issues.

Colonel Wreath is a graduate of the United States Air Force Academy. He has also earned the degree of Master of Science in Systems Management from the University of Colorado.

Doug Wreath began his career in the United States Air Force as a Space

Shuttle Navigation Analyst in 1984, leaveings, as a Space Operations Officer in 1992, when he transferred into the Reserve. While on active duty, Doug Wreath performed a variety of command and support activities at three duty stations, and as the Personal Assistant to the Commander of the Air Force Space Command, he assisted in establishing the operational plans and policies of the Air Force National Space Program.

Colonel Wreath is an outstanding American who has developed an impressive record of achievement through his service to our Nation. I am pleased to commend Colonel Wreath on his promotion and I extend my best wishes to him for much continued success.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred January 25 in Washington, DC. Two minors attacked two gay men leaving a gay bar in Dupont Circle. Before attacking the victims, the assailants shouted derogatory, anti-homosexual slurs at them. Local police have arrested one of the perpetrators.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

CHRISTEN O'DONNELL EQUESTRIAN HELMET SAFETY ACT

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, last week my colleague from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE, and I introduced legislation to provide greater safety for children and adults who ride horses in the United States. Each year in our country, nearly 15 million people go horseback riding. Whether it be professionally or for pleasure, Americans of all ages and from all walks of life enjoy equestrian sports. And, while everyone acknowledges that horseback riding is a high-risk activity, there are serious safety issues related to equestrian sports that can and should be addressed.

I first became aware of the problem of equestrian helmets when Kemi O'Donnell, a constituent of mine in Connecticut, called my office to relate her family's tragic experience. The story she shared opened my eyes to the danger posed by certain equestrian helmets. In 1998, Kemi's daughter, Christen O'Donnell, was a young 12-year-old resident of Darien, Connecticut, and a 7th grader at New Canaan Country School. Active and sporty, Christen was a talented intermediate rider who had five years of riding experience under her belt when she mounted her horse on the morning of August 11. As always, Christen wore a helmet and was accompanied by her trainer when she began a slow walk through the ring. Suddenly, without warning, the horse she was riding shook its head, and Christen was thrown off onto 4 inches of sand. Even though her horse was only at a walk, and Christen was wearing a helmet, that helmet offered her little protection, and she sustained severe head injuries as a result of the fall. She was rushed to Stamford hospital where, despite efforts to save her, she died the next day. The magnitude of their loss has been compounded by the thought that, had Christen been wearing a better constructed helmet, it is possible she could have survived this accident.

My colleagues may be shocked to learn, as Christen's parents were, that there are no government standards in existence for the manufacturing of equestrian helmets. Some helmets are voluntarily constructed to meet strict American Society of Testing and Materials (ASTM) testing requirements, but the vast majority of helmets sold in the U.S. offer little or no real protection and are merely cosmetic hats—a form of apparel. Frequently, parents of young riders like Christen—and even more mature riders—do not know that they are buying an untested and unapproved item when they purchase a riding helmet. Indeed, most riders believe that when they buy a helmet at the store, they are purchasing a product that meets standards designed to provide real and adequate head protection. Bike helmets are built to minimum safety requirements, as are motorcycle helmets.

Apparel helmets, like the one worn by Christen, offer little or no head protection, while ASTM-approved helmets are designed to significantly reduce head injury. The difference in aesthetic design between the two is minimal, but the underlying support structures of these types of helmet are substantial. ASTM-approved helmets offer a high degree of head protection, increase the survivability of equestrian accidents and, in my view, should be the standard for all equestrian helmets.

This lack of adequate safety standards in riding helmets is why USA Equestrian (USAEq), one of the largest equestrian organizations in the country, recently mandated that ASTM-approved helmets must be worn in all USAEq-sanctioned events. While this decision effectively eliminates the danger posed by "apparel helmets" at these events, each day many more students ride in lessons and in private shows that are not USAEq-sanctioned. For their safety, I believe that Congress should establish minimum safety standards for all equestrian helmets sold in the United States, so that all riders can obtain headgear that offers actual protection against head injury. This is not an unprecedented suggestion. As I stated before, Congress has already acted to similarly ensure the safety of bike helmets. The legislation that I and Senator Chafee introduce in Christen's memory today is modeled on this successful bike helmet law and would go a long way toward reducing the mortality of equestrian accidents.

The Christen O'Donnell Equestrian Helmet Safety Act would require that the Consumer Product Safety Commission establish minimum requirements, based on the already proven ASTM standard, for all equestrian helmets in the United States. Thus, there would be a uniform standard for all equestrian helmets, and riders could be confident that the helmet they buy offers real head protection. Let me be clear. This modest legislation does not mandate that riders wear helmets. That is a matter better left to individual states. But, it would take a significant step toward improving the survivability of equestrian accidents and would bring the United States in line with other industrialized countries with sizable riding populations. Countries like Australia and New Zealand have enacted similar safety legislation, and the European Union has set standards to make sure that helmets for equestrian activities meet continental standards. It is time for the United States to take similar steps.

This bill is supported by a wide-ranging coalition of equestrian, child safety, and medical groups. This bill has received the endorsement of the National SAFEKIDS coalition, an organization dedicated to preventing accidental injury to children, and the Brain Trauma Foundation, a leading medical group dedicated to preventing and treating brain injury. Additionally, USAEq has passed a rule in support of the concept of the bill, requiring all children to wear ASTM approved helmets and strongly recommending that all adults do so as well. Further, in the Chronicle of the Horse, the trade publication for the Master of Foxhounds Association, the U.S. Equestrian Team, the U.S. Pony Clubs, The National Riding Commission, the Foxhound Club of North America, the National Beagle Club, the U.S. Dressage Foundation, the American Vaulting Association, and North American Riding for the Handicapped Association, and the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association, an article was published endorsing the ASTM rule. Given the wide range of organizations that endorse this bill, or have endorsed the ASTM rule, it is clear that riders, coaches, and medical professionals alike recognize the need for a standard, tested helmet design.

I would like to draw my colleague's attention to some alarming statistics that further demonstrate the importance and expediency of this bill. Emergency rooms all across America have to deal with an influx of horse-related injuries each year. Nationwide in 1999, an estimated 15,000 horse-related emergency department visits were made by youths under 15 years old. Of these injuries, head injuries were by far the most numerous and accounted for around 60 percent of equestrian-related deaths. These injuries occurred, and continue to occur, at all ages and at all levels of riding experience. That an inadequately protected fall from a horse can kill is not surprising when you examine the medical statistics. A human skull can be shattered by an impact of less than 6.2 miles per hour, while horses can gallop at approximately 40 miles per hour. A fall from two feet can cause permanent brain damage, and a horse elevates a rider to eight feet or more above the ground. These statistics make it evident that horseback riding is a high-risk sport. While all riders acknowledge this fact, reducing the risk of serious injury while horseback riding is attainable through the use of appropriate head protection. We should pass this bill, and pass it soon, to ensure that head protection for equestrian events is safe and effective.

American consumers deserve to be confident that their protective gear, should they choose to wear it, offers real protection. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 2:09 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Hays, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 4954. An act to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for a voluntary program for prescription drug coverage under the Medicare Program, to modernize and reform payments and the regulatory structure of the Medicare Program, and for other purposes.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the second time, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 4231. An act to improve small business advocacy, and for other purposes.

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 5011. An act making appropriations for military construction, family housing, and base realignment and closure for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated.

POM-262. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to Medicare coverage of oral cancer drugs; to the Committee on Finance.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 65

Whereas, cancer is a leading cause of morbidity and mortality in the State of Hawaii and throughout the Nation; and

Whereas, cancer is disproportionately a disease of the elderly, with more than half of all cancer diagnoses occurring in persons age 65 or older, who are thus dependent on the federal Medicare program for provision of cancer care; and

Whereas, treatment with anti-cancer drugs is the cornerstone of modern cancer care, elderly cancer patients must have access to potentially life-extending drug therapy, but the Medicare program's coverage of drugs is limited to injectable drugs or oral drugs that have an injectable version; and

Whereas, the nation's investment in biomedical research has begun to bear fruit with a compelling array of new oral anti-cancer drugs that are less toxic, more effective and more cost-effective than existing therapies, but, because such drugs do not have an injectable equivalent, they are not covered by Medicare; and

Whereas, non-coverage of these important new products leaves many Medicare beneficiaries confronting the choice of either substantial out-of-pocket personal costs or selection of more toxic, less effective treatments that are covered by the program; and

Whereas, Medicare's failure to cover oral anti-cancer drugs leaves at risk many beneficiaries suffering from blood-related cancers like leukemia, lymphoma, and myeloma, as well as cancers of the breast, lung, and prostate; and

Whereas, certain Members of the United States Congress have recognized the necessity of Medicare coverage for all oral anti-cancer drugs and introduced legislation in the 107th Congress to achieve that result (H.R. 1624; S. 913), now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-first Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2002, the House of Representatives concurring, That the Congress of the United States in respectfully requested to enact legislation requiring the Medicare program to cover all oral anticancer drugs; and be it further.

Resolved, That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, members of Hawaii's congressional delegation, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the Administrator of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services.

POM-263. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Whereas, In 1934, Federal Prison Industries (FPI) was created as a wholly owned government corporation. Today, FPI operates 103 factories, with over 21,000 inmate workers and annual sales of more than $500 million per year. The operation offers over 150 products. FPI enjoys significant advantages over private manufacturers making similar products because of government procurement policies, including a "mandatory source" requirement for government agencies; and

Whereas, With obvious personnel and benefits advantages over private sector firms, there is a clear penalty to employers and workers under the current situation. Some of the most respected companies in many fields suffer significantly from the unfair competition from FPI; and

Whereas, In Michigan, the impact of current FPI policies has been strongly felt by many working families. Last year, Michigan lost thousands of manufacturing jobs; and

Whereas, Congress is presently considering a measure that would bring comprehensive reforms to the operations of FPI. The Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act would address directly the present unfair government purchasing policies. This legislation, H.R. 1577, includes specific requirements that FPI would have to follow to achieve fairness and promote the training of inmates. Under the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act, FPI would compete for contracts in a manner that minimizes unfair advantages and ensures that government agencies get the best value for taxpayer dollars. The legislation also includes numerous accountability measures, increased emphasis on preparing inmates for a return to society, and enhanced restitution for victims of crime; and

Whereas, A more appropriate approach to prisoner-based manufacturing will not only bring fairness to the marketplace and thousands of America's working families, but it also will enhance the federal corrections system; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

POM-264. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to veterans benefits to Filipino veterans of the United States Armed Forces; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

SENATE RESOLUTION No. 26

Whereas, the Philippine Islands, as a result of the Spanish-American War, were a possession of the United States between 1898 and 1946; and

Whereas, in 1934, the Philippine Independence Act (P.L. 73-127) set a ten-year timetable for the eventual independence of the Philippines and in the interim established a government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines with certain powers over its own internal affairs; and

Whereas, the granting of full independence ultimately was delayed for two years until 1946 because of the Japanese occupation of the islands from 1942 to 1945; and

Whereas, between 1934 and the final independence of the Philippine Islands in 1946, the United States retained certain sovereign powers over the Philippines, including the right, upon order of the President of the United States, to call into the service of the United States Armed Forces all military forces organized by the Commonwealth government; and

Whereas, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, by Executive order of July 26, 1941, brought the Philippine Commonwealth Army into the service of the United States Armed Forces of the Far East under the command of Lieutenant General Douglas MacArthur; and

Whereas, under the Executive Order of July 26, 1941, Filipinos were entitled to full veterans benefits; and

Whereas, approximately 200,000 Filipino soldiers, driven by a sense of honor and dignity, battled under the United States Command after 1941 to preserve our liberty; and

Whereas, the vast majority of American soldiers who opposed the Japanese invasion of the Philippines from December 1941, through March 1942, were Filipinos, who gallantly fought down the length of the Bataan peninsula, and endured unbearable hardships during the siege of Corregidor; and

Whereas, following the surrender of Corregidor, Filipino soldiers, isolated from the rest of the world with only the hope that American forces might someday return, courageously waged guerrilla warfare against the Japanese occupation; and

Whereas, Filipino soldiers fought bravely alongside returning Allied forces to liberate the Philippines and restore order in the war-torn islands until the official end of hostilities in 1947; and

Whereas, there are four groups of Filipino nationals who are entitled to all or some of the benefits to which United States veterans are entitled;

(1) Filipinos who served in the regular components of the United States Armed Forces;

(2) Regular Philippine Scouts, called "Old Scouts", who enlisted in Filipino-manned units of the United States Army prior to October 6, 1945; and prior to World War II, these troops assisted in the maintenance of domestic order in the Philippines and served as a combat-ready force to defend the islands against foreign invasion, and during the war, they participated in the defense and retaking of the islands from Japanese occupation;

(3) Special Philippine Scouts, called "New Scouts", who enlisted in the United States Armed Forces between October 6, 1945, and June 30, 1947, primarily to perform occupation duty in the Pacific following World War II; and

(4) Members of the Philippine Commonwealth Army who on July 26, 1941, were called into the service of the United States Armed Forces, including organized guerrilla resistance units that were recognized by the United States Army;

Whereas, the first two groups, Filipinos who served in the regular components of the United States Armed Forces and Old Scouts, are considered United States veterans and are generally entitled to the full range of United States veterans benefits; and

Whereas, the other two groups, New Scouts and members of the Philippine Commonwealth Army, are eligible for certain veterans benefits, some of which are lower than full veterans benefits; and

Whereas, United States veterans medical benefits for the four groups of Filipino veterans vary depending upon whether the person resides in the United States or the Philippines; and

Whereas, the eligibility of Old Scouts for benefits based on military service in the United States Armed Forces has long been established; and

Whereas, the federal Department of Veterans Affairs operates a comprehensive program of veterans benefits in the present government of the Republic of the Philippines, including the operation of a federal Department of Veterans Affairs office in Manila; and

Whereas, the federal Department of Veterans Affairs does not operate a program of this type in any other country; and

Whereas, the program in the Philippines evolved because the Philippine Islands were a United States possession during the period 1898-1946, and many Filipinos have served in the United States Armed Forces, and because the preindependence Philippine Commonwealth Army was called into the service of the United States Armed Forces during World War II (1941-1945); and

Whereas, our nation has failed to meet the promises made to those Filipino soldiers who fought as American soldiers during World War II; and

Whereas, Congress passed legislation in 1946 limiting and precluding Filipino veterans that fought in the service of the United States during World War II from receiving most veterans benefits that were available to them before 1946; and

Whereas, many Filipino veterans have been unfairly treated by the classification of their service as not being service rendered in the United States Armed Forces for purposes of benefits from the federal Department of Veterans Affairs; and

Whereas, other nationals who served in the United States Armed Forces have been recognized and granted full rights and benefits, but the Filipinos, American nationals at the time of service, are still denied recognition and singled out for exclusion, and this treatment is unfair and discriminatory; and

Whereas, on October 20, 1996, President Clinton issued a proclamation honoring the nearly 100,000 Filipino veterans of World War II, soldiers of the Philippine Commonwealth Army, who fought as a component of the United States Armed Forces alongside allied forces for four long years to defend and reclaim the Philippine Islands, and thousands more who joined the United States Armed Forces after the war; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2002, that the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully requested in the 107th Congress to take action necessary to honor our country's moral obligation to provide these Filipino veterans with the military benefits that they deserve, including, but not limited to, holding related hearings, and acting favorably on legislation pertaining to granting full veterans benefits to Filipino veterans of the United States Armed Forces; and be it further

Resolved, that certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of Hawaii's congressional delegation.

POM-265. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the State of Hawaii relative to the establishment of a sister-state relationship between the State of Hawaii of the United States of America and the Municipality of Tianjin in the People's Republic of China; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Whereas, Tianjin, a city in northeastern China, is one of four municipalities under the direct control of the central government of the People's Republic of China, and in 2001 had a population slightly over 10,000,000; and

Whereas, the city is made up of 13 districts, five counties, 126 villages, 93 towns, and 133 street communities; and

Whereas, the history of Tianjin begins with the opening of the Sui Dynasty's Big Canal (581-617 AD). Beginning in the mid-Tang Dynasty (618-907 AD), Tianjin became the nexus for the transport of foodstuffs and silk between south and north China. During the Ming Dynasty (1404 AD), the city figured prominently as a military center. In 1860, its importance as a business and communications center began to grow; and

Whereas, Tianjin is known as the Bright Diamond of Bohai Gulf and is the gateway to China's capital of Beijing. Tianjin is one of China's biggest business and industrial port cities and, in north China, is the biggest port city. Tianjin now ranks second in importance and size in terms of industry, business, finance, and trade in the north. Its industrial production and trade volume is second only to Shanghai in the south; and

Whereas, the city's traditional industries include mining, metallurgy, machine-building, chemicals, power production, textiles, construction materials, paper-making, foodstuffs, shipbuilding, automobile manufacturing, petroleum exploitation and processing, tractor production, fertilizer and pesticide production, and watch, television, and camera manufacturing; and

Whereas, in 1994, Tianjin's economic goal was to double its gross national product by the year 2003. With its 1997 gross national product reaching RMB 124 billion yuan (about RMB 8.26 yuan to US$ 1), Tianjin is poised to reach that goal. By the end of 1998, 12,065 foreign-owned companies were established in Tianjin that invested a total of RMB 21.017 billion yuan (about US$ 2.5 billion). About RMB 9.291 billion yuan (about US$ 1.1 billion) of that amount was used for development of Tianjin; and

Whereas, in the past, business and other forms of industrial enterprises were primarily state-owned throughout China. However, under on-going nationwide reform, the proportion of businesses that are state-owned is being reduced. In Tianjin, the percentage of state-owned enterprises in 1997 was 35.7 per cent versus 16.6 per cent for collective ownership, and 47.7 per cent for other forms, including private ownership. In the retail sector, the respective proportions were 23.7 per cent, 17.3 per cent, and 59 per cent, respectively; and

Whereas, Tianjin has a broad science and technology base upon which to build, for example, it is home to 161 independent research institutions (117 local and 44 national). Aside from its several universities and colleges, Tianjin has six national-level laboratories and 27 national and ministerial-level technological test centers and has plans to increase its science and technology educational goals; and

Whereas, in 1984, the State Council issued a directive to establish the Tianjin Economic-Technological Development Area (TEDA), situated some 35 miles from Tianjin. Recently, some 3,140 foreign-invested companies have located to TEDA with a total investment of over US$ 11 billion; and

Whereas, at present, TEDA has developed four pillar industries: electronics and communications, automobile manufacturing and mechanization, food and beverages, and biopharmacy, and is promoting four new industries: information software, bioengineering, new energies, and environmental protection; and

breaks, personnel, etc. Within the TEDA high-tech park, Tianjin offers preferential treatment in the form of funding, land fees, taxes, and facilities (such as water, gas, and heating). Residential and other services, shopping, and educational and recreation facilities are either already in place or are being planned; and

Whereas, for the eleven months ending November 2001, total exports from TEDA was US$ 3.53 billion, of which foreign-funded enterprises accounted for US$ 3.49 billion while total foreign investment in TEDA amounted to US$ 2.3 billion; and

Whereas, Hawaii has been, since its early days, the destination of many Chinese immigrants who have helped to develop the State and its economy; and

Whereas, compared to the rest of the country, Hawaii is advantageously situated in the Pacific to better establish and maintain cultural, educational, and economic relationships with countries in the Asia-Pacific region, especially the People's Republic of China; and

Whereas, the new century we have embarked upon has been described by some as the "century of Asia" or the "China's century"; and

Whereas, like Tianjin, Hawaii is also striving to diversify its economy by expanding into environmentally clean high-technology industries including medical services and research; and

Whereas, the State also emphasizes the importance of higher education in order to create a solid foundation and workforce to serve as the basis from which to launch initiatives in high-technology development; and

Whereas, both Hawaii and Tianjin share many common goals and values as both work towards achieving their economic and educational objectives in the new century, and the people of the State of Hawaii desire to form a mutually beneficial relationship between the State of Hawaii and the municipality of Tianjin to share our knowledge and experiences in order to better assist each other in reaching our goals; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twenty-First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2002, That Governor Benjamin Cayetano, of the State of Hawaii, or his designee, be authorized and is requested to take all necessary actions to establish a sister-state affiliation with the municipality of Tianjin of the People's Republic of China; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor or his designee is requested to keep the Senate of the State of Hawaii fully informed of the process in establishing the relationship, and involved in its formalization to the extent practicable; and be it further

Resolved, That the municipality of Tianjin be afforded the privileges and honors that Hawaii extends to its sister-states and provinces; and be it further

Resolved, That if by June 30, 2007, the sister-state affiliation with the municipality of Tianjin of the People's Republic of China has not reached a sustainable basis by providing mutual economic benefits through local community support, the sister-state affiliation shall be withdrawn; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Governor of the State of Hawaii, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, Hawaii's congressional delegation, and the President of the People's Republic of China and the Mayor of the municipality of Tianjin through the Los Angeles Consulate General of the People's Republic of China.

POM-266. A Senate concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to the establishment of a sister-state relationship between the State of Hawaii of the United States of America and the Municipality of Tianjin in the People's Republic of China; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Resolved, That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be transmitted to President of the United States, the Governor of the State of Hawaii, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, Hawaii's congressional delegation, and the President of the People's Republic of China and the Mayor of the municipality of Tianjin through the Los Angeles Consulate General of the People's Republic of China.

POM-267. A Senate concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to the acquisition by the United States National Park Service of Kahuku Ranch for expansion of the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park and of Ki'ilae Village for expansion of Pu'u'honua O Honaunau National Historical Park; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 36

Whereas, the Volcanoes National Park on the Big Island consists of 217,000 acres and is one of only two national parks in this State; and

Whereas, the Volcanoes National Park attracts about 1,500,000 visitors each year who enjoy the natural beauty of the lava fields, native forests, and ocean cliffs; and

Whereas, a large parcel of land lying to the south and west of the Volcanoes National Park known as Kahuku Range consisting of 117,000 acres has come up for sale; and

Whereas, the Kahuku Ranch parcel contains outstanding geological, biological, cultural, scenic, and recreational value, and is the sole habitat for at least four threatened and endangered bird species endemic to Hawaii; and

Whereas, the National Park Service since 1945 has recognized that the property contained nationally significant resources and in fact, in its 175 Master Plan, the National Park Service identified the property as a "potential addition to improve the geological, ecological, and scenic integrity of Hawaii Volcanoes National Park"; and

Whereas, the 181-acre Pu'u'honua O Honaunau National Historical Park was established in 1961 to save a sacred place of refuge that for centuries offered sanctuary to any who reached its walls; and

Whereas, adjacent to Pu'u'honua O Honaunau are the remains of Ki'ilae, an ancient Hawaiian settlement dating back to the late 12th or early 13th centuries, and which remained active until about 1930, making it one of the last traditional Hawaiian villages to be abandoned; and

Whereas, significant portions of this ancient Hawaiian village remain outside of national park boundaries; and

Whereas, including these lands within the boundaries of Pu'u'honua O Honaunau National Historical Park has been a goal of park management for more than three decades; and

Whereas, the park's 1972 Master Plan identified Ki'ilae Village as a proposed boundary extension and in 1992, a Boundary Expansion Study completed for the park called for adding the "balance of Ki'ilae Village"; and

Whereas, within the Ki'ilae lands the National Park Service is seeking to acquire, more than 800 archaeological sites, structures, and features have been identified, including at least twenty-five caves and ten heiau, more than twenty platforms, twenty-six enclosures, over forty burial features, residential compounds, a holua slide, canoe landing sites, a water well, numerous walls, and a wide range of agricultural features; and

Whereas, in June 2001, Senator Inouye and Senator Akaka introduced a bill to authorize the addition of the Ki'ilae Village lands to Pu'u'honua O Honaunau National Historical Park and in October 2001, this bill passed the United States Senate and it is anticipated that the authorization bill will pass the House of Representatives as well; and

Whereas, these acquisitions offer an opportunity rarely imagined because they would give the National Park Service an excellent chance to expand and protect native plants and archaeological sites from destruction; and

Whereas, these opportunities can benefit current and future generations of residents and tourists, because expansion of Volcanoes National Park and Pu'u'honua O Honaunau National Historical Park will preserve more open space, add to the natural environment, protect affected native species, and preserve cultural and historical sites; and

Whereas, in January 2001, the National Park Service held a series of public meetings to receive comments from the public regarding possible purchase of Kahuku Ranch and Ki'ilae Village, and the nearly 400 people in attendance at the meetings expressed overwhelming support and endorsement; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate of the Twenty-First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2002, the House of Representatives concurring, That the Legislature supports the acquisition by the United States National Park Service of Kahuku Ranch for expansion of the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park and of Ki'ilae Village for expansion of Pu'u'honua O Honaunau National Historical Park; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be transmitted to the Director of the National Park Service, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the members of Hawaii's congressional delegation.

POM-268. A Senate concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to urging adequate financial impact assistance to providing services to citizens of the freely associated states who reside in the State of Hawaii; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Whereas, the Compact of Free Association is an agreement established in 1986 between the United States and the Federated States of Micronesia and the Republic of the Marshall Islands, and in 1994 with the Republic of Palau; and

Whereas, under the Compact, the United States provides direct economic assistance, federal services, and military protection to these nations, in exchange for defense rights; and

Whereas, the U.S. State Department should consider the impact of Freely Associated States citizens on Hawaii during this year's renegotiation of the compacts; and

Whereas, citizens of these Freely Associated States (FAS) are also allowed to freely enter the United States without a visa or other immigration requirements; and

Whereas, drawn by the promise of better medical care and a better education for their children, over 6,000 Freely Associated States citizens have migrated to and are currently residing in Hawaii; and

Whereas, the Compact's enabling legislation authorizes federal compensation for impact costs incurred by United States areas, including Hawaii; and

Whereas, the 1996 federal welfare reform act cut off access to federal welfare and medical programs forcing citizens of these Freely Associated States to rely on state aid; and

Whereas, the cost of supporting FAS citizens, largely in healthcare and education, was $86 million between 1996 and 2000; and

Whereas, FAS students have higher costs than other students due to poor language and other skills; and

Whereas, due to FAS students entering and leaving school a few times each year their integration into the school system is difficult; and

Whereas, since the Compact went into effect in 1986 until 2001, the State spent over $64 million to educate FAS citizens and their children in our public schools, $10 million in 2000 alone; and

Whereas, FAS citizens continue to have a fast-growing impact on our public school system; and

Whereas, last year, the number of FAS students in our primary and secondary public schools increased by 28%, resulting in costs to the State of over $13 million for the academic year, bringing the total cost since 1988 to about $78 million; and

Whereas, during the academic school year 2001-2002, the University of Hawaii lost over $1.2 million in tuition revenue as a result of students from the Federated States of Micronesia, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, and the Republic of Palau paying resident rather than non-resident tuition; and

Whereas, inadequate and delayed federal compensation to Hawaii's education system will be at a cost to our own children, and contributes to Hawaii being substantially below many other states in per pupil expenditures for its public school children in kindergarten through 12th grade; and

Whereas, state Medicaid payments for FAS citizens from 1998 to 2001 totaled $12.4 million; and

Whereas, the financial stability and viability of private hospitals and medical providers is threatened by staggering debts and write-offs resulting from medical services to FAS citizens, in spite of state Medicaid reimbursements; and

Whereas, the Queen's Medical Center alone has incurred operating losses of $16 million between 1995 and 1999, and is owed over $11 million by Compact of FAS nations; and

Whereas, community health centers estimate an annual cost of $420,000 for services to FAS residents; and

Whereas, the Department of Health has also been significantly impacted by the cost of public health services to FAS immigrants with $967,000 spent on screening vaccination and treatment of communicable diseases and $190,000 spent for immunization and outreach by public health nurses; and

Whereas, FAS citizens may face unfair criticism and refusal of medical services from medical providers; and

Whereas, inadequate and delayed federal compensation threaten to overwhelm Hawaii's health care systems, leading to potential cutbacks in services and personnel that would impact all of Hawaii's citizens; and

Whereas, it is imperative that Hawaii be granted immediate and substantial federal assistance to meet these mounting costs; and

Whereas, Guam has been asking for—and receiving—financial impact assistance for the last ten years; and

Whereas, the fact that Micronesians should qualify for federal benefits, while residing in Hawaii and the rest of the United States, can best be summed up by the resolution which was passed on September 9, 2001, in Washington, D.C., by a national group called Grassroots Organizing for Welfare Leadership supporting the insertion of language in all federal welfare, food, and housing legislation because Micronesians are eligible for these and other benefits as “qualified non-immigrants” residing in the United States; and

Whereas, the United States government is not owning up to its responsibility for what the United States did to the Micronesian people by refusing them food stamps and other federal benefits when they came to Hawaii and the rest of United States seeking help; and

Whereas, the excuse being used by the U.S. government to deny any aid to the Micronesians in the U.S. is the word “non-immigrant” used in the Compact of Free Association to describe Micronesians who move to Hawaii and the U.S.; and

Whereas, on Dec. 7, 1993, then President Bill Clinton formed an Advisory Committee on Human Radiation Experiments which documented human radiation experiments; and

Whereas, based on some of these documents, researchers indicate that all of Micronesia was affected, not just the Marshall Islands; and

Whereas, it is the intent of this Resolution to encourage the responsible entities to implement the provisions of the Compact of Freely Associated States, which authorizes compact impact funds to be made available to states that welcome and provide services to the people of the Federated States of Micronesia, Republic of the Marshall Islands, and Republic of Palau, because most of the FAS citizens that come to Hawaii do so for medical problems related the United States’ military testing of nuclear bombs; and

Whereas, Micronesians are recruited to serve in the U.S. military and “aliens” are not similarly recruited into the U.S. military; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate of the Twenty-First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2002, the House of Representatives concurring. That the Bush Administration and the U.S. Congress are requested to appropriate adequate financial impact assistance for health, education, and other social services for Hawaii’s Freely Associated States citizens; and be it further

Resolved, That the Bush Administration and the U.S. Congress are requested to insert language in all federal welfare, food, and housing legislation which says that Micronesians are eligible for federal food stamps, welfare, public housing, and other federal benefits as “qualified nonimmigrants” residing in the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Bush Administration and the U.S. Congress are requested to restore FAS citizens’ eligibility for federal public benefits, such as Medicaid, Medicare, and food stamps; and be it further

Resolved, That Hawaii’s congressional delegates are requested to assure financial reimbursements, through the establishment of a trust, escrow, or set-aside account, to the State of Hawaii for educational, medical, and social services and to Hawaii’s private medical providers who have provided services to Freely Associated States citizens; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, United States State Department, President of the United States Senate, Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, members of Hawaii’s congressional delegation, Governor, Attorney General, Superintendent of Education, Director of Health, Director of Agriculture, Director of Human Services, Grassroots Organizing for Welfare Leadership, Micronesians United, United Church of Christ, Hawaii Conference of Churches, United Methodist Church of Honolulu, national negotiating teams of the Compact of Free Association, and Presidents and Hawaii Consulates of the Federated States of Micronesia, Republic of the Marshall Islands, and Republic of Palau.

POM-270. A resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alaska relative to the construction and operation of the Alaska Highway Natural Gas Pipeline route; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

LEGISLATIVE RESOLVE NO. 50

Whereas the Alaska North Slope (ANS) has the largest known, discovered natural gas resources, estimated to be 35 trillion cubic feet, in the United States and estimated, undiscovered gas resources in excess of 100 trillion cubic feet; and

Whereas demand for natural gas in the lower 48 states is expected to experience record growth, rising from approximately 22 trillion feet a year in 2000 to 30-35 trillion cubic feet a year in 2020, with some experts predicting demand to be as large as 50 trillion cubic feet a year in 2020; and

Whereas the lower 48 states have an inadequate resource base to meet this expected demand, and experts expect that more natural gas will have to be imported from Canada and from other countries in the form of liquefied natural gas (LNG); and

Whereas the near record drilling in the last two years in the lower 48 failed to provide any significant gas supply increase and many experts are questioning whether other

United States frontier areas like the deep-water Gulf of Mexico will be able to deliver material new gas supplies and, therefore, more imports may be required than previously thought; and

Whereas it is important for the United States to have a reliable and affordable source of domestic natural gas for its citizens and businesses, and for national security, especially given the recent tragic events; and

Whereas energy supply disruptions have significant negative effect on the United States economy, including the losses of tens of millions of United States jobs; and

Whereas, if the United States imports significant amounts of LNG, it can be subjected to the market power of the exporting country through mechanisms such as embargoes and price making; and

Whereas ANS is one of the few known locations in the United States that can supply significant natural gas supplies to the lower 48 for years to come; and

Whereas, given these supply and demand projections, several companies and entities have studied different pipeline routes, including a "northern" route, running off the shore of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in the Beaufort Sea to the Mackenzie Delta and south through Canada to the lower 48; a "southern" route along the Alaska Highway through Canada to the lower 48; and an "LNG" route adjacent to the Trans Alaska Pipeline System pipeline to Valdez and LNG tankers for delivery to California; and

Whereas, in 1976, Congress passed the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Act of 1976 (ANGTA) authorizing the President to select a route to transport natural gas from ANS to the lower 48 and providing procedures to expedite the construction and operation of the selected route; and

Whereas, in 1977, following lengthy public hearings and negotiations with Canada, the President issued a decision ("President's Decision") choosing the southern route and selecting the predecessor of a consortium of pipeline companies headed by Foothills Pipe Lines, Ltd. (Pipeline Companies") to construct and operate the Alaska segment of the project; and

Whereas the Alaska Gas Producers Pipeline Team ("Producers") has proposed new federal enabling legislation that is currently being debated in the United States Senate; and

Whereas the Majority Leader of the United States Senate has introduced the Energy Policy Act of 2002, which contains the Alaska Natural Gas Pipeline Act of 2002 ("Pipeline Act"); and

Whereas the Pipeline Act is not opposed by the Pipeline Companies, and they desire certain amendments to the ANGTA to modernize it; and

Whereas ANGTA granted the State of Alaska "authoriz[ation] to ship its royalty gas on the approved transportation system for use within Alaska and . . . to withdraw such gas from the interstate market for use within Alaska," which rights will be impaired if a northern route is followed; and

Whereas President Carter's decision in support of the southern route explicitly recognized that it could "supply the energy base required for long-term economic development" within Alaska and it could supply natural gas to communities within Alaska along the route as well as other Alaska communities through local distribution lines, and these potential benefits will be lost if a northern route is followed; and

resentatives to oppose the northern route and has expressed its support for the southern route; and

Whereas the southern route presents the United States with petrochemical extraction opportunities in the United States while the northern route does not; and

Whereas a northern route pipeline could not easily be expanded to increase the volume of gas when needed; and

Whereas the southern route provides petrochemical extraction opportunities in the United States and other marketing opportunities for ANS gas, including gas to liquids (GTL) and LNG, to the West Coast or Asia; and

Whereas it is widely recognized that maximum benefit to Alaskans from the commercialization of ANS natural gas lies in market exposure for that gas, opportunities for in-state use of the natural gas, and for participation by Alaskans in construction, maintenance, and operation of the gas pipeline transportation project, and the recovery of revenue by the state from the development, transport, and sale of ANS gas reserves; and

Whereas the Alaska State Legislature has expressed a preference for the expedited construction and operation of a natural gas pipeline along a southern route and has authorized funds to conduct various studies regarding a natural gas pipeline, including the study of in-state natural gas demand, natural gas supply, a natural gas fiscal system, and the effect of natural gas sales on the Prudhoe Bay reservoir; and

Whereas the Twenty-Second Alaska State Legislature established the Joint Committee on Natural Gas Pipeline ("Joint Committee") to take whatever action may be appropriate to ensure that the best interests of the state are protected; and

Whereas it is vital for the continued exploration and development of natural gas resources on the ANS that oil and gas companies that do not have an ownership interest in the pipeline ("Explorers") have access to it on fair and reasonable terms and have the ability to seek expansion of the pipeline when economically and technically feasible; and the Joint Committee adopted recommendations supporting enactment of these provisions in federal law; and

Whereas it is vital for the economic development of Alaska that Alaskans and Alaska businesses have access to gas from the pipeline on a fair and reasonable basis, and that the Regulatory Commission of Alaska participate with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to develop methods to provide for such access; and the Joint Committee adopted recommendations supporting enactment of these provisions in federal law; and

Whereas the Joint Committee has issued various recommendations requesting that Congress reaffirm the validity of ANGTA and modernize it; and

Whereas natural gas prices in the lower 48 states periodically fluctuate below those required to adequately cover investment; and

Whereas governmental involvement, including tax incentives, is essential and quite common on major projects to enable private enterprises to undertake the risks; be it

Resolved, That the Alaska State Legislature strongly urges the President of the United States, the United States Congress, and appropriate federal officials to actively support the expeditious construction and operation of a natural gas pipeline through Alaska along a southern route; and be it further

Resolved, That the Alaska State Legislature strongly urges passage during the first half of 2002 of the Alaska Gas Producers Pipeline Team's federal enabling legislation, so long as it contains a provision similar to that in H.R. 4 banning the over-the-top route and the following amendments:

(1) provisions for Alaskans and Alaska businesses that ensure they have access to the pipeline for in-state consumption and value-added manufacture on a fair and reasonable basis and that the Regulatory Commission of Alaska is part of the process in determining that access;

(2) provisions for access to the pipeline by Explorers on a fair and reasonable basis, including a proper open season with fair and reasonable tariffs, and that provide that they and the State have the ability to obtain expansion of the pipeline if economically and technologically feasible;

(3) provisions for the reaffirmation of the validity of the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation Act of 1976 and the modernization of that Act as necessary;

(4) provisions for federal financial incentives, including accelerated depreciation and an income tax credit that is designed to provide mitigation of long-term natural gas price risks and the risks associated with funding the large capital costs of the project; the amount of any tax credit should be limited in operation to periods when natural gas prices are extremely low and recovered when natural gas prices are high; and

(5) specific provisions declaring that the content of amendments (1)–(4) is not intended to exclude supply of Alaska North Slope natural gas to markets in the form of LNG or GTL.

POM-271. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania regarding the Valley Forge National Historical Park; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Whereas, in the winter of 1777-1778 General George Washington and the Continental Army camped at Valley Forge to be close to the British Army occupying the City of Philadelphia; and

Whereas, during this encampment the volunteer citizen soldiers endured great hardships such as cold, hunger, disease and poor lodging, and they were badly equipped and supplied; and

Whereas, about 2,000 soldiers died from pneumonia, typhoid, dysentery and other diseases; and

Whereas, at Valley Forge the leadership of General George Washington helped hold together this group of citizen soldiers; and

Whereas, through the training of General Washington and Baron von Steuben these ill-equipped volunteers were marshaled into an effective fighting force which helped defeat a military power, the British, at Yorktown in 1783; and

Whereas, the first State park was founded at Valley Forge in 1893; and

Whereas, Governor Samuel Pennypacker of Pennsylvania compared a visit to Valley Forge to a pilgrimage and urged every American to visit the site; and

Whereas, Valley Forge has been visited by Presidents of the United States and numerous dignitaries from around the world; and

Whereas, in 1975, as part of the United States Bicentennial Celebration, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania conveyed the Valley Forge State Park to the United States Government; and

Whereas, Act 1975-53 authorizing the conveyance said the land was to be used for "historical purposes"; and

Whereas, the development of land privately owned within Valley Forge National Historical Park boundaries would violate the spirit of the conveyance from the Commonwealth to the United States Government; and

Whereas, the Secretary of the Interior has the authority to acquire privately held property within the boundaries of the Park; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania that locating a large housing development within the boundaries of the Valley Forge National Historical Park is against the spirit of the original conveyance to the Federal Government approved by the Commonwealth; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania strongly urge the Secretary of the Interior to exercise authority under Public Law 94-337 and acquire the land to be developed; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania urge the Congress of the United States to appropriate moneys sufficient for the purchase of this property; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of each house of Congress and each member of Congress from Pennsylvania and to the Secretary of the Interior.

POM-272. A Senate joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Maine regarding Acadia National Park; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

JOINT RESOLUTION

We, your Memorialists, the Members of the One Hundred and Twentieth Legislature of the State of Maine now assembled in the Second Regular Session, most respectfully present and petition the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States, as follows:

Whereas, Acadia National Park is Maine's most visited natural destination, with approximately 3 million annual visits, and is one of the most heavily used parks in the National Park System; and

Whereas, Acadia National Park is among the most beautiful places in Maine and its Atlantic shore represents 25% of the Maine coastline that is available for public use and enjoyment; and

Whereas, Acadia National Park generates $132,000,000 in direct economic benefits to the Mount Desert Island region and many additional millions of dollars in indirect benefits throughout Maine, making the park's 45,000 acres of land and easements among the most economically productive natural assets in the State; and

Whereas, Acadia National Park has conducted a rigorous financial analysis leading to a business plan that demonstrates an average operating annual budget that supplies only 47% of what is needed to operate the park in compliance with laws and regulations; and

Whereas, Acadia National Park's annual operating budget shortfall is the 3rd largest calculated to date in the 40 national parks that have undertaken business plans; and

Whereas, Acadia National Park's total annual operating budget need is approximately $14,000,000, and additional millions of dollars are needed for anticipated park operations at Schoodic Point; and

Whereas, Acadia National Park has 121 full-time equivalent employees but needs 230 full-time equivalent employees to execute the park's mission in accordance with laws and regulations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That We, your Memorialists, respectfully urge the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to increase the annual budget of Acadia National Park to amounts that will meet the park's full operational needs, including the needs of Schoodic Point; and be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution, duly authenticated by the Secretary of State, be transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Member of the Maine Congressional Delegation.

POM-273. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Maine relative to Cuba; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

JOINT RESOLUTION

We, your Memorialists, the Members of the One Hundred and Twentieth Legislature of the State of Maine now assembled in the Second Regular Session, most respectfully present and petition the Congress of the United States as follows:

Whereas, the relationship between the United States and Cuba has long been marked by tension and confrontation, and further heightening this hostility is the 40-year-old United States trade embargo against the island nation that remains the longest-standing embargo in modern history; and

Whereas, there has been significant change in relations between Cuba and the United States since 1962, when the prohibitive trade sanctions were imposed; and

Whereas, the export ban was imposed during a period of much fear caused by the threat of nuclear attack due to the Cold War between the former Soviet Union and other communist regimes and the United States; and

Whereas, that threat no longer exists and it is no longer United States policy to prohibit trade with a communist country, as we already have heavy trade with China and are establishing trade with countries like Vietnam; and

Whereas, with complete normalization of trade relations, Cuba could become a $1 billion market for United States agricultural producers within 5 years, making it our 3rd largest market in the Americas after Mexico and Canada; and

Whereas, agriculture in Maine has developed into a diverse industry and could greatly benefit from the market opportunities that free trade with Cuba would provide. Maine is the largest producer of brown eggs and wild blueberries in the world and ranks 8th in the nation in the production of potatoes and 2nd in the production of maple syrup. It ranks 2nd in New England in milk and livestock production; and

Whereas, rather than depriving Cuba of agricultural products, the United States trade embargo succeeds only in driving Cuba's purchasers to competitors in other countries that have no trade restrictions; and

Whereas, the United States has much to gain by trading with Cuba, not only in agriculture but also in many other sectors of the economy and culture; and

Whereas, the Cuban people also have much to gain and are more likely to move toward liberty as they see our way of life and the success of our free market system: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That We, your Memorialists, urge the Congress of the United States to lift trade sanctions and establish permanent, normal trade relations with Cuba; and be it further

Resolved, That suitable copies of this resolution, duly authenticated by the Secretary of State, be transmitted to the Honorable George W. Bush, President of the United States, and to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and each Member of the Maine Congressional Delegation.

Res. 122, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that security, reconciliation, and prosperity for all Cypriots can be best achieved within the context of membership in the European Union which will provide significant rights and obligations for all Cypriots, and for other purposes.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 299—TO AUTHORIZE TESTIMONY, DOCUMENT PRODUCTION AND LEGAL REPRESENTATION IN CITY OF COLUMBUS V. JACQUELINE DOWNING, ET AL. AND CITY OF COLUMBUS V. VINCENT RAMOS

Mr. DASCHLE (for himself and Mr. LOTT) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Whereas, in the cases of City of Columbus v. Jacqueline Downing, et al., Nos. 2002 CR B 01082-25, 010835-37 and City of Columbus v. Vincent Ramos, No. 2002 CR B 010835-37 pending in the Franklin County Municipal Court in the State of Ohio, testimony has been requested from Michael Dawson, an employee in the office of Senator Mike DeWine;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§ 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent employees of the Senate with respect for testimony relating to their official responsibilities;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate may, by the judicial or administrative process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate may promote the administration of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privilege of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That Michael Dawson and any other employee of Senator DeWine's office from whom testimony may be required are authorized to testify and produce documents in the case of City of Columbus v. Jacqueline Downing, et al., and City of Columbus v. Vincent Ramos, except concerning matters for which a privilege should be asserted.

SEC. 2. The Senate Legal Counsel is authorized to represent Michael Dawson and any other employee of Senator DeWine's office in connection with the testimony and document production authorized in section one of this resolution.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 4173. Mr. SARBANES proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2673, to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

TEXT OF AMENDMENTS

SA 4173. Mr. SARBANES proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2673, to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 65, line 11, strike "All" and insert "Subject to the availability in advance in an appropriations Act, and notwithstanding subsection (h), all".

On page 76, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 10A(f) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78k(f)) is amended—

(1) by striking "DEFINITION" and inserting "DEFINITIONS"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following: "As used in this section, the term 'issuer' means an issuer (as defined in section 3), the securities of which are registered under section 12, or that is required to file reports pursuant to section 15(d), or that will be required to file such reports at the end of a fiscal year of the issuer in which a registration statement filed by such issuer has become effective pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77a et seq.), unless its securities are registered under section 12 of this title on or before the end of such fiscal year."

NOTICES OF HEARINGS/MEETINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on Tuesday, July 16, at 9:30 a.m. in room 366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on the Administration's plans to request additional funds for wildland firefighting and forest restoration as well as ongoing implementation of the National Fire Plan.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, those wishing to submit written testimony for the hearing record should send two copies of their testimony to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, United States Senate, 312 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information, please contact Kira Finkler of the committee staff at 202/224-8164.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Maureen

Kelly, from Senator DOMENICI's staff, have access to the floor during this pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Steven Dettelbach, a detailee to the Committee on the Judiciary, and Jack Taylor, a fellow with Senator TIM JOHNSON's office, be granted the privilege of the floor during the Senate's consideration of the pending matter, S. 2673.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003

On June 27, 2002, the Senate amended and passed S. 2514, as follows:

S. 2514

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 107. DEFENSE HEALTH PROGRAMS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the Department of Defense for procurement for carrying out health care programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Defense in the total amount of $278,742,000.

Subtitle B—Army Programs

SEC. 111. PILOT PROGRAM ON SALES OF MANUFACTURED ARTICLES AND SERVICES OF CERTAIN ARMY INDUSTRIAL FACILITIES WITHOUT REGARD TO AVAILABILITY FROM DOMESTIC SOURCES.

(a) EXTENSION OF PROGRAM.—Subsection (a) of section 141 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105-85; 10 U.S.C. 4543 note) is amended by striking “through 2002” in the first sentence and inserting “through 2004”.

(b) USE OF OVERHEAD FUNDS MADE SURPLUS BY SALES.—Such section is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection (c):

“(c) For each Army industrial facility participating in the pilot program that sells manufactured articles and services in a total amount in excess of $20,000,000 in any fiscal year, the amount equal to one-half of one percent of such total amount shall be transferred from the sums in the Army Working Capital Fund for unutilized plant capacity to appropriations available for the following fiscal year for the demilitarization of conventional ammunition by the Army.”.

(c) UPDATE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL’S REVIEW.—The Inspector General of the Department of Defense shall review the experience under the pilot program carried out under section 141 of Public Law 105-85 and, not later than July 1, 2003, submit to Congress a report on the results of the review. The report shall contain the views, information, and recommendations called for under subsection (d) of such section (as redesignated by subsection (b)(1)). In carrying out the review and preparing the report, the Inspector General shall take into consideration the report submitted to Congress under such subsection (as so redesignated).

Subtitle C—Navy Programs

SEC. 121. INTEGRATED BRIDGE SYSTEM.

(a) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 102(a)(4), $5,000,000 shall be available for the procurement of the integrated bridge system in items less than $5,000,000.

(b) OFFSETTING REDUCTION.—Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by section 102(a)(4), the amount available for the integrated bridge system in Aegis support equipment is hereby reduced by $5,000,000.

SEC. 122. EXTENSION OF MULTIYEAR PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY FOR DDG-51 CLASS DESTROYERS.

Section 122(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201; 110 Stat. 2446), as amended by section 122 of Public Law 106-65 (113 Stat. 534) and section 122(a) of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (as enacted into law by Public Law 106-398; 114 Stat. 1654A-24), is further amended by striking "October 1, 2005" in the first sentence and inserting "October 1, 2007".

SEC. 123. MAINTENANCE OF SCOPE OF CRUISER CONVERSION OF TICONDEROGA CLASS AEGIS CRUISERS.

The Secretary of the Navy should maintain the scope of the cruiser conversion program for the Ticonderoga class of AEGIS cruisers such that the program—

(1) covers all 27 Ticonderoga class AEGIS cruisers; and

(2) modernizes the class of cruisers to include an appropriate mix of upgrades to ships' capabilities for theater missile defense, naval fire support, and air dominance.

SEC. 124. MARINE CORPS LIVE FIRE RANGE IMPROVEMENTS.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 102(b) for procurement for the Marine Corps is hereby increased by $1,900,000, with the amount of the increase to be allocated to Training Devices.

(b) AVAILABILITY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 102(b) for procurement for the Marine Corps, as increased by subsection (a), $1,900,000 shall be available as follows:

(A) For upgrading live fire range target movers.

(B) To bring live fire range radio controls into compliance with Federal Communications Commission narrow band requirements.

(2) Amounts available under paragraph (1) for the purposes set forth in that paragraph are in addition to any other amounts available in this Act for such purposes.

(c) OFFSETTING REDUCTION.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 103(1) for the C-17 interim contractor support is reduced by $1,900,000.

Subtitle D—Air Force Programs

SEC. 131. C-130J AIRCRAFT PROGRAM.

(a) MULTIYEAR PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY.—Beginning with the fiscal year 2003 program year, the Secretary of the Air Force may, in accordance with section 2306b of title 10, United States Code, enter into a multiyear contract for the procurement of C-130J aircraft and variants of the C-130J aircraft, subject to subsection (b), and except that, notwithstanding subsection (k) of such section, such a contract may be for a period of six program years.

(b) LIMITATION.—The Secretary of the Air Force may not enter into a multiyear contract authorized by subsection (a) until the C-130J aircraft has been cleared for worldwide over-water capability.

SEC. 132. PATHFINDER PROGRAMS.

(a) SPIRAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR SELECTED PATHFINDER PROGRAMS.—Not later than February 1, 2003, the Secretary of the Air Force shall—

(1) identify among the pathfinder programs listed in subsection (e) each pathfinder program that the Secretary shall conduct as a spiral development program; and

(2) submit to the Secretary of Defense for each pathfinder program identified under paragraph (1) a spiral development plan that meets the requirements of section 803(c).

(b) APPROVAL OR DISAPPROVAL OF SPIRAL DEVELOPMENT PLANS.—Not later than March 15, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall—

(1) review each spiral development plan submitted under subsection (a)(2);

(2) approve or disapprove the conduct as a spiral development plan of the pathfinder program covered by each such spiral development plan; and

(3) submit to the congressional defense committees a copy of each spiral development plan approved under paragraph (2).

(c) ASSESSMENT OF PATHFINDER PROGRAMS NOT SELECTED OR APPROVED FOR SPIRAL DEVELOPMENT.—Not later than March 15, 2003, each official of the Department of Defense specified in subsection (d) shall submit to the congressional defense committees the assessment required of such official under that subsection for the acquisition plan for each pathfinder program as follows:

(1) Each pathfinder program that is not identified by the Secretary of the Air Force under subsection (a)(1) as a program that the Secretary shall conduct as a spiral development program.

(2) Each pathfinder program that is disapproved by the Secretary of Defense for conduct as a spiral development program under subsection (b)(2).

(d) OFFICIALS AND REQUIRED ASSESSMENTS FOR PROGRAMS OUTSIDE SPIRAL DEVELOPMENT.—The officials specified in this subsection, and the assessment required of such officials, are as follows:

(1) The Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, who shall assess the test contents of the acquisition plan for each pathfinder program covered by subsection (c).

(2) The Chairman of the Joint Requirements Oversight Council, who shall assess the extent to which the acquisition plan for each such pathfinder program addresses validated military requirements.

(3) The Under Secretary of Defense (Controller), in coordination with the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics, who shall conduct an independent programmatic evaluation of the acquisition plan for each such pathfinder program, including an analysis of the total cost, schedule, and technical risk associated with development of such program.

(e) PATHFINDER PROGRAMS.—The pathfinder programs listed in this subsection are the program as follows:

- (1) Space Based Radar.
- (2) Global Positioning System.
- (3) Global Hawk.
- (4) Combat Search and Rescue.
- (5) B-2 Radar.
- (6) Predator B.
- (7) B-1 Defensive System Upgrade.
- (8) Multi Mission Command and Control Constellation.
- (9) Unmanned Combat Air Vehicle.
- (10) Global Transportation Network.
- (11) C-5 Avionics Modernization Program.
- (12) Hunter/Killer.
- (13) Tanker/Lease.
- (14) Small Diameter Bomb.
- (15) KC-767.
- (16) AC-130 Gunship.

SEC. 133. OVERSIGHT OF ACQUISITION FOR DEFENSE SPACE PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Office of the Secretary of Defense shall maintain oversight of acquisition for defense space programs.

(b) REPORT ON OVERSIGHT.—(1) Not later than March 15, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a detailed plan on how the Office of the Secretary of Defense shall provide oversight of acquisition for defense space programs.

(2) The plan shall set forth the following:

(A) The organizations in the Office of the Secretary of Defense, and the Joint Staff organizations, to be involved in oversight of acquisition for defense space programs.

(B) The process for the review of defense space programs by the organizations specified under subparagraph (A).

(C) The process for the provision by such organizations of technical, programmatic, scheduling, and budgetary advice on defense space programs to the Deputy Secretary of Defense and the Under Secretary of the Air Force.

(D) The process for the development of independent cost estimates for defense space programs, including the organization responsible for developing such cost estimates and when such cost estimates shall be required.

(E) The process for the development of the budget for acquisition for defense space programs.

(F) The process for the resolution of issues regarding acquisition for defense space programs that are raised by the organizations specified under subparagraph (A).

(c) DEFENSE SPACE PROGRAM DEFINED.—In this section, the term "defense space program" means any major defense acquisition program (as that term is defined in section 2430 of title 10, United States Code) for the acquisition of—

(1) space-based assets, space launch assets, or user equipment for such assets; or

(2) earth-based or spaced-based assets dedicated primarily to space surveillance or space control.

SEC. 134. LEASING OF TANKER AIRCRAFT.

The Secretary of the Air Force shall not enter into any lease for tanker aircraft until the Secretary submits the report required by section 8159(c)(6) of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 2002 (division A of Public Law 107-117; 115 Stat. 2284) and obtains authorization and appropriation of funds necessary to enter into a lease for such aircraft consistent with his publicly stated commitments to the Congress to do so.

SEC. 135. COMPASS CALL PROGRAM.

Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 103(1), $12,700,000 shall be available for the Compass Call program within classified projects and not within the Defense Airborne Reconnaissance Program.

SEC. 136. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING ASSURED ACCESS TO SPACE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Assured access to space is a vital national security interest of the United States.

(2) The Evolved Expendable Launch Vehicle program of the Department of Defense is a critical element of the Department's plans for assuring United States access to space.

(3) Significant contractions in the commercial space launch marketplace have eroded the overall viability of the United States space launch industrial base and could hamper the ability of the Department of Defense to provide assured access to space in the future.

(4) The continuing viability of the United States space launch industrial base is a critical element of any strategy to ensure the long-term ability of the United States to assure access to space.

(5) The Under Secretary of the Air Force, as acquisition executive for space programs in the Department of Defense, has been authorized to develop a strategy to address United States space launch and assured access to space requirements.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Under Secretary of the Air Force should—

(1) evaluate all options for sustaining the United States space launch industrial base;

(2) develop an integrated, long-range, and adequately funded plan for assuring United States access to space; and

(3) submit to Congress a report on the plan at the earliest opportunity practicable.

SEC. 137. MOBILE EMERGENCY BROADBAND SYSTEM.

(a) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by section 103(4), $1,000,000 may be available for the procurement of technical communications-electronics equipment for the Mobile Emergency Broadband System.

(b) OFFSETTING REDUCTION.—Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by section 103(4), the amount available under such section for the Navy for other procurement for gun fire control equipment, SPQ-9B solid state transmitter, is hereby reduced by $1,000,000.

TITLE II—RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST, AND EVALUATIONSubtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations*SEC. 201. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the use of the Department of Defense for research, development, test, and evaluation as follows:

- (1) For the Army, $7,297,033,000.
- (2) For the Navy, $12,927,135,000.
- (3) For the Air Force, $18,608,684,000.
- (4) For Defense-wide activities, $17,543,927,000, of which $361,554,000 is authorized for the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation.

SEC. 202. AMOUNT FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY.

(a) AMOUNT FOR PROJECTS.—Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201, $10,164,358,000 shall be available for science and technology projects.

(b) SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY DEFINED.—In this section, the term “science and technology project” means work funded in program elements for defense research, development, test, and evaluation under Department of Defense budget activities 1, 2, or 3.

SEC. 203. DEFENSE HEALTH PROGRAMS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the Department of Defense for research, development, test, and evaluation for carrying out health care programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Defense in the total amount of $67,214,000.

Subtitle B—Program Requirements, Restrictions, and LimitationsSEC. 211. BASIC SEISMIC RESEARCH PROGRAM FOR SUPPORT OF NATIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR MONITORING NUCLEAR EXPLOSIONS.

(a) MANAGEMENT OF PROGRAM.—(1) The Secretary of the Air Force shall manage the Department of Defense program of basic seismic research in support of national requirements for monitoring nuclear explosions. The Secretary shall manage the program in the manner necessary to support Air Force mission requirements relating to the national requirements.

(2) The Secretary shall act through the Director of the Air Force Research Laboratory in carrying out paragraph (1).

(c) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(4), $20,000,000 shall be available for the program referred to in subsection (a).

SEC. 212. ADVANCED SEAL DELIVERY SYSTEM.

To the extent provided in appropriations Acts, the Secretary of Defense may use for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Advanced SEAL Delivery System any funds that were authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 2002 for the procurement of that system, were appropriated pursuant to such authorization of appropriations, and are no longer needed for that purpose.

SEC. 213. ARMY EXPERIMENTATION PROGRAM REGARDING DESIGN OF THE OBJECTIVE FORCE.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT.—Not later than March 30, 2003, the Secretary of the Army shall submit to Congress a report on the experimentation program regarding design of the objective force that is required by subsection (g) of section 113 of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001, as added by section 113 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1029).

(b) BUDGET DISPLAY.—Amounts provided for the experimentation program in the budget for fiscal year 2004 that is submitted to Congress under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, shall be displayed as a distinct program element in that budget and in the supporting documentation submitted to Congress by the Secretary of Defense.

SEC. 214. REALLOCATION OF AMOUNT AVAILABLE FOR INDIRECT FIRE PROGRAMS.

(a) REDUCTION OF AMOUNT FOR CRUSADER.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for the Army for research, development, test, and evaluation, the amount available for continued research and development of the Crusader artillery system is hereby reduced by $475,600,000.

(b) INCREASE OF AMOUNT FOR FUTURE COMBAT SYSTEMS.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for the Army for research, development, test, and evaluation, the amount available for research and development for the Objective Force indirect fire systems is hereby increased by $475,600,000. The amount of the increase shall be available only for meeting the needs of the Army for indirect fire capabilities, and may not be used under the authority of this section until 30 days after the date on which the Secretary of Defense submits the report required by subsection (d), together with a notification of the Secretary's plan to use such funds to meet the needs of the Army for indirect fire capabilities.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of Defense may use the amount available under such subsection for any program for meeting the needs of the Army for indirect fire capabilities.

(d) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—(1) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Chief of Staff of the Army shall complete a review of the full range of Army programs that could provide improved indirect fire for the Army over the next 20 years and shall submit to the Secretary of Defense a report containing the recommendation of the Chief of Staff on which alternative for improving indirect fire for the Army is the best alternative for that purpose. The report shall also include information on each of the following funding matters:

(A) The manner in which the amount available under subsection (b) should be best invested to support the improvement of indirect fire capabilities for the Army.

(B) The manner in which the amount provided for indirect fire programs of the Army in the future-years defense program submitted to Congress with respect to the budget for fiscal year 2003 under section 221 of title 10, United States Code, should be best invested to support improved indirect fire for the Army.

(C) The manner in which the amounts described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) should be best invested to support the improvement of indirect fire capabilities for the Army in the event of a termination of the Crusader artillery system program.

(D) The portion of the amount available under subsection (b) that should be reserved for paying costs associated with a termination of the Crusader artillery system program in the event of such a termination.

(2) The Secretary of Defense shall submit the report, together with any comments and recommendations that the Secretary considers appropriate, to the congressional defense committees.

(e) ANNUAL UPDATES.—(1) The Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees, at the same time that the President submits the budget for a fiscal year referred to in paragraph (4) to Congress under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, a report on the investments proposed to be made in indirect fire programs for the Army.

(2) If the Crusader artillery system program has been terminated by the time the annual report is submitted in conjunction with the budget for a fiscal year, the report shall—

(A) identify the amount proposed for expenditure for the Crusader artillery system program for that fiscal year in the future-years defense program that was submitted to Congress in 2002 under section 221 of title 10, United States Code; and

(B) specify—

(i) the manner in which the amount provided in that budget would be expended for improved indirect fire capabilities for the Army; and

(ii) the extent to which the expenditures in that manner would improve indirect fire capabilities for the Army.

(3) The requirement to submit an annual report under paragraph (1) shall apply with respect to budgets for fiscal years 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008.

SEC. 215. LASER WELDING AND CUTTING DEMONSTRATION.

(a) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy, $6,000,000 shall be available for the laser welding and cutting demonstration in force protection applied research (PE 0602123N).

SEC. 216. ANALYSIS OF EMERGING THREATS.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy is hereby increased by $2,000,000 with the amount of the increase to be allocated to Marine Corps Advanced Technology Demonstration (ATD) (PE 0603640M).

(b) AVAILABILITY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy, as increased by subsection (a), $2,000,000 may be available for analysis of emerging threats.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for analysis of emerging threats is in addition to any other amounts available under this Act for analysis of emerging threats.

(c) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army is hereby reduced by $2,000,000, with the amount of the reduction allocated as follows:

(1) $1,000,000 may be allocated to Weapons and Munitions Technology (PE 0602624A) and available for counter mobility systems.

(2) $1,000,000 may be allocated to Warfighter Advanced Technology (PE 0603001A) and available for Objective Force Warrior technologies.

SEC. 217. PROHIBITION ON TRANSFER OF MEDICAL FREE ELECTRON LASER PROGRAM.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Medical Free Electron Laser Program (PE 060227D8Z) may not be transferred from the Department of Defense to the National Institutes of Health, or to any other department or agency of the Federal Government.

SEC. 218. DEMONSTRATION OF RENEWABLE ENERGY USE.

Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2), $2,500,000 shall be available for the demonstration of renewable energy use program within the program element for the Navy energy program and not within the program element for facilities improvement.

SEC. 219A. RADAR POWER TECHNOLOGY FOR THE ARMY.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for the Department of Defense for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army is hereby increased by $4,500,000, with the amount of the increase to be allocated to Army missile defense systems integration (DEM/VAL) (PE 0603308A).

(b) AVAILABILITY FOR RADAR POWER TECHNOLOGY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for the Department of Defense for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army, as increased by subsection (a), $4,500,000 shall be available for radar power technology.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for radar power technology is in addition to any other amounts available under this Act for such technology.

(c) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy is hereby reduced by $4,500,000, with the amount of the reduction to be allocated to common picture advanced technology (PE 0603235N).

SEC. 219B. CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION.

(a) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated in section 201(4), $4,500,000 may be available for critical infrastructure protection (PE 35190D8Z).

(b) OFFSET.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2), the amount for power projection advanced technology (PE 63114N) is hereby reduced by $4,500,000.

SEC. 219C. THEATER AEROSPACE COMMAND AND CONTROL SIMULATION FACILITY UPGRADES.

(a) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—(1) The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(3) for the Air Force for wargaming and simulation centers (PE 0207605F) is increased by $2,500,000. The total amount of the increase may be available for Theater Aerospace Command and Control Simulation Facility (TACCSF) upgrades.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for Theater Aerospace Command and Control Simulation Facility upgrades is in addition to any other amounts available under this Act for such upgrades.

(b) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for the Navy for Mine and Expeditionary Warfare Applied Research (PE 0602782N) is reduced by $2,500,000.

SEC. 219D. DDG OPTIMIZED MANNING INITIATIVE.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy is hereby increased by $2,500,000, with the amount of the increase to be allocated to surface combatant combat system engineering (PE 0604307N).

(b) AVAILABILITY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy, as increased by subsection (a), $2,500,000 may be available for the DDG optimized manning initiative.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for the initiative referred to in that paragraph is in addition to any other amounts available under this Act for that initiative.

(c) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for research, development, test, and evaluation for artillery systems DEM/VAL (PE 0603854A), by $2,500,000.

SEC. 219E. AGROTERRORIST ATTACKS.

(a) AVAILABILITY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(4) for research, development, test, and evaluation, defense-wide, the amount available for basic research for the Chemical and Biological Defense Program (PE 0601384BP) is hereby increased by $1,000,000, with the amount of such increase to be available for research, analysis, and assessment of efforts to counter potential agroterrorist attacks.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for research, analysis, and assessment described in that paragraph is in addition to any other amounts available in this Act for such research, analysis, and assessment.

(b) OFFSET.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(4) for research, development, test, and evaluation, Defense-wide, the amount available for biological terrorism and agroterrorism risk assessment and prediction in the program element relating to the Chemical and Biological Defense Program (PE 0603384BP) is hereby reduced by $1,000,000.

SEC. 219F. VERY HIGH SPEED SUPPORT VESSEL FOR THE ARMY.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army is hereby increased by $5,500,000, with the amount of the increase to be allocated to logistics and engineering equipment—advanced development (PE 0603804A).

(b) AVAILABILITY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army, as increased by subsection (a), $5,500,000 may be available for development of a prototype composite hull design to meet the theater support vessel requirement.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for development of the hull design referred to in that paragraph is in addition to any other amounts available under this Act for development of that hull design.

(c) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy is hereby decreased by $5,500,000, with the amount of the decrease to be allocated to submarine tactical warfare system (PE 0604562N) and amounts available under that program element for upgrades of combat control software to commercial architecture.

SEC. 219G. FULL-SCALE HIGH-SPEED PERMANENT MAGNET GENERATOR.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy is hereby increased by $1,000,000, with the amount of the increase to be allocated to Force Protection Advanced Technology (PE 0603123N).

(b) AVAILABILITY.—(1) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Navy, as increased by subsection (a), $1,000,000 may be available for development and demonstration of a full-scale high-speed permanent magnet generator.

(2) The amount available under paragraph (1) for development and demonstration of the generator described in that paragraph is in addition to any other amounts available in this Act for development and demonstration of that generator.

(c) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army is hereby reduced by $1,000,000, with the amount of the reduction to be allocated to Artillery Systems—Dem/Val (PE 0603854A).

SEC. 219H. AVIATION-SHIPBOARD INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY INITIATIVE.

Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for shipboard aviation systems, up to $8,200,000 may be used for the aviation-shipboard information technology initiative.

SEC. 219I. AEROSPACE RELAY MIRROR SYSTEM (ARMS) DEMONSTRATION.

Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(3) for the Department of Defense for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Air Force, $6,000,000 may be available for the Aerospace Relay Mirror System (ARMS) Demonstration.

SEC. 219J. LITTORAL SHIP PROGRAM.

(a) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research and development, test and evaluation, Navy, $4,000,000 may be available for requirements development of a littoral ship in Ship Concept Advanced Design (PE 0603563N).

(b) OFFSETTING REDUCTION.—Of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(2) for research and development, test and evaluation, Navy, the amount available for FORCENET in Tactical Command System (PE 0604231N), is hereby reduced by an additional $4,000,000.

Subtitle C—Missile Defense Programs

SEC. 221. ANNUAL OPERATIONAL ASSESSMENTS AND REVIEWS OF BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE PROGRAM.

(a) ANNUAL OPERATIONAL ASSESSMENT.—(1)(A) During the first quarter of each fiscal year, the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation shall conduct an operational assessment of the missile defense programs listed in paragraph (3).

(B) The annual assessment shall include—

(i) a detailed, quantitative evaluation of the potential operational effectiveness, reliability, and suitability of the system or systems under each program as the program exists during the fiscal year of the assessment;

(ii) an evaluation of the adequacy of testing through the end of the previous fiscal year to measure and predict the effectiveness of the systems; and

(iii) a determination of the threats, or type of threats, against which the systems would be expected to be effective and those against which the systems would not be expected to be effective.

(C) The first assessment under this paragraph shall be conducted during fiscal year 2003.

(2) Not later than January 15 of each year, the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation shall submit to the Secretary of Defense and the congressional defense committees a report on the assessment conducted during the preceding quarter-year. The report shall include the evaluation of the potential of the system or systems together with a discussion of the basis for the evaluation.

(3) The requirement for an annual operational assessment under paragraph (1) shall apply to programs under the United States Missile Defense Agency as follows:

(A) The Ground-based Midcourse Defense program.

(B) The Sea-based Midcourse Defense program.

(C) The Theater High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) program.

(D) The Air-based Boost program (formerly known as the Airborne Laser Defense program).

(b) ANNUAL REQUIREMENTS REVIEWS.—(1) During the first quarter of each fiscal year, the Joint Requirements Oversight Council established under section 181 of title 10, United States Code, shall review the cost, schedule, and performance criteria for the missile defense programs under the United States Missile Defense Agency and assess the validity of the criteria in relation to military requirements. The first review shall be carried out in fiscal year 2003.

(2) Not later than January 15 of each year, the Chairman of the Joint Requirements Oversight Council shall submit to the Secretary of Defense and the congressional defense committees a report on the results of the review carried out under paragraph (1) during the preceding quarter-year.

SEC. 222. REPORT ON MIDCOURSE DEFENSE PROGRAM.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT.—Not later than January 15, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the Midcourse Defense program of the United States Missile Defense Agency. The report shall include the following information:

(1) The development schedule, together with an estimate of the annual costs through the completion of development.

(2) The planned procurement schedule, together with the Secretary's best estimates of the annual costs of, and number of units to be procured under, the program through the completion of the procurement.

(3) The current program acquisition unit cost and the history of acquisition unit costs from the date the program (including its antecedent program) was first included in a Selected Acquisition Report under section 2432 of title 10, United States Code.

(4) The current procurement unit cost, and the history of procurement unit costs from the date the program (including any antecedent program) was first included in a Selected Acquisition Report under such section 2432.

(5) The reasons for any changes in program acquisition cost, program acquisition unit cost, procurement cost, or procurement unit cost, and the reasons for any changes in program schedule.

(6) The major contracts under the program and the reasons for any changes in cost or schedule variances under the contracts.

(7) The Test and Evaluation Master Plan developed for the program in accordance with the requirements and guidance of Department of Defense regulation 5000.2-R.

(b) SEGREGATION OF GROUND-BASED AND SEA-BASED EFFORTS.—The report under subsection (a) shall separately display the schedules, cost estimates, cost histories, contracts, and test plans for—

(1) the National Missile Defense/Ground-based Midcourse Defense program; and

(2) the Navy TheaterWide/Sea-based Midcourse Defense program.

SEC. 223. REPORT ON AIR-BASED BOOST PROGRAM.

Not later than January 15, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the Air-based Boost program (formerly known as the Airborne Laser program). The report shall contain the following information:

(1) The development schedule together with the estimated annual costs of the program through the completion of development.

(2) The planned procurement schedule, together with the Secretary's best estimates of the annual costs of, and number of units to be procured under, the program through the completion of the procurement.

(3) The current program acquisition unit cost, and the history of program acquisition unit costs from the date the program (including any antecedent program) was first included in a Selected Acquisition Report under section 2432 of title 10, United States Code.

(4) The current procurement unit cost, and the history of procurement unit costs from the date the program (including any antecedent program) was first included in a Selected Acquisition Report under such section 2432.

(5) The reasons for any changes in program acquisition cost, program acquisition unit cost, procurement cost, or procurement unit cost, and the reasons for any changes in program schedule.

(6) The major contracts under the program and the reasons for any changes in cost or schedule variances under the contracts.

(7) The Test and Evaluation Master Plan developed for the program in accordance with the requirements and guidance of Department of Defense regulation 5000.2-R.

SEC. 224. REPORT ON THEATER HIGH ALTITUDE AREA DEFENSE PROGRAM.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT.—Not later than January 15, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the Theater High Altitude Area Defense program. The report shall contain the following information:

(1) The development schedule together with the estimated annual costs of the program through the completion of development.

(2) The planned procurement schedule, together with the Secretary's best estimates of the annual costs of, and number of units to be procured under, the program through the completion of the procurement.

(3) The current program acquisition unit cost and the history of program acquisition unit costs from the date the program (including any antecedent program) was first included in a Selected Acquisition Report under section 2432 of title 10, United States Code.

(4) The current procurement unit cost, and the history of procurement unit costs from the date the program (including any antecedent program) was first included in a Selected Acquisition Report under such section 2432.

(5) The reasons for any changes in program acquisition cost, program acquisition unit cost, procurement cost, or procurement unit cost, and the reasons for any changes in program schedule.

(6) The major contracts under the program and the reasons for any changes in cost or schedule variances under the contracts.

(7) The Test and Evaluation Master Plan developed for the program in accordance with the requirements and guidance of Department of Defense regulation 5000.2-R.

(b) FUNDING LIMITATION.—Not more than 50 percent of the amount authorized to be appropriated by this Act for the United States Missile Defense Agency for the Theater High Altitude Area Defense program may be expended until the submission of the report required under subsection (a).

SEC. 225. REFERENCES TO NEW NAME FOR BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE ORGANIZATION.

(a) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The following provisions of law are amended by striking "Ballistic Missile Defense Organization" each place it appears and inserting "United States Missile Defense Agency":

(1) Sections 223 and 224 of title 10, United States Code.

(2) Sections 232, 233, and 235 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107).

(b) OTHER REFERENCES.—Any reference to the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization in any other provision of law or in any regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the United States Missile Defense Agency.

SEC. 226. LIMITATION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR UNCLEAR ARMED INTERCEPTORS.

None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this or any other Act may be used for research, development, test, evaluation, procurement, or deployment of nuclear armed interceptors of a missile defense system.

SEC. 227. REPORTS ON FLIGHT TESTING OF GROUND-BASED MIDCOURSE NATIONAL MISSILE DEFENSE SYSTEM.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—The Director of the United States Missile Defense Agency shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on each flight test of the Ground-based Midcourse national missile defense system. The report shall be submitted not later than 120 days after the date of the test.

(b) CONTENT.—A report on a flight test under subsection (a) shall include the following matters:

(1) A thorough discussion of the content and objectives of the test.

(2) For each test objective, a statement regarding whether the objective was achieved.

(3) For any test objective not achieved—

(A) a thorough discussion describing the reasons for not achieving the objective; and

(B) a discussion of any plans for future tests to achieve the objective.

(c) FORMAT.—The reports required under subsection (a) shall be submitted in classified and unclassified form.

Subtitle D—Improved Management of Department of Defense Test and Evaluation Facilities

SEC. 231. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE TEST AND EVALUATION RESOURCE ENTERPRISE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 139 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(k)(1) There is a Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise within the Department of Defense. The head of the Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise shall report to the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation.

“(2)(A) The head of the Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise shall manage all funds available to the Department of Defense for the support of investment in, operation and maintenance of, development of, and management of the test and evaluation facilities and resources of the Major Range and Test Facility Base. All such funds shall be transferred to and placed under the control of the head of the Department of Defense Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise.

“(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not be construed to authorize the head of the Test and Evaluation Enterprise, nor to impair the authority of the Secretary of a military department, to manage the funds available to that military department for the support of investment in, operation and maintenance of, development of, and management of the training facilities and resources of the Major Range and Test Facility Base.

“(3) The head of the Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise shall—

“(A) ensure that the planning for and execution of the testing of a system within the Major Range and Test Facility Base is performed by the activity of a military department that is responsible for the testing;

“(B) ensure that the military department operating a facility or resource within the Major Range and Test Facility Base charges an organization using the facility or resource for testing only the incremental cost of the operation of the facility or resource that is attributable to the testing;

“(C) ensure that the military department operating a facility or resource within the Major Range and Test Facility Base comprehensively and consistently applies sound enterprise management practices in the management of the facility or resource;

“(D) make investments that are prudent for ensuring that Department of Defense test and evaluation facilities and resources are adequate to meet the current and future testing requirements of Department of Defense programs;

“(E) ensure that there is in place a simplified financial management and accounting system for Department of Defense test and evaluation facilities and resources and that the system is uniformly applied to the operation of such facilities and resources throughout the Department; and “(F) ensure that unnecessary costs of owning and operating Department of Defense test and evaluation resources are not incurred.

“(4) In this section, the term ‘Major Range and Test Facility Base’ means the test and evaluation facilities and resources that are designated by the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation as facilities and resources comprising the Major Range and Test Facility Base.”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE AND TRANSITION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2)(A) The Secretary of Defense shall develop a transition plan to ensure that the head of the Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise is prepared to assume the responsibilities under subsection (k) of section 139 of title 10, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), on the effective date provided in paragraph (1).

(B) Until the Test and Evaluation Resource Enterprise has been established, all investments of $500,000 or more in the Major Range and Test Facility Base of the Department of Defense shall be subject to the approval of the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation.

(C) In this paragraph, the term “Major Range and Test Facility Base” has the meaning given that term in section 139(k)(4) of title 10, United States Code, as added by subsection (a).

SEC. 232. TRANSFER OF TESTING FUNDS FROM PROGRAM ACCOUNTS TO INFRASTRUCTURE ACCOUNTS.

(a) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, amounts authorized to be appropriated by this title for demonstration and validation, engineering and manufacturing development, and operational systems development shall be transferred to the major test and evaluation investment programs of the military departments and to the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense, as follows:

(1) For transfer to the major test and evaluation investment program of the Army, the amount equal to 0.625 percent of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by this title for the Army for demonstration and validation, engineering and manufacturing development, and operational systems development.

(2) For transfer to the major test and evaluation investment program of the Navy, the amount equal to 0.625 percent of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by this title for the Navy for demonstration and validation, engineering and manufacturing development, and operational systems development.

(3) For transfer to the major test and evaluation investment program of the Air Force, the amount equal to 0.625 percent of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by this title for the Air Force for demonstration and validation, engineering and manufacturing development, and operational systems development.

(4) For transfer to the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense, the amount equal to 0.625 percent of the total amount authorized to be appropriated by this title for Defense-wide demonstration and validation, engineering and manufacturing development, and operational systems development.

(b) INSTITUTIONAL FUNDING OF TEST AND EVALUATION FACILITIES.—(1)(A) Chapter 433 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the table of sections at the beginning of such chapter the following new section:

“§ 4531. Test and evaluation: use of facilities

“(a) CHARGES FOR USE.—The Secretary of the Army may charge an entity for using a facility or resource of the Army within the Major Range and Test Facility Base for testing. The amount charged may not exceed the incremental cost to the Army of the use of the facility or resource by that user for the testing.

“(b) INSTITUTIONAL AND OVERHEAD COSTS.—The institutional and overhead costs of a facility or resource of the Army that is within the Major Range and Test Facility Base shall be paid out of the major test and evaluation investment accounts of the Army, the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense, and other appropriate appropriations made directly to the Army.

“(c) MAJOR RANGE AND TEST FACILITY BASE DEFINED.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘Major Range and Test Facility Base’ has the meaning given the term in section 139(k)(4) of this title.

“(2) The term ‘institutional and overhead costs’, with respect to a facility or resource within the Major Range Test and Facility Base—

“(A) means the costs of maintaining, operating, upgrading, and modernizing the facility or resource; and

“(B) does not include an incremental cost of operating the facility or resource that is attributable to the use of the facility or resource for testing under a particular program.”.

“4531. Test and evaluation: use of facilities.”.

(2)(A) Chapter 645 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the table of sections at the beginning of such chapter the following new section:

“§ 7521. Test and evaluation: use of facilities

“(a) CHARGES FOR USE.—The Secretary of the Navy may charge an entity for using a facility or resource of the Navy within the Major Range and Test Facility Base for testing. The amount charged may not exceed the incremental cost to the Navy of the use of the facility or resource by that user for the testing.

“(b) INSTITUTIONAL AND OVERHEAD COSTS.—The institutional and overhead costs of a facility or resource of the Navy that is within the Major Range and Test Facility Base shall be paid out of the major test and evaluation investment accounts of the Navy, the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense, and other appropriate appropriations made directly to the Navy.

“(1) The term ‘Major Range and Test Facility Base’ has the meaning given the term in section 139(k)(4) of this title.

“(2) The term ‘institutional and overhead costs’, with respect to a facility or resource within the Major Range Test and Facility Base—

“(A) means the costs of maintaining, operating, upgrading, and modernizing the facility or resource; and

“7521. Test and evaluation: use of facilities.”.

(3)(A) Chapter 933 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the table of sections at the beginning of such chapter the following new section:

“§ 9531. Test and evaluation: use of facilities

“(a) CHARGES FOR USE.—The Secretary of the Air Force may charge an entity for using a facility or resource of the Air Force within the Major Range and Test Facility Base for testing. The amount charged may not exceed the incremental cost to the Air Force of the use of the facility or resource by that user for the testing.

“(b) INSTITUTIONAL AND OVERHEAD COSTS.—The institutional and overhead costs of a facility or resource of the Air Force that is within the Major Range and Test Facility Base shall be paid out of the major test and evaluation investment accounts of the Air Force, the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense, and other appropriate appropriations made directly to the Air Force.

“(1) The term ‘Major Range and Test Facility Base’ has the meaning given the term in section 139(k)(4) of this title.

“(2) The term ‘institutional and overhead costs’, with respect to a facility or resource within the Major Range Test and Facility Base—

“(A) means the costs of maintaining, operating, upgrading, and modernizing the facility or resource; and

“9531. Test and evaluation: use of facilities.”.

(4) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) shall review the funding policies of each military department to ensure that the Secretary of the military department has in place the policies necessary to comply with the Secretary’s responsibilities under section 4531, 7521, or 9531 of title 10, United States Code (as added by this subsection), as the case may be. The Under Secretary shall consult with the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation in carrying out the review.

SEC. 233. INCREASED INVESTMENT IN TEST AND EVALUATION FACILITIES.

(a) AMOUNT.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 201(4), $251,276,000 shall be available for the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense.

(b) ADDITIONAL AVAILABLE FUNDING.—In addition to the amount made available under subsection (a), amounts transferred pursuant to section 232(a)(4) shall be available for the Central Test and Evaluation Investment Program of the Department of Defense.

SEC. 234. UNIFORM FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT SYSTEM FOR DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE TEST AND EVALUATION FACILITIES.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR SYSTEM.—Not later than two years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall implement a single financial management and accounting system for all test and evaluation facilities of the Department of Defense.

(b) SYSTEM FEATURES.—The financial management and accounting system shall be designed to achieve, at a minimum, the following functional objectives:

(1) Enable managers within the Department of Defense to compare the costs of conducting test and evaluation activities in the various facilities of the military departments.

(2) Enable the Secretary of Defense—

(A) to make prudent investment decisions; and

(B) to reduce the extent to which unnecessary costs of owning and operating Department of Defense test and evaluation facilities are incurred.

(3) Enable the Department of Defense to track the total cost of test and evaluation activities.

(4) Comply with the financial management enterprise architecture developed by the Secretary of Defense under section 1006.

SEC. 235. TEST AND EVALUATION WORKFORCE IMPROVEMENTS.

(a) REPORT ON CAPABILITIES.—Not later than March 15, 2003, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics shall submit to Congress a report on the capabilities of the test and evaluation workforce of the Department of Defense. The Under Secretary shall consult with the Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness and the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation in preparing the report.

(b) REQUIREMENT FOR PLAN.—(1) The report shall contain a plan for taking the actions necessary to ensure that the test and evaluation workforce of the Department of Defense is of sufficient size and has the expertise necessary to timely and accurately identify issues of military suitability and effectiveness of Department of Defense systems through testing of the systems.

(2) The plan shall set forth objectives for the size, composition, and qualifications of the workforce, and shall specify the actions (including recruitment, retention, and training) and milestones for achieving the objectives.

(c) ADDITIONAL MATTERS.—The report shall also include the following matters:

(1) An assessment of the changing size and demographics of the test and evaluation workforce, including the impact of anticipated retirements among the most experienced personnel over the five-year period beginning with 2003, together with a discussion of the management actions necessary to address the changes.

(2) An assessment of the anticipated workloads and responsibilities of the test and evaluation workforce over the ten-year period beginning with 2003, together with the number and qualifications of military and civilian personnel necessary to carry out such workloads and responsibilities.

(3) The Secretary’s specific plans for using the demonstration authority provided in section 4308 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996 (Public Law 104-106; 10 U.S.C. 1701 note) and other special personnel management authorities of the Secretary to attract and retain qualified personnel in the test and evaluation workforce.

(4) Any recommended legislation or additional special authority that the Secretary considers appropriate for facilitating the recruitment and retention of qualified personnel for the test and evaluation workforce.

(5) Any other matters that are relevant to the capabilities of the test and evaluation workforce.

SEC. 236. COMPLIANCE WITH TESTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) ANNUAL OT&E REPORT.—Subsection (g) of section 139 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the fourth sentence the following: “The report for a fiscal year shall also include an assessment of the waivers of and deviations from requirements in test and evaluation master plans and other testing requirements that occurred during the fiscal year, any concerns raised by the waivers or deviations, and the actions that have been taken or are planned to be taken to address the concerns.”.

(b) REORGANIZATION OF PROVISION.—Subsection (g) of such section, as amended by subsection (a), is further amended—

(1) by inserting “(1)” after “(g)”;

(2) by designating the second sentence as paragraph (2);

(3) by designating the third sentence as paragraph (3);

(4) by designating the matter consisting of the fourth and fifth sentences as paragraph (4);

(5) by designating the sixth sentence as paragraph (5); and

(6) by realigning paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5), as so designated, two ems from the left margin.

SEC. 237. REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF DEFENSE SCIENCE BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Not later than March 1, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the extent of the implementation of the recommendations set forth in the December 2000 Report of the Defense Science Board Task Force on Test and Evaluation Capabilities.

(b) CONTENT.—The report shall include the following:

(1) For each recommendation that is being implemented or that the Secretary plans to implement—

(A) a summary of all actions that have been taken to implement the recommendation; and

(B) a schedule, with specific milestones, for completing the implementation of the recommendation.

(2) For each recommendation that the Secretary does not plan to implement—

(A) the reasons for the decision not to implement the recommendation; and

(B) a summary of any alternative actions the Secretary plans to take to address the purposes underlying the recommendation.

(3) A summary of any additional actions the Secretary plans to take to address concerns raised in the December 2000 Report of the Defense Science Board Task Force on Test and Evaluation Capabilities about the state of the test and evaluation infrastructure of the Department of Defense.

Subtitle E—Other Matters

SEC. 241. PILOT PROGRAMS FOR REVITALIZING DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE LABORATORIES.

(a) ADDITIONAL PILOT PROGRAM.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may carry out a pilot program to demonstrate improved efficiency in the performance of research, development, test, and evaluation functions of the Department of Defense.

(2) Under the pilot program, the Secretary of Defense shall provide the director of one science and technology laboratory, and the director of one test and evaluation laboratory, of each military department with authority for the following:

(A) To use innovative methods of personnel management appropriate for ensuring that the selected laboratories can—

(i) employ and retain a workforce appropriately balanced between permanent and temporary personnel and among workers with appropriate levels of skills and experience; and

(ii) effectively shape workforces to ensure that the workforces have the necessary sets of skills and experience to fulfill their organizational missions.

(B) To develop or expand innovative methods of entering into and expanding cooperative relationships and arrangements with private sector organizations, educational institutions (including primary and secondary schools), and State and local governments to facilitate the training of a future scientific and technical workforce that will contribute significantly to the accomplishment of organizational missions.

(C) To develop or expand innovative methods of establishing cooperative relationships and arrangements with private sector organizations and educational institutions to promote the establishment of the technological industrial base in areas critical for Department of Defense technological requirements.

(D) To waive any restrictions not required by law that apply to the demonstration and implementation of methods for achieving the objectives set forth in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C).

(3) The Secretary may carry out the pilot program under this subsection at each selected laboratory for a period of three years beginning not later than March 1, 2003.

(b) RELATIONSHIP TO FISCAL YEARS 1999 AND 2000 REVITALIZATION PILOT PROGRAMS.—The pilot program under this section is in addition to, but may be carried out in conjunction with, the fiscal years 1999 and 2000 revitalization pilot programs.

(c) REPORTS.—(1) Not later than January 1, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the experience under the fiscal years 1999 and 2000 revitalization pilot programs in exercising the authorities provided for the administration of those programs. The report shall include a description of—

(A) barriers to the exercise of the authorities that have been encountered;

(B) the proposed solutions for overcoming the barriers; and

(C) the progress made in overcoming the barriers.

(2) Not later than September 1, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the implementation of the pilot program under subsection (a) and the fiscal years 1999 and 2000 revitalization pilot programs. The report shall include, for each such pilot program, the following:

(A) Each laboratory selected for the pilot program.

(B) To the extent practicable, a description of the innovative methods that are to be tested at each laboratory.

(C) The criteria to be used for measuring the success of each method to be tested.

(3) Not later than 90 days after the expiration of the period for the participation of a laboratory in a pilot program referred to in paragraph (2), the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a final report on the participation of that laboratory in the pilot program. The report shall include the following:

(A) A description of the methods tested.

(B) The results of the testing.

(C) The lessons learned.

(D) Any proposal for legislation that the Secretary recommends on the basis of the experience at that laboratory under the pilot program.

(d) EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR OTHER REVITALIZATION PILOT PROGRAMS.—(1) Section 246(a)(4) of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261; 112 Stat. 1956; 10 U.S.C. 2358 note) is amended by striking “a period of three years” and inserting “up to six years”.

(2) Section 245(a)(4) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (Public Law 106-65; 113 Stat. 553; 10 U.S.C. 2358 note) is amended by striking “a period of three years” and inserting “up to five years”.

(e) PARTNERSHIPS UNDER PILOT PROGRAM.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may authorize one or more laboratories and test centers participating in the pilot program under subsection (a) or in one of the fiscal years 1999 and 2000 revitalization pilot programs to enter into a cooperative arrangement (in this subsection referred to as a “public-private partnership”) with entities in the private sector and institutions of higher education for the performance of work.

(2) A competitive process shall be used for the selection of entities outside the Government to participate in a public-private partnership.

(3)(A) Not more than one public-private partnership may be established as a limited liability corporation.

(B) An entity participating in a limited liability corporation as a party to a public-private partnership under the pilot program may contribute funds to the corporation, accept contribution of funds for the corporation, and provide materials, services, and use of facilities for research, technology, and infrastructure of the corporation, if it is determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense that doing so will improve the efficiency of the performance of research, test, and evaluation functions of the Department of Defense.

(f) EXCEPTED SERVICE UNDER PILOT PROGRAM.—(1) To facilitate recruitment of experts in science and engineering to improve the performance of research, test, and evaluation functions of the Department of Defense, the Secretary of Defense may—

(A) designate a total of not more than 30 scientific, engineering, and technology positions at the laboratories and test centers participating in the pilot program under subsection (a) or in any of the fiscal years 1999 and 2000 revitalization pilot programs as positions in the excepted service (as defined in section 2103(a) of title 5, United States Code);

(B) appoint individuals to such positions; and

(C) fix the compensation of such individuals.

(2) The maximum rate of basic pay for a position in the excepted service pursuant to a designation made under paragraph (1) may not exceed the maximum rate of basic pay authorized for senior-level positions under section 5376 of title 5, United States Code, notwithstanding any provision of such title governing the rates of pay or classification of employees in the executive branch.

(g) FISCAL YEARS 1999 AND 2000 REVITALIZATION PILOT PROGRAMS DEFINED.—In this section, the term “fiscal years 1999 and 2000 revitalization pilot programs” means the pilot programs authorized by—

(1) section 246 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261; 112 Stat. 1955; 10 U.S.C. 2358 note); and

(2) section 245 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (Public Law 106-65; 113 Stat. 552; 10 U.S.C. 2358 note).

SEC. 242. TECHNOLOGY TRANSITION INITIATIVE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND CONDUCT.—(1) Chapter 139 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 2359 the following new section:

“§ 2359a. Technology Transition Initiative

“(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense shall carry out a Technology Transition Initiative to facilitate the rapid transition of new technologies from science and technology programs of the Department of Defense into acquisition programs for the production of the technologies.

“(b) OBJECTIVES.—The objectives of the Initiative are as follows:

“(1) To accelerate the introduction of new technologies into Department of Defense acquisition programs appropriate for the technologies.

“(2) To successfully demonstrate new technologies in relevant environments.

“(3) To ensure that new technologies are sufficiently mature for production.

“(c) MANAGEMENT.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall designate a senior official in the Office of the Secretary of Defense to manage the Initiative.

“(2) In administering the Initiative, the Initiative Manager shall—

“(A) report directly to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics; and “(B) obtain advice and other assistance from the Technology Transition Council established under subsection (e).

“(3) The Initiative Manager shall—

“(A) in consultation with the Technology Transition Council established under subsection (e), identify promising technologies that have been demonstrated in science and technology programs of the Department of Defense;

“(B) develop a list of those technologies that have promising potential for transition into acquisition programs of the Department of Defense and transmit the list to the acquisition executive of each military department and to Congress;

“(C) identify potential sponsors in the Department of Defense to undertake the transition of such technologies into production;

“(D) work with the science and technology community and the acquisition community to develop memoranda of agreement, joint funding agreements, and other cooperative arrangements to provide for the transition of the technologies into production; and

“(E) provide funding support for selected projects under subsection (d).

“(d) JOINTLY FUNDED PROJECTS.—(1) The acquisition executive of each military department shall select technology projects of the military department to recommend for funding support under the Initiative and shall submit a list of the recommended projects, ranked in order of priority, to the Initiative Manager. The projects shall be selected, in a competitive process, on the basis of the highest potential benefits in areas of interest identified by the Secretary of that military department.

“(2) The Initiative Manager, in consultation with the Technology Transition Council established under subsection (e), shall select projects for funding support from among the projects on the lists submitted under paragraph (1). The Initiative Manager shall provide funds for each selected project. The total amount provided for a project shall be determined by agreement between the Initiative Manager and the acquisition executive of the military department concerned, but shall not be less than the amount equal to 50 percent of the total cost of the project.

“(3) The Initiative Manager shall not fund any one project under this subsection for more than 3 years.

“(4) The acquisition executive of the military department shall manage each project selected under paragraph (2) that is undertaken by the military department. Memoranda of agreement, joint funding agreements, and other cooperative arrangements between the science and technology community and the acquisition community shall be used in carrying out the project if the acquisition executive determines that it is appropriate to do so to achieve the objectives of the project.

“(e) TECHNOLOGY TRANSITION COUNCIL.—(1) There is a Technology Transition Council in the Department of Defense. The Council is composed of the following members:

“(A) The science and technology executives of the military departments and Defense Agencies.

“(B) The acquisition executives of the military departments.

“(C) The members of the Joint Requirements Oversight Council.

“(2) The Technology Transition Council shall provide advice and assistance to the Initiative Manager under this section.

“(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘acquisition executive’, with respect to a military department, means the official designated as the senior procurement executive for that military department under section 16(3) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 414(3)).

“(2) The term ‘Initiative’ means the Technology Transition Initiative carried out under this section.

“(3) The term ‘Initiative Manager’ means the official designated to manage the Initiative under subsection (c).”.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2395 the following new item:

“2359a. Technology Transition Initiative.”.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 201(4), $50,000,000 shall be available for the Technology Transition Initiative under section 2359a of title 10, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), and for other technology transition activities of the Department of Defense.

SEC. 243. ENCOURAGEMENT OF SMALL BUSINESSES AND NONTRADITIONAL DEFENSE CONTRACTORS TO SUBMIT PROPOSALS POTENTIALLY BENEFICIAL FOR COMBATING TERRORISM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF OUTREACH PROGRAM.—During the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall carry out a program of outreach to small businesses and nontraditional defense contractors for the purpose set forth in subsection (b).

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of the outreach program is to provide a process for reviewing and evaluating research activities of, and new technologies being developed by, small businesses and nontraditional defense contractors that have the potential for meeting a defense requirement or technology development goal of the Department of Defense that relates to the mission of the Department of Defense to combat terrorism.

(c) GOALS.—The goals of the outreach program are as follows:

(1) To increase efforts within the Department of Defense to survey and identify technologies being developed outside the Department that have the potential described in subsection (b).

(2) To provide the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics with a source of expert advice on new technologies for combating terrorism.

(3) To increase efforts to educate nontraditional defense contractors on Department of Defense acquisition processes, including regulations, procedures, funding opportunities, military needs and requirements, and technology transfer so as to encourage such contractors to submit proposals regarding research activities and technologies described in subsection (b).

(4) To increase efforts to provide timely response by the Department of Defense to acquisition proposals (including unsolicited proposals) submitted to the Department by small businesses and by nontraditional defense contractors regarding research activities and technologies described in subsection (b), including through the use of electronic transactions to facilitate the processing of proposals.

(d) REVIEW PANEL.—(1) The Secretary shall appoint, under the outreach program, a panel for the review and evaluation of proposals described in subsection (c)(4).

(2) The panel shall be composed of qualified personnel from the military departments, relevant Defense Agencies, industry, academia, and other private sector organizations.

(3) The panel shall review and evaluate proposals that, as determined by the panel, may present a unique and valuable approach for meeting a defense requirement or technology development goal related to combating terrorism. In carrying out duties under this paragraph, the panel may act through representatives designated by the panel.

(4) The panel shall—

(A) within 60 days after receiving such a proposal, transmit to the source of the proposal a notification regarding whether the proposal has been selected for review by the panel;

(B) to the maximum extent practicable, complete the review of each selected proposal within 120 days after the proposal is selected for review by the panel; and

(C) after completing the review, transmit an evaluation of the proposal to the source of the proposal.

(5) The Secretary shall ensure that the panel, in reviewing and evaluating proposals under this subsection, has the authority to obtain assistance, to a reasonable extent, from the appropriate technical resources of the laboratories, research, development, and engineering centers, test and evaluation activities, and other elements of the Department of Defense.

(6) If, after completing the review of a proposal, the panel determines that the proposal represents a unique and valuable approach to meeting a defense requirement or technology development goal related to combating terrorism, the panel shall submit that determination to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics together with any recommendations that the panel considers appropriate regarding the proposal.

(7) The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that there is no conflict of interest on the part of a member of the panel with respect to the review and evaluation of a proposal by the panel.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “nontraditional defense contractor” means an entity that has not, for at least one year prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, entered into, or performed with respect to, any contract described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 845(e) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (10 U.S.C. 2371 note).

(2) The term “small business” means a business concern that meets the applicable size standards prescribed pursuant to section 3(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(a)).

SEC. 244. VEHICLE FUEL CELL PROGRAM.

(a) PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense shall carry out a vehicle fuel cell technology development program in cooperation with the Secretary of Energy, the heads of other Federal agencies appropriate for participation in the program, and industry.

(b) GOALS AND OBJECTIVES.—The goals and objectives of the program shall be as follows:

(1) To identify and support technological advances that are necessary for the development of fuel cell technology for use in vehicles of types to be used by the Department of Defense.

(2) To ensure that critical technology advances are shared among the various fuel cell technology programs within the Federal Government.

(3) To ensure maximum leverage of Federal Government funding for fuel cell technology development.

(c) CONTENT OF PROGRAM.—The program shall include—

(1) development of vehicle propulsion technologies and fuel cell auxiliary power units, together with pilot demonstrations of such technologies, as appropriate; and

(2) development of technologies necessary to address critical issues such as hydrogen storage and the need for a hydrogen fuel infrastructure.

(d) COOPERATION WITH INDUSTRY.—(1) The Secretary shall include the automobile and truck manufacturing industry and its systems and component suppliers in the cooperative involvement of industry in the program.

(2) The Secretary of Defense shall consider whether, in order to facilitate the cooperation of industry in the program, the Secretary and one or more companies in industry should enter into a cooperative agreement that establishes an entity to carry out activities required under subsection (c). An entity established by any such agreement shall be known as a defense industry fuel cell partnership.

(3) The Secretary of Defense shall provide for industry to bear, in cash or in kind, at least one-half of the total cost of carrying out the program.

(e) AMOUNT FOR PROGRAM.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(4), $10,000,000 shall be available for the program required by this section.

SEC. 245. DEFENSE NANOTECHNOLOGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall carry out a defense nanotechnology research and development program.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of the program are as follows:

(1) To ensure United States global superiority in nanotechnology necessary for meeting national security requirements.

(2) To coordinate all nanoscale research and development within the Department of Defense, and to provide for interagency cooperation and collaboration on nanoscale research and development between the Department of Defense and other departments and agencies of the United States that are involved in nanoscale research and development.

(3) To develop and manage a portfolio of fundamental and applied nanoscience and engineering research initiatives that is stable, consistent, and balanced across scientific disciplines.

(4) To accelerate the transition and deployment of technologies and concepts derived from nanoscale research and development into the Armed Forces, and to establish policies, procedures, and standards for measuring the success of such efforts.

(5) To collect, synthesize, and disseminate critical information on nanoscale research and development.

(c) ADMINISTRATION.—In carrying out the program, the Secretary shall act through the Director of Defense Research and Engineering, who shall supervise the planning, management, and coordination of the program. The Director, in consultation with the Secretaries of the military departments and the heads of participating Defense Agencies and other departments and agencies of the United States, shall—

(1) prescribe a set of long-term challenges and a set of specific technical goals for the program;

(2) develop a coordinated and integrated research and investment plan for meeting the long-term challenges and achieving the specific technical goals; and

(3) develop memoranda of agreement, joint funding agreements, and other cooperative arrangements necessary for meeting the long-term challenges and achieving the specific technical goals.

(d) ANNUAL REPORT.—Not later than March 1 of each of 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2007, the Director of Defense Research and Engineering shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the program. The report shall contain the following matters:

(1) A review of—

(A) the long-term challenges and specific goals of the program; and

(B) the progress made toward meeting the challenges and achieving the goals.

(2) An assessment of current and proposed funding levels, including the adequacy of such funding levels to support program activities.

(3) A review of the coordination of activities within the Department of Defense and with other departments and agencies.

(4) An assessment of the extent to which effective technology transition paths have been established as a result of activities under the program.

(5) Recommendations for additional program activities to meet emerging national security requirements.

SEC. 246. ACTIVITIES AND ASSESSMENT OF THE DEFENSE EXPERIMENTAL PROGRAM TO STIMULATE COMPETITIVE RESEARCH.

(a) AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—Subsection (c) of section 257 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995 (Public Law 103-337; 10 U.S.C. 2358 note), is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking “research grants” and inserting “grants for research and instrumentation to support such research”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(3) Any other activities that are determined necessary to further the achievement of the objectives of the program.”.

(b) COORDINATION.—Subsection (e) of such section is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(4) The Secretary shall contract with the National Research Council to assess the effectiveness of the Defense Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research in achieving the program objectives set forth in subsection (b). The assessment provided to the Secretary shall include the following:

“(A) An assessment of the eligibility requirements of the program and the relationship of such requirements to the overall research base in the States, the stability of research initiatives in the States, and the achievement of the program objectives, together with any recommendations for modification of the eligibility requirements.

“(B) An assessment of the program structure and the effects of that structure on the development of a variety of research activities in the States and the personnel available to carry out such activities, together with any recommendations for modification of program structure, funding levels, and funding strategy.

“(C) An assessment of the past and ongoing activities of the State planning committees in supporting the achievement of the program objectives.

“(D) An assessment of the effects of the various eligibility requirements of the various Federal programs to stimulate competitive research on the ability of States to develop niche research areas of expertise, exloit opportunities for developing interdisciplinary research initiatives, and achieve program objectives.”.

SEC. 247. FOUR-YEAR EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY OF DARPA TO AWARD PRIZES FOR ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY ACHIEVEMENTS.

(a) EXTENSION.—Section 2374a(f) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking “September 30, 2003” and inserting “September 30, 2007”.

(b) REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAM.—(1) Not later than December 31, 2002, the Director of the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the proposal of the Director for the administration of the program to award prizes for advanced technology achievements under section 2374a of title 10, United States Code.

(2) The report shall include the following:

(A) A description of the proposed goals of the competition under the program, including the technology areas to be promoted by the competition and the relationship of such area to military missions of the Department of Defense.

(B) The proposed rules of the competition under the program and a description of the proposed management of the competition.

(C) A description of the manner in which funds for cash prizes under the program will be allocated within the accounts of the Agency if a prize is awarded and claimed.

(D) A statement of the reasons why the competition is a preferable means of promoting basic, advanced, and applied research, technology development, or prototype projects than other means of promotion of such activities, including contracts, grants, cooperative agreements, and other transactions.

TITLE III—OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

Subtitle A—Authorization of Appropriations

SEC. 301. OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE FUNDING.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the use of the Armed Forces and other activities and agencies of the Department of Defense for expenses, not otherwise provided for, for operation and maintenance, in amounts as follows:

(17) For Environmental Restoration, Defense-wide, $23,498,000.

(18) For Environmental Restoration, Formerly Used Defense Sites, $252,102,000.

(19) For Overseas Humanitarian, Disaster, and Civic Aid programs, $58,400,000.

(20) For Drug Interdiction and Counterdrug Activities, Defense-wide, $873,907,000.

(21) For the Kaho’olawe Island Conveyance, Remediation, and Environmental Restoration Trust Fund, $25,000,000.

(22) For Defense Health Program, $14,202,441,000.

(23) For Cooperative Threat Reduction programs, $416,700,000.

(24) For Overseas Contingency Operations Transfer Fund, $50,000,000.

(25) For Support for International Sporting Competitions, Defense, $19,000,000.

(b) ADJUSTMENT.—The total amount authorized to be appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) is reduced by—

(1) $159,790,000, which represents savings resulting from reduced travel; and

(2) $615,200,000, which represents savings resulting from foreign currency fluctuations.

SEC. 302. WORKING CAPITAL FUNDS.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the use of the Armed Forces and other activities and agencies of the Department of Defense for providing capital for working capital and revolving funds in amounts as follows:

(1) For the Defense Working Capital Funds, $387,156,000.

(2) For the National Defense Sealift Fund, $934,129,000.

(3) For the Defense Commissary Agency Working Capital Fund, $969,200,000.

(4) For the Pentagon Reservation Maintenance Revolving Fund, $328,000,000.

SEC. 303. ARMED FORCES RETIREMENT HOME.

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 from the Armed Forces Retirement Home Trust Fund the sum of $69,921,000 for the operation of the Armed Forces Retirement Home, including the Armed Forces Retirement Home—Washington and the Armed Forces Retirement Home—Gulftport.

SEC. 304. RANGE ENHANCEMENT INITIATIVE FUND.

(a) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(5) for operation and maintenance for defense-wide activities, $20,000,000 shall be available for the Range Enhancement Initiative Fund for the purpose specified in subsection (b).

(b) PURPOSE.—Subject to subsection (c), amounts authorized to be appropriated for the Range Enhancement Initiative Fund shall be available to the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the military departments to purchase restrictive easements, including easements that implement agreements entered into under section 2697 of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 2811 of this Act.

(c) TRANSFER OF AMOUNTS.—(1) Amounts in the Range Enhancement Initiative Fund shall, subject to applicable limitations in appropriations Acts, be made available to the Secretary of a military department under subsection (b) by transfer from the Fund to the applicable operation and maintenance account of the military department, including the operation and maintenance account for the active component, or for a reserve component, of the military department.

(2) Authority to transfer amounts under paragraph (1) is in addition to any other authority to transfer funds under this Act.

SEC. 305. NAVY PILOT HUMAN RESOURCES CALL CENTER, CUTLER, MAINE.

Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(2) for operation and maintenance for the Navy, $1,500,000 may be

SEC. 306. NATIONAL ARMY MUSEUM, FORT BELVOIR, VIRGINIA.

(a) ACTIVATION EFFORTS.—The Secretary of the Army may carry out efforts to facilitate the commencement of development for the National Army Museum at Fort Belvoir, Virginia.

(b) FUNDING.—(1) The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(1) for operation and maintenance for the Army is hereby increased by $100,000.

(2) Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(1) for operation and maintenance for the Army, as increased by paragraph (1), $100,000 shall be available to carry out the efforts authorized by subsection (a).

(c) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 201(1) for research, development, test, and evaluation for the Army is hereby reduced by $100,000.

SEC. 307. DISPOSAL OF OBSOLETE VESSELS OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE RESERVE FLEET.

Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(2) for operation and maintenance for the Navy, $20,000,000 may be available, without fiscal year limitation if so provided in appropriations Acts, for expenses related to the disposal of obsolete vessels in the Maritime Administration National Defense Reserve Fleet.

Subtitle B—Environmental Provisions

SEC. 311. ENHANCEMENT OF AUTHORITY ON CO-OPERATIVE AGREEMENTS FOR ENVIRONMENTAL PURPOSES.

Section 2701(d) of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (3) and (4), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph (2):

“(2) CROSS-FISCAL YEAR AGREEMENTS.—An agreement with an agency under paragraph (1) may be for a period that begins in one fiscal year and ends in another fiscal year if (without regard to any option to extend the period of the agreement) the period of the agreement does not exceed two years.”.

SEC. 312. MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY TO CARRY OUT CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS FOR ENVIRONMENTAL RESPONSES.

(a) RESTATEMENT AND MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY.—(1) Chapter 160 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§2711. Environmental restoration projects for environmental responses

“(a) The Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of a military department may carry out an environmental restoration project if that Secretary determines that the project is necessary to carry out a response under this chapter or CERCLA.

“(b) Any construction, development, conversion, or extension of a structure or installation of equipment that is included in an environmental restoration project may not be considered military construction (as that term is defined in section 2801(a) of this title).

“(c) Funds authorized for deposit in an account established by section 2703(a) of this title shall be the only source of funds to conduct an environmental restoration project under this section.

“(d) In this section, the term ‘environmental restoration project’ includes construction, development, conversion, or extension of a structure or installation of equipment in direct support of a response.”.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of that chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

“2711. Environmental restoration projects for environmental responses.”.

(b) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED PROVISION.—(1) Section 2810 of title 10, United States Code, is repealed.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 169 of that title is amended by striking the item relating to section 2810.

SEC. 313. INCREASED PROCUREMENT OF ENVIRONMENTALLY PREFERABLE PRODUCTS.

(a) PROCUREMENT GOALS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall establish goals for the increased procurement by the Department of Defense of procurement items that are environmentally preferable or are made with recovered materials.

(2) The goals established under paragraph (1) shall be consistent with the requirements of section 6002 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6962).

(3) In establishing goals under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall review the Comprehensive Procurement Guidelines and Guidance on Acquisition of Environmentally Preferable Products and Services developed pursuant to Executive Order 13101 and products identified as environmentally preferable in the Federal Logistics Information System.

(4) In establishing goals under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall establish a procurement goal for each category of procurement items that is environmentally preferable or is made with recovered materials.

(5) The goals established under paragraph (1) shall apply to Department purchases in each category of procurement items designated by the Secretary for purposes of paragraph (4), but shall not apply to—

(A) products or services purchased by Department contractors and subcontractors, even if such products or services are incorporated into procurement items purchased by the Department; or

(B) credit card purchases or other local purchases that are made outside the requisitioning process of the Department.

(b) ASSESSMENT OF TRAINING AND EDUCATION.—The Secretary shall assess the need to establish a program, or enhance existing programs, for training and educating Department of Defense procurement officials and contractors to ensure that they are aware of Department requirements, preferences, and goals for the procurement of items that are environmentally preferable or are made with recovered materials.

(c) TRACKING SYSTEM.—The Secretary shall develop a tracking system to identify the extent to which the Department of Defense is procuring items that are environmentally preferable or are made with recovered materials. The tracking system shall separately track procurement of each category of procurement items for which a goal has been established under subsection (a)(4).

(d) INITIAL REPORT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report that sets forth—

(1) the initial goals the Secretary plans to establish under subsection (a); and

(2) the findings of the Secretary as a result of the assessment under subsection (b), together with any recommendations of the Secretary as a result of the assessment.

(e) IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall—

(1) establish an initial set of goals in accordance with subsection (a);

(2) begin the implementation of any recommendations of the Secretary under subsection (d)(2) as a result of the assessment under subsection (b); and

(3) implement the tracking system required by subsection (c).

(f) ANNUAL REPORT.—Not later than March 1 of each year from 2004 through 2007, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the progress made in the implementation of this section. Each report shall—

(1) identify each category of procurement items for which a goal has been established under subsection (a) as of the end of such year; and

(2) provide information from the tracking system required by subsection (b) that indicates the extent to which the Department has met the goal for the category of procurement items as of the end of such year.

(g) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ENVIRONMENTALLY PREFERABLE.—The term “environmentally preferable”, in the case of a procurement item, means that the item has a lesser or reduced effect on human health and the environment when compared with competing procurement items that serve the same purpose. The comparison may be based upon consideration of raw materials acquisition, production, manufacturing, packaging, distribution, reuse, operation, maintenance, or disposal of the procurement item, or other appropriate matters.

(2) PROCUREMENT ITEM.—The term “procurement item” has the meaning given that term in section 1004(16) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (40 U.S.C. 6903(16)).

(3) RECOVERED MATERIALS.—The term “recovered materials” means waste materials and by-products that have been recovered or diverted from solid waste, but does not include materials and by-products generated from, and commonly used within, an original manufacturing process.

SEC. 314. CLEANUP OF UNEXPLODED ORDNANCE ON KAHOLAWE ISLAND, HAWAII.

(a) LEVEL OF CLEANUP REQUIRED.—The Secretary of the Navy shall continue activities for the clearance and removal of unexploded ordnance on the Island of Kaho’olawe, Hawaii, and related remediation activities, until the later of the following dates:

(1) The date on which the Kaho’olawe Island access control period expires.

(2) The date on which the Secretary achieves each of the following objectives:

(A) The inspection and assessment of all of Kaho’olawe Island in accordance with current procedures.

(B) The clearance of 75 percent of Kaho’olawe Island to the degree specified in the Tier One standards in the memorandum of understanding.

(C) The clearance of 25 percent of Kaho’olawe Island to the degree specified in the Tier Two standards in the memorandum of understanding.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “Kaho’olawe Island access control period” means the period for which the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to retain the control of access to the Island of Kaho’olawe, Hawaii, under title X of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1994 (Public Law 103-139; 107 Stat. 1480).

(2) The term “memorandum of understanding” means the Memorandum of Understanding Between the United States Department of the Navy and the State of Hawaii Concerning the Island of Kaho’olawe, Hawaii.

SEC. 345. LOGISTICS SUPPORT AND SERVICES FOR WEAPON SYSTEMS CONTRACTORS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may make available, in accordance with this section and the regulations prescribed under subsection (e), logistics support and logistics services to a contractor in support of the performance by the contractor of a contract for the construction, modification, or maintenance of a weapon system that is entered into by an official of the Department of Defense.

(b) SUPPORT CONTRACTS.—Any logistics support and logistics services that is to be provided under this section to a contractor in support of the performance of a contract shall be provided under a separate contract that is entered into by the Director of the Defense Logistics Agency with that contractor.

(c) SCOPE OF SUPPORT AND SERVICES.—The logistics support and logistics services that may be provided under this section in support of the performance of a contract described in subsection (a) are the distribution, disposal, and cataloging of materiel and repair parts necessary for the performance of that contract.

(d) LIMITATIONS.—(1) The number of contracts described in subsection (a) for which the Secretary makes logistics support and logistics services available under the authority of this section may not exceed five contracts. The total amount of the estimated costs of all such contracts for which logistics support and logistics services are made available under this section may not exceed $100,000,000.

(2) No contract entered into by the Director of the Defense Logistics Agency under subsection (b) may be for a period in excess of five years, including periods for which the contract is extended under options to extend the contract.

(e) REGULATIONS.—Before exercising the authority under this section, the Secretary of Defense shall prescribe in regulations such requirements, conditions, and restrictions as the Secretary determines appropriate to ensure that logistics support and logistics services are provided under this section only when it is in the best interests of the United States to do so. The regulations shall include, at a minimum, the following:

(1) A requirement for the authority under this section to be used only for providing logistics support and logistics services in support of the performance of a contract that is entered into using competitive procedures (as defined in section 4 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403)).

(2) A requirement for the solicitation of offers for a contract described in subsection (a), for which logistics support and logistics services are to be made available under this section, to include—

(A) a statement that the logistics support and logistics services are to be made available under the authority of this section to any contractor awarded the contract, but only on a basis that does not require acceptance of the support and services; and

(B) a description of the range of the logistics support and logistics services that are to be made available to the contractor.

(3) A requirement for the rates charged a contractor for logistics support and logistics services provided to a contractor under this section to reflect the full cost to the United States of the resources used in providing the support and services, including the costs of resources used, but not paid for, by the Department of Defense.

(4) A requirement to credit to the General Fund of the Treasury amounts received by the Department of Defense from a contractor for the cost of logistics support and logistics services provided to the contractor by the Department of Defense under this section but not paid for out of funds available to the Department of Defense.

(5) With respect to a contract described in subsection (a) that is being performed for a department or agency outside the Department of Defense, a prohibition, in accordance with applicable contracting procedures, on the imposition of any charge on that department or agency for any effort of Department of Defense personnel or the contractor to correct deficiencies in the performance of such contract.

(6) A prohibition on the imposition of any charge on a contractor for any effort of the contractor to correct a deficiency in the performance of logistics support and logistics services provided to the contractor under this section.

(f) RELATIONSHIP TO TREATY OBLIGATIONS.—The Secretary shall ensure that the exercise of authority under this section does not conflict with any obligation of the United States under any treaty or other international agreement.

(g) TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.—(1) The authority provided in this section shall expire on September 30, 2007, subject to paragraph (2).

(2) The expiration of the authority under this section does not terminate—

(A) any contract that was entered into by the Director of the Defense Logistics Agency under subsection (b) before the expiration of the authority or any obligation to provide logistics support and logistics services under that contract; or

(B) any authority—

(i) to enter into a contract described in subsection (a) for which a solicitation of offers was issued in accordance with the regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (e)(2) before the date of the expiration of the authority; or

(ii) to provide logistics support and logistics services to the contractor with respect to that contract in accordance with this section.

SEC. 346. CONTINUATION OF ARSENAL SUPPORT PROGRAM INITIATIVE.

(a) EXTENSION THROUGH FISCAL YEAR 2004.—Subsection (a) of section 343 of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (as enacted into law by Public Law 106-398; 114 Stat. 1654A-65) is amended by striking “and 2002” and inserting “through 2004”.

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Subsection (g) of such section is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking “2002” and inserting “2004”; and

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking the first sentence and inserting the following new sentence: “Not later than July 1, 2003, the Secretary of the Army shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the results of the demonstration program since its implementation, including the Secretary's views regarding the benefits of the program for Army manufacturing arsenals and the Department of the Army and the success of the program in achieving the purposes specified in subsection (b).”.

SEC. 348. INSTALLATION AND CONNECTION POLICY AND PROCEDURES REGARDING DEFENSE SWITCH NETWORK.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF POLICY AND PROCEDURES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall establish clear and uniform policy and procedures, applicable to the military departments and Defense Agencies, regarding the installation and connection of telecom switches to the Defense Switch Network.

(b) ELEMENTS OF POLICY AND PROCEDURES.—The policy and procedures shall address at a minimum the following:

(1) Clear interoperability and compatibility requirements for procuring, certifying, installing, and connecting telecom switches to the Defense Switch Network.

(2) Current, complete, and enforceable testing, validation, and certification procedures needed to ensure the interoperability and compatibility requirements are satisfied.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may specify certain circumstances in which—

(A) the requirements for testing, validation, and certification of telecom switches may be waived; or

(B) interim authority for the installation and connection of telecom switches to the Defense Switch Network may be granted.

(2) Only the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence, after consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, may approve a waiver or grant of interim authority under paragraph (1).

(d) INVENTORY OF DEFENSE SWITCH NETWORK.—The Secretary of Defense shall prepare and maintain an inventory of all telecom switches that, as of the date on which the Secretary issues the policy and procedures—

(1) are installed or connected to the Defense Switch Network; but

(2) have not been tested, validated, and certified by the Defense Information Systems Agency (Joint Interoperability Test Center).

(e) INTEROPERABILITY RISKS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall, on an ongoing basis—

(A) identify and assess the interoperability risks that are associated with the installation or connection of uncertified switches to the Defense Switch Network and the maintenance of such switches on the Defense Switch Network; and

(B) develop and implement a plan to eliminate or mitigate such risks as identified.

(2) The Secretary shall initiate action under paragraph (1) upon completing the initial inventory of telecom switches required by subsection (d).

(f) TELECOM SWITCH DEFINED.—In this section, the term “telecom switch” means hardware or software designed to send and receive voice, data, or video signals across a network that provides customer voice, data, or video equipment access to the Defense Switch Network or public switched telecommunications networks.

SEC. 349. ENGINEERING STUDY AND ENVIRONMENTAL ANALYSIS OF ROAD MODIFICATIONS IN VICINITY OF FORT BELVOIR, VIRGINIA.

(a) STUDY AND ANALYSIS.—(1) The Secretary of the Army shall conduct a preliminary engineering study and environmental analysis to evaluate the feasibility of establishing a connector road between Richmond Highway (United States Route 1) and Telegraph Road in order to provide an alternative to Beulah Road (State Route 613) and Woodlawn Road (State Route 618) at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, which were closed as a force protection measure.

(2) It is the sense of Congress that the study and analysis should consider as one alternative the extension of Old Mill Road between Richmond Highway and Telegraph Road.

(b) CONSULTATION.—The study required by subsection (a) shall be conducted in consultation with the Department of Transportation of the Commonwealth of Virginia and Fairfax County, Virginia.

(c) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress a summary report on the study and analysis required by subsection (a). The summary report shall be submitted together with the budget justification materials in support of the budget of the President for fiscal year 2006 that is submitted to Congress under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code.

(d) FUNDING.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(1) for the Army for operation and maintenance, $5,000,000 may be available for the study and analysis required by subsection (a).

SEC. 350. EXTENSION OF WORK SAFETY DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

Subtitle E—National Call to Service

SEC. 541. ENLISTMENT INCENTIVES FOR PURSUIT OF SKILLS TO FACILITATE NATIONAL SERVICE.

(a) AUTHORITY.—(1) Chapter 5 of title 37, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§326. Enlistment incentives for pursuit of skills to facilitate national service

“(a) INCENTIVES AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of Defense may carry out a program in accordance with the provisions of this section under which program a National Call to Service participant described in subsection (b) shall be entitled to an incentive specified in subsection (d).

“(b) NATIONAL CALL TO SERVICE PARTICIPANT.—In this section, the term ‘National Call to Service participant’ means a person who first enlists in the armed forces pursuant to a written agreement (prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned) under which agreement the person shall—

“(1) upon completion of initial entry training (as prescribed by the Secretary of Defense), serve on active duty in the armed forces in a military occupational specialty designated by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (c) for a period of 15 months; and

“(2) upon completion of such service on active duty, and without a break in service, serve the minimum period of obligated service specified in the agreement under this section—

“(A) on active duty in the armed forces;

“(B) in the Selected Reserve;

“(C) in the Individual Ready Reserve;

“(D) in the Peace Corps, Americorps, or another national service program jointly designated by the Secretary of Defense and the head of such program for purposes of this section; or “(E) in any combination of service referred to in subparagraphs (A) through (D) that is approved by the Secretary of the military department concerned pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

“(c) DESIGNATED MILITARY OCCUPATIONAL SPECIALTIES.—The Secretary of Defense shall designate military occupational specialties for purposes of subsection (b)(1). Such military occupational specialties shall be military occupational specialties that will facilitate, as determined by the Secretary, pursuit of national service by National Call to Service participants during and after their completion of duty or service under an agreement under subsection (b).

“(1) Payment of a bonus in the amount of $5,000.

“(2) Payment of outstanding principal and interest on qualifying student loans of the National Call to Service participant in an amount not to exceed $18,000.

“(3) Entitlement to an allowance for educational assistance at the monthly rate equal to the monthly rate payable for basic educational assistance allowances under section 3015(a)(1) of title 38 for a total of 12 months.

“(4) Entitlement to an allowance for educational assistance at the monthly rate equal to ⅔ of the monthly rate payable for basic educational assistance allowances under section 3015(b)(1) of title 38 for a total of 36 months.

“(e) ELECTION OF INCENTIVES.—A National Call to Service participant shall elect in the agreement under subsection (b) which incentive under subsection (d) to receive. An election under this subsection is irrevocable.

“(f) PAYMENT OF BONUS AMOUNTS.—(1) Payment to a National Call to Service participant of the bonus elected by the National Call to Service participant under subsection (d)(1) shall be made in such time and manner as the Secretary of Defense shall prescribe.

“(2)(A) Payment of outstanding principal and interest on the qualifying student loans of a National Call to Service participant, as elected under subsection (d)(2), shall be made in such time and manner as the Secretary of Defense shall prescribe.

“(B) Payment under this paragraph of the outstanding principal and interest on the qualifying student loans of a National Call to Service participant shall be made to the holder of such student loans, as identified by the National Call to Service participant to the Secretary of the military department concerned for purposes of such payment.

“(3) Payment of a bonus or incentive in accordance with this subsection shall be made by the Secretary of the military department concerned.

“(g) COORDINATION WITH MONTGOMERY GI BILL BENEFITS.—(1) A National Call to Service participant who elects an incentive under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (d) is not entitled to educational assistance under chapter 1606 of title 10 or basic educational assistance under subchapter II of chapter 30 of title 38.

“(2)(A) The Secretary of Defense shall, to the maximum extent practicable, administer the receipt by National Call to Service participants of incentives under paragraph (3) or (4) of subsection (d) as if such National Call to Service participants were, in receiving such incentives, receiving educational assistance for members of the Selected Reserve under chapter 1606 of title 10.

“(B) The Secretary of Defense shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, prescribe regulations for purposes of subparagraph (A). Such regulations shall, to the maximum extent practicable, take into account the administrative provisions of chapters 30 and 36 of title 38 that are specified in section 16136 of title 10.

“(3) Except as provided in paragraph (1), nothing in this section shall prohibit a National Call to Service participant who satisfies through service under subsection (b) the eligibility requirements for educational assistance under chapter 1606 of title 10 or basic educational assistance under chapter 30 of title 38 from an entitlement to such educational assistance under chapter 1606 of title 10 or basic educational assistance under chapter 30 of title 38, as the case may be.

“(h) REPAYMENT.—(1) If a National Call to Service participant who has entered into an agreement under subsection (b) and received or benefited from an incentive under subsection (d)(1) or (d)(2) fails to complete the total period of service specified in such agreement, the National Call to Service participant shall refund to the United States the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of the incentive as the uncompleted part of such service bears to the total period of such service.

“(2) Subject to paragraph (3), an obligation to reimburse the United States imposed under paragraph (1) is for all purposes a debt owed to the United States.

“(3) The Secretary concerned may waive, in whole or in part, a reimbursement required under paragraph (1) if the Secretary concerned determines that recovery would be against equity and good conscience or would be contrary to the best interests of the United States.

“(4) A discharge in bankruptcy under title 11 that is entered into less than 5 years after the termination of an agreement entered into under subsection (b) does not discharge the person signing the agreement from a debt arising under the agreement or under paragraph (1).

“(i) FUNDING.—Amounts for payment of incentives under subsection (d), including payment of allowances for educational assistance under that subsection, shall be derived from amounts available to the Secretary of the military department concerned for payment of pay, allowances, and other expenses of the members of the armed force concerned.

“(j) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the military departments shall prescribe regulations for purposes of the program under this section.

“(k) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘Americorps’ means the Americorps program carried out under subtitle C of title I of the National and Community Service Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12571 et seq.).

“(2) The term ‘qualifying student loan’ means a loan, the proceeds of which were used to pay the cost of attendance (as defined in section 472 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 10871)) at an institution of higher education (as defined in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001)).

“(3) The term ‘Secretary of a military department’ includes the Secretary of Transportation, with respect to matters concerning the Coast Guard when it is not operating as a service in the Navy.”

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of that chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 325 the following new item:

“326. Enlistment incentives for pursuit of skills to facilitate national service.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 2002. No individual entering into an enlistment before that date may participate in the program under section 326 of title 37, United States Code, as added by that subsection.

SEC. 542. MILITARY RECRUITER ACCESS TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.

(a) ACCESS TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—Section 503 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection (d):

“(d) ACCESS TO INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—(1) Each institution of higher education receiving assistance under the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.)—

“(A) shall provide to military recruiters the same access to students at the institution as is provided generally to prospective employers of those students; and

“(B) shall, upon a request made by military recruiters for military recruiting purposes, provide access to the names, addresses, and telephone listings of students at the institution, notwithstanding section 444(a)(5)(B) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232g(a)(5)(B)).

“(2) An institution of higher education may not release a student's name, address, and telephone listing under paragraph (1)(B) without the prior written consent of the student or the parent of the student (in the case of a student under the age of 18) if the student, or a parent of the student, as appropriate, has submitted a request to the institution of higher education that the student's information not be released for a purpose covered by that subparagraph without prior written consent. Each institution of higher education shall notify students and parents of the rights provided under the preceding sentence.

“(3) In this subsection, the term ‘institution of higher education’ has the meaning given the term in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001).”

(b) NOTIFICATION.—The Secretary of Education shall provide to institutions of higher education notice of the provisions of subsection (d) of section 503 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by subsection (a) of this section. Such notice shall be provided not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and shall be provided in consultation with the Secretary of Defense.

Subtitle F—Other Matters

SEC. 551. BIENNIAL SURVEYS ON RACIAL, ETHNIC, AND GENDER ISSUES.

(a) DIVISION OF ANNUAL SURVEY INTO TWO BIENNIAL SURVEYS.—Section 481 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

“§ 481. Racial, ethnic, and gender issues: biennial surveys

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Defense shall carry out two separate biennial surveys in accordance with this section to identify and assess racial, ethnic, and gender issues and discrimination among members of the armed forces serving on active duty and the extent (if any) of activity among such members that may be seen as so-called ‘hate group’ activity.

“(b) BIENNIAL SURVEY ON RACIAL AND ETHNIC ISSUES.—One of the surveys conducted every two years under this section shall solicit information on racial and ethnic issues and the climate in the armed forces for forming professional relationships among members of the armed forces of the various racial and ethnic groups. The information solicited shall include the following:

“(1) Indicators of positive and negative trends for professional and personal relationships among members of all racial and ethnic groups.

“(2) The effectiveness of Department of Defense policies designed to improve relationships among all racial and ethnic groups.

“(3) The effectiveness of current processes for complaints on and investigations into racial and ethnic discrimination.

“(c) BIENNIAL SURVEY ON GENDER ISSUES.—One of the surveys conducted every two years under this section shall solicit information on gender issues, including issues relating to gender-based harassment and discrimination, and the climate in the armed forces for forming professional relationships between male and female members of the armed forces. The information solicited shall include the following:

“(1) Indicators of positive and negative trends for professional and personal relationships between male and female members of the armed forces.

“(2) The effectiveness of Department of Defense policies designed to improve professional relationships between male and female members of the armed forces.

“(3) The effectiveness of current processes for complaints on and investigations into gender-based discrimination.

“(d) SURVEYS TO ALTERNATE EVERY YEAR.—The biennial survey under subsection (b) shall be conducted in odd-numbered years. The biennial survey under subsection (c) shall be conducted in even-numbered years.

“(e) IMPLEMENTING ENTITY.—The Secretary shall carry out the biennial surveys through entities in the Department of Defense as follows:

“(1) The biennial review under subsection (b), through the Armed Forces Survey on Racial and Ethnic Issues.

“(2) The biennial review under subsection (c), through the Armed Forces Survey on Gender Issues.

“(f) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Upon the completion of a biennial survey under this section, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report containing the results of the survey.

“(g) INAPPLICABILITY TO COAST GUARD.—The requirements for surveys under this section do not apply to the Coast Guard.”.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Section 1182(c) of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting “(1)” after “(c)”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(2) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary concerned, an officer referred to in paragraph (1) may be required to take leave pending the completion of the action under this chapter in the case of that officer. The officer may be required to begin such leave at any time following the officer's receipt of the report of the board of inquiry, including the board's recommendation for removal from active duty, and the expiration of any period allowed for submission by the officer of a rebuttal to that report. The leave may be continued until the date on which action by the Secretary concerned under this chapter is completed in the case of the officer or may be terminated at any earlier time.”.

(b) PAYMENT FOR MANDATORY EXCESS LEAVE UPON DISAPPROVAL OF CERTAIN INVOLUNTARY SEPARATION RECOMMENDATIONS.—Chapter 40 of such title is amended by inserting after section 707 the following new section:

“(a) An officer—

“(1) who is required to take leave under section 1182(c)(2) of this title, any period of which is charged as excess leave under section 706(a) of this title, and

“(2) whose recommendation for removal from active duty in a report of a board of inquiry is not approved by the Secretary concerned under section 1184 of this title, shall be paid, as provided in subsection (b), for the period of leave charged as excess leave.

“(b)(1) An officer entitled to be paid under this section shall be deemed, for purposes of this section, to have accrued pay and allowances for each day of leave required to be taken under section 1182(c)(2) of this title that is charged as excess leave (except any day of accrued leave for which the officer has been paid under section 706(b)(1) of this title and which has been charged as excess leave).

“(2) The officer shall be paid the amount of pay and allowances that is deemed to have accrued to the officer under paragraph (1), reduced by the total amount of his income from wages, salaries, tips, other personal service income, unemployment compensation, and public assistance benefits from any Government agency during the period the officer is deemed to have accrued pay and allowances. Except as provided in paragraph (3), such payment shall be made within 60 days after the date on which the Secretary concerned decides not to remove the officer from active duty.

“(3) If an officer is entitled to be paid under this section, but fails to provide sufficient information in a timely manner regarding the officer's income when such information is requested under regulations prescribed under subsection (c), the period of time prescribed in paragraph (2) shall be extended until 30 days after the date on which the member provides the information requested.

“(c) This section shall be administered under uniform regulations prescribed by the Secretaries concerned. The regulations may provide for the method of determining an officer's income during any period the officer is deemed to have accrued pay and allowances, including a requirement that the officer provide income tax returns and other documentation to verify the amount of the officer's income.”.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 706 of such title is amended by inserting “or 1182(c)(2)” after “section 876a” in subsections (a), (b), and (c).

(2) The heading for such section is amended to read as follows:

“§ 706. Administration of required leave”.

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 40 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the item relating to section 706 and inserting the following:

“706. Administration of required leave.”;

and

(2) by inserting after the item relating to section 707 the following new item:

(a) AUTHORITY TO PAY INCREASED RATE.—Section 402(d) of title 37, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

(d) SPECIAL RATE FOR ENLISTED MEMBERS OCCUPYING SINGLE QUARTERS WITHOUT ADEQUATE AVAILABILITY OF MEALS.—The Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of Transportation with respect to the Coast Guard when it is not operating as a service in the Navy, may pay an enlisted member the basic allowance for subsistence under this section at a monthly rate that is twice the amount in effect under subsection (b)(2) while—

(1) the member is assigned to single Government quarters which have no adequate food storage or preparation facility in the quarters; and

(2) there is no Government messing facility serving those quarters that is capable of making meals available to the occupants of the quarters.”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (a) and the amendment made by such subsection shall take effect on October 1, 2002.

SEC. 603. BASIC ALLOWANCE FOR HOUSING IN CASES OF LOW-COST OR NO-COST MOVES.

Section 403 of title 37, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by transferring paragraph (7) of subsection (b) to the end of the section; and

(2) in such paragraph—

(A) by striking “(7)” and all that follows through “circumstances of which make it necessary that the member be” and inserting “(o) TREATMENT OF LOW-COST AND NO-COST MOVES AS NOT BEING REASSIGNMENTS.—In the case of a member who is assigned to duty at a location or under circumstances that make it necessary for the member to be”; and

(B) by inserting “for the purposes of this section” after “may be treated”.

SEC. 604. TEMPORARY AUTHORITY FOR HIGHER RATES OF PARTIAL BASIC ALLOWANCE FOR HOUSING FOR CERTAIN MEMBERS ASSIGNED TO HOUSING UNDER ALTERNATIVE AUTHORITY FOR ACQUISITION AND IMPROVEMENT OF MILITARY HOUSING.

(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may prescribe and, under section 403(n) of title 37, United States Code, pay for members of the Armed Forces (without dependents) in privatized housing higher rates of partial basic allowance for housing than those that are authorized under paragraph (2) of such section 403(n).

(b) MEMBERS IN PRIVATIZED HOUSING.—For the purposes of this section, a member of the Armed Forces (without dependents) is a member of the Armed Forces (without dependents) in privatized housing while the member is assigned to housing that is acquired or constructed under the authority of subchapter IV of chapter 169 of title 10, United States Code.

(c) TREATMENT OF HOUSING AS GOVERNMENT QUARTERS.—For purposes of section 403 of title 37, United States Code, a member of the Armed Forces (without dependents) in privatized housing shall be treated as residing in quarters of the United States or a housing facility under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of a military department while a higher rate of partial allowance for housing is paid for the member under this section.

(d) PAYMENT TO PRIVATE SOURCE.—The partial basic allowance for housing paid for a member at a higher rate under this section may be paid directly to the private sector source of the housing to whom the member is obligated to pay rent or other charge for residing in such housing if the private sector source credits the amount so paid against the amount owed by the member for the rent or other charge.

(e) TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.—Rates prescribed under subsection (a) may not be paid under the authority of this section in connection with contracts that are entered into after December 31, 2007, for the construction or acquisition of housing under the authority of subchapter IV of chapter 169 of title 10, United States Code.

“(f) PERSONS RECEIVING MEDICAL CARE FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.—A covered beneficiary who is enrolled in and seeks care under the TRICARE program may not be denied such care on the ground that the covered beneficiary is receiving health care from the Department of Veterans Affairs on an ongoing basis if the Department of Veterans Affairs cannot provide the covered beneficiary with the particular care sought by the covered beneficiary within the maximum period provided in the access to care standards that are applicable to that particular care under TRICARE program policy.”.

TITLE VIII—ACQUISITION POLICY, ACQUISITION MANAGEMENT, AND RELATED MATTERS

Subtitle A—Major Defense Acquisition Programs

SEC. 801. BUY-TO-BUDGET ACQUISITION OF END ITEMS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—(1) Chapter 131 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 2228. Buy-to-budget acquisition: end items

“(a) AUTHORITY TO ACQUIRE ADDITIONAL END ITEMS.—Using funds available to the Department of Defense for the acquisition of an end item, the head of agency making the acquisition may acquire a higher quantity of the end item than the quantity specified for the end item in a law providing for the funding of that acquisition if that head of an agency makes each of the following findings:

“(1) The agency has an established requirement for the end item that is expected to remain substantially unchanged throughout the period of the acquisition.

“(2) It is possible to acquire the higher quantity of the end item without additional funding because of production efficiencies or other cost reductions.

“(3) The amount of the funds used for the acquisition of the higher quantity of the end item will not exceed the amount provided under that law for the acquisition of the end item.

“(4) The amount so provided is sufficient to ensure that each unit of the end item acquired within the higher quantity is fully funded as a complete end item.

“(b) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations for the administration of this section. The regulations shall include, at a minimum, the following:

“(1) The level of approval within the Department of Defense that is required for a decision to acquire a higher quantity of an end item under subsection (a).

“(2) Authority to exceed by up to 10 percent the quantity of an end item approved in a justification and approval of the use of procedures other than competitive procedures for the acquisition of the end item under section 2304 of this title, but only to the extent necessary to acquire a quantity of the end item permitted in the exercise of authority under subsection (a).

“(c) NOTIFICATION OF CONGRESS.—The head of an agency is not required to notify Congress in advance regarding a decision under the authority of this section to acquire a higher quantity of an end item than is specified in a law described in subsection (a), but shall notify the congressional defense committees of the decision not later than 30 days after the date of the decision.

“(d) WAIVER BY OTHER LAW.—A provision of law may not be construed as prohibiting the acquisition of a higher quantity of an end item under this section unless that provision of law—

“(1) specifically refers to this section; and

“(2) specifically states that the acquisition of the higher quantity of the end item is prohibited notwithstanding the authority provided in this section.

“(e) DEFINITIONS.—(1) For the purposes of this section, a quantity of an end item shall be considered specified in a law if the quantity is specified either in a provision of that law or in any related representation that is set forth separately in a table, chart, or explanatory text included in a joint explanatory statement or governing committee report accompanying the law.

“(2) In this section:

“(A) The term ‘congressional defense committees’ means—

“(i) the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; and “(ii) the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

“(B) The term ‘head of an agency’ means the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force.”.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

“2228. Buy-to-budget acquisition: end items.”.

SEC. 802. REPORT TO CONGRESS ON INCREMENTAL ACQUISITION OF MAJOR SYSTEMS.

(a) REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the approach that the Secretary plans to take to applying the requirements of chapter 144 of title 10, United States Code, sections 139, 181, 2366, 2399, and 2400 of such title, Department of Defense Directive 5000.1, Department of Defense Instruction 5000.2, and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Instruction 3170.01B, and other provisions of law and regulations applicable to incremental acquisition programs.

(b) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report shall, at a minimum, address the following matters:

(1) The manner in which the Secretary plans to establish and approve, for each increment of an incremental acquisition program—

- (A) operational requirements; and
- (B) cost and schedule goals.

(2) The manner in which the Secretary plans, for each increment of an incremental acquisition program—

- (A) to meet requirements for operational testing and live fire testing;
- (B) to monitor cost and schedule performance; and

(C) to comply with laws requiring reports to Congress on results testing and on cost and schedule performance.

(3) The manner in which the Secretary plans to ensure that each increment of an incremental acquisition program is designed—

- (A) to achieve interoperability within and among United States forces and United States coalition partners; and
- (B) to optimize total system performance and minimize total ownership costs by giving appropriate consideration to—
 - (i) logistics planning;
 - (ii) manpower, personnel, and training;
 - (iii) human, environmental, safety, occupational health, accessibility, survivability, operational continuity, and security factors;
 - (iv) protection of critical program information; and
 - (v) spectrum management.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “incremental acquisition program” means an acquisition program that is to be conducted in discrete phases or blocks, with each phase or block consisting of the planned production and acquisition of one or more units of a major system.

(2) The term “increment” refers to one of the discrete phases or blocks of an incremental acquisition program.

(3) The term “major system” has the meaning given such term in section 2302(5) of title 10, United States Code.

SEC. 803. PILOT PROGRAM FOR SPIRAL DEVELOPMENT OF MAJOR SYSTEMS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense is authorized to conduct a pilot program for the spiral development of major systems and to designate research and development programs of the military departments and Defense Agencies to participate in the pilot program.

(b) DESIGNATION OF PARTICIPATING PROGRAMS.—(1) A research and development program for a major system of a military department or Defense Agency may be conducted as a spiral development program only if the Secretary of Defense approves a spiral development plan submitted by the Secretary of that military department or head of that Defense Agency, as the case may be, and designates the program as a participant in the pilot program under this section.

(2) The Secretary of Defense shall submit a copy of each spiral development plan approved under this section to the congressional defense committees.

(c) SPIRAL DEVELOPMENT PLANS.—A spiral development plan for a participating program shall, at a minimum, include the following matters:

(1) A rationale for dividing the program into separate spirals, together with a preliminary identification of the spirals to be included.

(2) A program strategy, including overall cost, schedule, and performance goals for the total program.

(3) Specific cost, schedule, and performance parameters, including measurable exit criteria, for the first spiral to be conducted.

(4) A testing plan to ensure that performance goals, parameters, and exit criteria are met.

(5) An appropriate limitation on the number of prototype units that may be produced under the program.

(6) Specific performance parameters, including measurable exit criteria, that must be met before the program proceeds into production of units in excess of the limitation on the number of prototype units.

(d) GUIDANCE.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall issue guidance for the implementation of the spiral development pilot program authorized by this section. The guidance shall, at a minimum, include the following matters:

(1) A process for the development, review, and approval of each spiral development plan submitted by the Secretary of a military department or head of a Defense Agency.

(2) A process for establishing and approving specific cost, schedule, and performance parameters, including measurable exit criteria, for spirals to be conducted after the first spiral.

(3) Appropriate planning, testing, reporting, oversight, and other requirements to ensure that the spiral development program—

(A) satisfies realistic and clearly-defined performance standards, cost objectives, and schedule parameters (including measurable exit criteria for each spiral);

(B) achieve interoperability within and among United States forces and United States coalition partners; and

(C) optimize total system performance and minimize total ownership costs by giving appropriate consideration to—

- (i) logistics planning;
- (ii) manpower, personnel, and training;
- (iii) human, environmental, safety, occupational health, accessibility, survivability, operational continuity, and security factors;
- (iv) protection of critical program information; and
- (v) spectrum management.

(4) A process for independent validation of the satisfaction of exit criteria and other relevant requirements.

(5) A process for operational testing of fieldable prototypes to be conducted before or in conjunction with the fielding of the prototypes.

(e) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall submit to Congress at the end of each quarter of a fiscal year a status report on each research and development program that is a participant in the pilot program. The report shall contain information on unit costs that is similar to the information on unit costs under major defense acquisition programs that is required to be provided to Congress under chapter 144 of title 10, United States Code, except that the information on unit costs shall address projected prototype costs instead of production costs.

(f) APPLICABILITY OF EXISTING LAW.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt any program of the Department of Defense from the application of any provision of chapter 144 of title 10, United States Code, section 139, 181, 2366, 2399, or 2400 of such title, or any requirement under Department of Defense Directive 5000.1, Department of Defense Instruction 5000.2, or Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Instruction 3170.01B in accordance with the terms of such provision or requirement.

(g) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM PARTICIPATION.—The conduct of a participating program as a spiral development program under the pilot program shall terminate when the decision is made for the participating program to proceed into the production of units in excess of the number of prototype units permitted under the limitation provided in spiral development plan for the program pursuant to subsection (c)(5).

(h) TERMINATION OF PILOT PROGRAM.—(1) The authority to conduct a pilot program under this section shall terminate three years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The termination of the pilot program shall not terminate the authority of the Secretary of a military department or head of a Defense Agency to continue to conduct, as a spiral development program, any research and development program that was designated to participate in the pilot program before the date on which the pilot program terminates. In the continued conduct of such a research and development program as a spiral development program on and after such date, the spiral development plan approved for the program, the guidance issued under subsection (d), and subsections (e), (f), and (g) shall continue to apply.

(i) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “spiral development program” means a research and development program that—

(A) is conducted in discrete phases or blocks, each of which will result in the development of fieldable prototypes; and

(B) will not proceed into acquisition until specific performance parameters, including measurable exit criteria, have been met.

(2) The term “spiral” means one of the discrete phases or blocks of a spiral development program.

(3) The term “major system” has the meaning given such term in section 2302(5) of title 10, United States Code.

(4) The term “participating program” means a research and development program that is designated to participate in the pilot program under subsection (b).

SEC. 804. IMPROVEMENT OF SOFTWARE ACQUISITION PROCESSES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAMS.—(1) The Secretary of each military department shall establish a program to improve the software acquisition processes of that military department.

(2) The head of each Defense Agency that manages a major defense acquisition program with a substantial software component shall establish a program to improve the software acquisition processes of that Defense Agency.

(3) The programs required by this subsection shall be established not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—A program to improve software acquisition processes under this section shall, at a minimum, include the following:

(1) A documented process for software acquisition planning, requirements development and management, project management and oversight, and risk management.

(2) Efforts to develop systems for performance measurement and continual process improvement.

(3) A system for ensuring that each program office with substantial software responsibilities implements and adheres to established processes and requirements.

(c) DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE GUIDANCE.—The Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence, in consultation with the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics, shall—

(1) prescribe uniformly applicable guidance for the administration of all of the programs established under subsection (a) and take such actions as are necessary to ensure that the military departments and Defense Agencies comply with the guidance; and

(2) assist the Secretaries of the military departments and the heads of the Defense Agencies to carry out such programs effectively by identifying, and serving as a clearinghouse for information regarding, best practices in software acquisition processes in both the public and private sectors.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “Defense Agency” has the meaning given the term in section 101(a)(11) of title 10, United States Code.

(2) The term “major defense acquisition program” has the meaning given the term in section 2430 of title 10, United States Code.

SEC. 805. INDEPENDENT TECHNOLOGY READINESS ASSESSMENTS.

Section 804(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1180) is amended—

(1) by striking “and” at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting “; and”; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(3) identify each case in which an authoritative decision has been made within the Department of Defense not to conduct an independent technology readiness assessment for a critical technology on a major defense acquisition program and explain the reasons for the decision.”

SEC. 806. TIMING OF CERTIFICATION IN CONNECTION WITH WAIVER OF SURVIVABILITY AND LETHALITY TESTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) CERTIFICATION FOR EXPEDITED PROGRAMS.—Paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of section 2366 of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

“(1) The Secretary of Defense may waive the application of the survivability and lethality tests of this section to a covered system, munitions program, missile program, or covered product improvement program if the Secretary determines that live-fire testing of such system or program would be unreasonably expensive and impractical and submits a certification of that determination to Congress—

“(A) before Milestone B approval for the system or program; or “(B) in the case of a system or program initiated at—

“(i) Milestone B, as soon as is practicable after the Milestone B approval; or

“(ii) Milestone C, as soon as is practicable after the Milestone C approval.”

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Subsection (e) of such section is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

“(8) The term ‘Milestone B approval’ means a decision to enter into system development and demonstration pursuant to guidance prescribed by the Secretary of Defense for the management of Department of Defense acquisition programs.

“(9) The term ‘Milestone C approval’ means a decision to enter into production and deployment pursuant to guidance prescribed by the Secretary of Defense for the management of Department of Defense acquisition programs.”

Subtitle B—Procurement Policy Improvements

SEC. 811. PERFORMANCE GOALS FOR CONTRACTING FOR SERVICES.

(a) INDIVIDUAL PURCHASES OF SERVICES.—Subsection (a) of section 802 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107; 10 U.S.C. 2330 note) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

“(3) To support the attainment of the goals established in paragraph (2), the Department of Defense shall have the following goals:

“(A) To increase, as a percentage of all of the individual purchases of services made by or for the Department of Defense under multiple award contracts for a fiscal year (calculated on the basis of dollar value), the volume of the individual purchases of services that are made on a competitive basis and involve the receipt of two or more offers from qualified contractors to a percentage as follows:

“(i) For fiscal year 2003, a percentage not less than 50 percent.

“(iii) For fiscal year 2011, a percentage not less than 80 percent.

“(B) To increase, as a percentage of all of the individual purchases of services made by or for the Department of Defense under multiple award contracts for a fiscal year (calculated on the basis of dollar value), the use of performance-based purchasing specifying firm fixed prices for the specific tasks to be performed to a percentage as follows:

“(i) For fiscal year 2003, a percentage not less than 30 percent.

“(iii) For fiscal year 2005, a percentage not less than 50 percent.

“(iv) For fiscal year 2011, a percentage not less than 80 percent.”

(b) EXTENSION AND REVISION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Subsection (b) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking “March 1, 2006”, and inserting “March 1, 2011”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

“(6) Regarding the individual purchases of services that were made by or for the Department of Defense under multiple award contracts in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which the report is required to be submitted, information (determined using the data collection system established under section 2330a of title 10, United States Code) as follows:

“(A) The percentage (calculated on the basis of dollar value) of such purchases that are purchases that were made on a competitive basis and involved receipt of two or more offers from qualified contractors.

“(B) The percentage (calculated on the basis of dollar value) of such purchases that are performance-based purchases specifying firm fixed prices for the specific tasks to be performed.”.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘individual purchase’ means a task order, delivery order, or other purchase.

“(2) The term ‘multiple award contract’ means—

“(A) a contract that is entered into by the Administrator of General Services under the multiple award schedule program referred to in section 2302(2)(C) of title 10, United States Code;

“(B) a multiple award task order contract that is entered into under the authority of sections 2304a through 2304d of title 10, United States Code, or sections 303H through 303K of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253h through 253k); and

“(C) any other indefinite delivery, indefinite quantity contract that is entered into by the head of a Federal agency with two or more sources pursuant to the same solicitation.”.

SEC. 812. GRANTS OF EXCEPTIONS TO COST OR PRICING DATA CERTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS AND WAIVERS OF COST ACCOUNTING STANDARDS.

(a) GUIDANCE FOR EXCEPTIONS IN EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES.—(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall issue guidance on the circumstances under which it is appropriate to grant—

(A) an exception pursuant to section 2306a(b)(1)(C) of title 10, United States Code, relating to submittal of certified contract cost and pricing data; or

(B) a waiver pursuant to section 26(f)(5)(B) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 422(f)(5)(B)), relating to the applicability of cost accounting standards to contracts and subcontracts.

(2) The guidance shall, at a minimum, include a limitation that a grant of an exception or waiver referred to in paragraph (1) is appropriate with respect to a contract or subcontract, or (in the case of submittal of certified cost and pricing data) a modification, only upon a determination that the property or services cannot be obtained under the contract, subcontract, or modification, as the case may be, without the grant of the exception or waiver.

(b) SEMI-ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall transmit to the congressional defense committees promptly after the end of each half of a fiscal year a report on the exceptions to cost or pricing data certification requirements and the waivers of applicability of cost accounting standards that, in cases described in paragraph (2), were granted during that half of the fiscal year.

(2) The report for a half of a fiscal year shall include an explanation of—

(A) each decision by the head of a procuring activity within the Department of Defense to exercise the authority under subparagraph (B) or (C) of subsection (b)(1) of section 2306a of title 10, United States Code, to grant an exception to the requirements of such section in the case of a contract, subcontract, or contract or subcontract modification that is expected to have a price of $15,000,000 or more; and

(B) each decision by the Secretary of Defense or the head of an agency within the Department of Defense to exercise the authority under subsection (f)(5)(B) of section 26 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act to waive the applicability of the cost accounting standards under such section in the case of a contract or subcontract that is expected to have a value of $15,000,000 or more.

(c) ADVANCE NOTIFICATION OF CONGRESS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall transmit to the congressional defense committees an advance notification of—

(A) any decision by the head of a procuring activity within the Department of Defense to exercise the authority under subsection (b)(1)(C) of section 2306a of title 10, United States Code, to grant an exception to the requirements of such section in the case of a contract, subcontract, or contract or subcontract modification that is expected to have a price of $75,000,000 or more; or

(B) any decision by the Secretary of Defense or the head of an agency within the Department of Defense to exercise the authority under subsection (f)(5)(B) of section 26 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act to waive the applicability of the cost accounting standards under such section to a contract or subcontract that is expected to have a value of $75,000,000 or more.

(2) The notification under paragraph (1) regarding a decision to grant an exception or waiver shall be transmitted not later than 10 days before the exception or waiver is granted.

(d) CONTENTS OF REPORTS AND NOTIFICATIONS.—A report pursuant to subsection (b) and a notification pursuant to subsection (c) shall include, for each grant of an exception or waiver, the following matters:

(1) A discussion of the justification for the grant of the exception or waiver, including at a minimum—

(A) in the case of an exception granted pursuant to section 2306a(b)(1)(B) of title 10, United States Code, an explanation of the basis for the determination that the products or services to be purchased are commercial items; and

(B) in the case of an exception granted pursuant to section 2306a(b)(1)(C) of such title, or a waiver granted pursuant to section 26(f)(5)(B) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act, an explanation of the basis for the determination that it would not have been possible to obtain the products or services from the offeror without the grant of the exception or waiver.

(2) A description of the specific steps taken or to be taken within the Department of Defense to ensure that the price of each contract, subcontract, or modification covered by the report or notification, as the case may be, is fair and reasonable.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The requirements of this section shall apply to each exception or waiver that is granted under a provision of law referred to in subsection (a) on or after the date on which the guidance required by that subsection (a) is issued.

SEC. 813. EXTENSION OF REQUIREMENT FOR ANNUAL REPORT ON DEFENSE COMMERCIAL PRICING MANAGEMENT IMPROVEMENT.

Section 803(c)(4) of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261; 112 Stat. 2082; 10 U.S.C. 2306a note) is amended by

SEC. 814. INTERNAL CONTROLS ON THE USE OF PURCHASE CARDS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR ENHANCED INTERNAL CONTROLS.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall take action to ensure that appropriate internal controls for the use of purchase cards issued by the Federal Government to Department of Defense personnel are in place throughout the Department of Defense. At a minimum, the internal controls shall include the following:

(1) A requirement that the receipt and acceptance, and the documentation of the receipt and acceptance, of the property or services purchased on a purchase card be verified by a Department of Defense official who is independent of the purchaser.

(2) A requirement that the monthly purchase card statements of purchases on a purchase card be reviewed and certified for accuracy by an official of the Department of Defense who is independent of the purchaser.

(3) Specific policies limiting the number of purchase cards issued, with the objective of significantly reducing the number of cardholders.

(4) Specific policies on credit limits authorized for cardholders, with the objective of minimizing financial risk to the Federal Government.

(5) Specific criteria for identifying employees eligible to be issued purchase cards, with the objective of ensuring the integrity of cardholders.

(6) Accounting procedures that ensure that purchase card transactions are properly recorded in Department of Defense accounting records.

(7) Requirements for regular internal review of purchase card statements to identify—

(A) potentially fraudulent, improper, and abusive purchases;

(B) any patterns of improper cardholder transactions, such as purchases of prohibited items; and

(C) categories of purchases that should be made through other mechanisms to better aggregate purchases and negotiate lower prices.

(b) TRAINING.—The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that all Department of Defense purchase cardholders are aware of the enhanced internal controls instituted pursuant to subsection (a).

(c) COMPTROLLER GENERAL REVIEW.—Not later than March 1, 2003, the Comptroller General shall—

(1) review the actions that have been taken within the Department of Defense to comply with the requirements of this section; and

(2) submit a report on the actions reviewed to the congressional defense committees.

SEC. 815. ASSESSMENT REGARDING FEES PAID FOR ACQUISITIONS UNDER OTHER AGENCIES' CONTRACTS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR ASSESSMENT AND REPORT.—Not later than March 1, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall carry out an assessment to determine the total amount paid by the Department of Defense as fees for the acquisition of property and services by the Department of Defense under contracts between other departments and agencies of the Federal Government and the sources of the property and services in each of fiscal years 2000, 2001, and 2002, and submit a report on the results of the assessment to Congress.

(b) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report shall include the Secretary's views on what, if any, actions should be taken within the Department of Defense to reduce the total amount of the annual expenditures on fees described in subsection (a) and to use the amounts saved for other authorized purposes.

SEC. 816. PILOT PROGRAM FOR TRANSITION TO FOLLOW-ON CONTRACTS FOR CERTAIN PROTOTYPE PROJECTS.

Section 845 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (10 U.S.C. 2371 note) is amended by—

(1) redesignating subsections (e), (f), and (g) as subsections (f), (g), and (h), respectively; and

(2) inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection (e):

“(e) PILOT PROGRAM FOR TRANSITION TO FOLLOW-ON CONTRACTS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense is authorized to carry out a pilot program for follow-on contracting for the production of items or processes that are developed by nontraditional defense contractors under prototype projects carried out under this section.

“(2) Under the pilot program—

“(A) a qualifying contract for the procurement of such an item or process, or a qualifying subcontract under a contract for the procurement of such an item or process, may be treated as a contract or subcontract, respectively, for the procurement of commercial items, as defined in section 4(12) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 403(12)); and

“(B) the item or process may be treated as an item or process, respectively, that is developed in part with Federal funds and in part at private expense for the purposes of section 2320 of title 10, United States Code.

“(3) For the purposes of the pilot program, a qualifying contract or subcontract is a contract or subcontract, respectively, with a nontraditional defense contractor that—

“(A) does not exceed $20,000,000; and

“(B) is either—

“(i) a firm, fixed-price contract or subcontract; or “(ii) a fixed-price contract or subcontract with economic price adjustment.

“(4) The authority to conduct a pilot program under this subsection shall terminate on September 30, 2005. The termination of the authority shall not affect the validity of contracts or subcontracts that are awarded or modified during the period of the pilot program, without regard to whether the contracts or subcontracts are performed during the period.”

SEC. 817. WAIVER AUTHORITY FOR DOMESTIC SOURCE OR CONTENT REQUIREMENTS.

“§2539c. Waiver of domestic source or content requirements

“(a) AUTHORITY.—Except as provided in subsection (f), the Secretary of Defense may waive the application of any domestic source requirement or domestic content requirement referred to in subsection (b) and thereby authorize the procurement of items that are grown, reprocessed, reused, produced, or manufactured—

“(1) in a foreign country that has a reciprocal defense procurement memorandum of understanding or agreement with the United States;

“(2) in a foreign country that has a reciprocal defense procurement memorandum of understanding or agreement with the United States substantially from components and materials grown, reprocessed, reused, produced, or manufactured in the United States or any foreign country that has a reciprocal defense procurement memorandum of understanding or agreement with the United States; or “(3) in the United States substantially from components and materials grown, reprocessed, reused, produced, or manufactured in the United States or any foreign country that has a reciprocal defense procurement memorandum of understanding or agreement with the United States.

“(b) COVERED REQUIREMENTS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) A domestic source requirement is any requirement under law that the Department of Defense satisfy its requirements for an item by procuring an item that is grown, reprocessed, reused, produced, or manufactured in the United States or by a manufacturer that is a part of the national technology and industrial base (as defined in section 2500(1) of this title).

“(2) A domestic content requirement is any requirement under law that the Department of Defense satisfy its requirements for an item by procuring an item produced or manufactured partly or wholly from components and materials grown, reprocessed, reused, produced, or manufactured in the United States.

“(c) APPLICABILITY.—The authority of the Secretary to waive the application of a domestic source or content requirements under subsection (a) applies to the procurement of items for which the Secretary of Defense determines that—

“(1) application of the requirement would impede the reciprocal procurement of defense items under a memorandum of understanding providing for reciprocal procurement of defense items between a foreign country and the United States in accordance with section 2531 of this title; and

“(2) such country does not discriminate against defense items produced in the United States to a greater degree than the United States discriminates against defense items produced in that country.

“(d) LIMITATION ON DELEGATION.—The authority of the Secretary to waive the application of domestic source or content requirements under subsection (a) may not be delegated to any officer or employee other than the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology and Logistics.

“(e) CONSULTATIONS.—The Secretary may grant a waiver of the application of a domestic source or content requirement under subsection (a) only after consultation with the United States Trade Representative, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of State.

“(f) LAWS NOT WAIVABLE.—The Secretary of Defense may not exercise the authority under subsection (a) to waive any domestic source or content requirement contained in any of the following laws:

“(2) The Javits-Wagner-O'Day Act (41 U.S.C. et seq.).

“(3) Sections 7309 and 7310 of this title.

“(g) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The authority under subsection (a) to waive a domestic source requirement or domestic content requirement is in addition to any other authority to waive such requirement.

“(h) CONSTRUCTION WITH RESPECT TO LATER ENACTED LAWS.—This section may not be construed as being inapplicable to a domestic source requirement or domestic content requirement that is set forth in a law enacted after the enactment of this section solely on the basis of the later enactment.”

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such subchapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2539b the following new item: “2539c. Waiver of domestic source or content requirements.”

Subtitle C—Other Matters

SEC. 821. EXTENSION OF THE APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN PERSONNEL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT EXCEPTIONS TO AN ACQUISITION WORKFORCE DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.

Section 4308(b)(3)(B) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996 (Public Law 104-106; 10 U.S.C. 1701 note) is amended to read as follows:

SEC. 822. MORATORIUM ON REDUCTION OF THE DEFENSE ACQUISITION AND SUPPORT WORKFORCE.

(a) PROHIBITION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the defense acquisition and support workforce may not be reduced, during fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005, below the level of that workforce as of September 30, 2002, determined on the basis of full-time equivalent positions.

(b) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may waive the prohibition in subsection (a) and reduce the level of the defense acquisition and support workforce upon submitting to Congress the Secretary's certification that the defense acquisition and support workforce, at the level to which reduced, will be able efficiently and effectively to perform the workloads that are required of that workforce consistent with the cost-effective management of the defense acquisition system to obtain best value equipment and with ensuring military readiness.

(c) DEFENSE ACQUISITION AND SUPPORT WORKFORCE DEFINED.—In this section, the term “defense acquisition and support workforce” means Armed Forces and civilian personnel who are assigned to, or are employed in, an organization of the Department of Defense that is—

(1) an acquisition organization specified in Department of Defense Instruction 5000.58, dated January 14, 1992; or

(2) an organization not so specified that has acquisition as its predominant mission, as determined by the Secretary of Defense.

SEC. 823. EXTENSION OF CONTRACT GOAL FOR SMALL DISADVANTAGED BUSINESSES AND CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.

Section 2323(k) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking “2003” both places it appears and inserting “2006”.

SEC. 824. MENTOR-PROTEGE PROGRAM ELIGIBILITY FOR HUBZONE SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS AND SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY SERVICE-DISABLED VETERANS.

Section 831(m)(2) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (10 U.S.C. 2302 note), is amended—

(1) by striking “or” at the end of subparagraph (D);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

“(F) a qualified HUBZone small business concern, within the meaning of section 3(p)(5) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(p)(5)); or

SEC. 904. PREVENTION AND MITIGATION OF CORROSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall designate an officer or employee of the Department of Defense as the senior official responsible (after the Secretary of Defense and the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics) for the prevention and mitigation of corrosion of the military equipment and infrastructure of the Department. The designated official shall report directly to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics.

(b) DUTIES.—The official designated under subsection (a) shall direct and coordinate initiatives throughout the Department of Defense to prevent and mitigate corrosion of the military equipment and infrastructure of the Department, including efforts to facilitate the prevention and mitigation of corrosion through—

(1) development and recommendation of policy guidance on the prevention and mitigation of corrosion which the Secretary of Defense shall issue;

(2) review of the annual budget proposed for the prevention and mitigation of corrosion by the Secretary of each military department and submittal of recommendations regarding the proposed budget to the Secretary of Defense;

(3) direction and coordination of the efforts within the Department of Defense to prevent or mitigate corrosion during—

(A) the design, acquisition, and maintenance of military equipment; and

(B) the design, construction, and maintenance of infrastructure; and

(4) monitoring of acquisition practices—

(A) to ensure that the use of corrosion prevention technologies and the application of corrosion prevention treatments are fully considered during research and development in the acquisition process; and

(B) to ensure that, to the extent determined appropriate in each acquisition program, such technologies and treatments are incorporated into the program, particularly during the engineering and design phases of the acquisition process.

(c) INTERIM REPORT.—When the President submits the budget for fiscal year 2004 to Congress pursuant to section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report regarding the actions taken under this section. The report shall include the following matters:

(1) The organizational structure for the personnel carrying out the responsibilities of the official designated under subsection (a) with respect to the prevention and mitigation of corrosion.

(2) An outline and milestones for developing a long-term corrosion prevention and mitigation strategy.

(d) LONG-TERM STRATEGY.—(1) Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a long-term strategy to reduce corrosion and the effects of corrosion on the military equipment and infrastructure of the Department of Defense.

(2) The strategy shall provide for the following actions:

(A) Expanding the emphasis on corrosion prevention and mitigation to include coverage of infrastructure.

(B) Applying uniformly throughout the Department of Defense requirements and criteria for the testing and certification of new technologies for the prevention of corrosion.

(C) Implementing programs, including programs supporting databases, to foster the collection and analysis of—

(i) data useful for determining the extent of the effects of corrosion on the maintenance and readiness of military equipment and infrastructure; and

(ii) data on the costs associated with the prevention and mitigation of corrosion.

(D) Implementing programs, including supporting databases, to ensure that a focused and coordinated approach is taken throughout the Department of Defense to collect, review, validate, and distribute information on proven methods and products that are relevant to the prevention of corrosion of military equipment and infrastructure.

(E) Implementing a program to identify specific funding in future budgets for the total life cycle costs of the prevention and mitigation of corrosion.

(F) Establishing a coordinated research and development program for the prevention and mitigation of corrosion for new and existing military equipment and infrastructure that includes a plan to transition new corrosion prevention technologies into operational systems.

(3) The strategy shall also include, for the actions provided for pursuant to paragraph (2), the following:

(A) Policy guidance.

(B) Performance measures and milestones.

(C) An assessment of the necessary program management resources and necessary financial resources.

(e) GAO REVIEWS.—The Comptroller General shall monitor the implementation of the long-term strategy required under subsection (d) and, not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, submit to Congress an assessment of the extent to which the strategy has been implemented.

(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “corrosion” means the deterioration of a substance or its properties due to a reaction with its environment.

(2) The term “military equipment” includes all air, land, and sea weapon systems, weapon platforms, vehicles, and munitions of the Department of Defense, and the components of such items.

(3) The term “infrastructure” includes all buildings, structures, airfields, port facilities, surface and subterranean utility systems, heating and cooling systems, fuel tanks, pavements, and bridges.

(g) TERMINATION.—This section shall cease to be effective on the date that is five years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

“Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence.”

TITLE X—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Financial Matters

SEC. 1001. TRANSFER AUTHORITY.

(a) AUTHORITY TO TRANSFER AUTHORIZATIONS.—(1) Upon determination by the Secretary of Defense that such action is necessary in the national interest, the Secretary may transfer amounts of authorizations made available to the Department of Defense in this division for fiscal year 2003 between any such authorizations for that fiscal year (or any subdivisions thereof). Amounts of authorizations so transferred shall be merged with and be available for the same purposes as the authorization to which transferred.

(2) The total amount of authorizations that the Secretary may transfer under the authority of this section may not exceed $2,500,000,000.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—The authority provided by this section to transfer authorizations—

(1) may only be used to provide authority for items that have a higher priority than the items from which authority is transferred; and

(2) may not be used to provide authority for an item that has been denied authorization by Congress.

(c) EFFECT ON AUTHORIZATION AMOUNTS.—A transfer made from one account to another under the authority of this section shall be deemed to increase the amount authorized for the account to which the amount is transferred by an amount equal to the amount transferred.

(d) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall promptly notify Congress of each transfer made under subsection (a).

SEC. 1002. REALLOCATION OF AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS FROM BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE TO SHIPBUILDING.

(a) AMOUNT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the total amount authorized to be appropriated under section 201(4) is hereby reduced by $690,000,000, and the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 102(a)(3) is hereby increased by $690,000,000.

(b) SOURCE OF REDUCTION.—The total amount of the reduction in the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 201(4) shall be derived from the amount provided under that section for ballistic missile defense for research, development, test, and evaluation.

(c) ALLOCATION OF INCREASE.—Of the additional amount authorized to be appropriated under section 102(a)(3) pursuant to subsection (a)—

(1) $415,000,000 shall be available for advance procurement of a Virginia class submarine;

(2) $125,000,000 shall be available for advance procurement of a DDG-51 class destroyer; and

(3) $150,000,000 shall be available for advance procurement of an LPD-17 class amphibious transport dock.

SEC. 1003. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR CONTINUED OPERATIONS FOR THE WAR ON TERRORISM.

(a) AMOUNT.—(1) In addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated under divisions A and B, funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 (subject to subsection (b)) in the total amount of $10,000,000,000 for the conduct of operations in continuation of the war on terrorism in accordance with the Authorization for Use of Military Force (Public Law 107-40; 50 U.S.C. 1541 note).

(2) The amount authorized to be appropriated under paragraph (1) shall be available for increased operating costs, transportation costs, costs of humanitarian efforts, costs of special pays, costs of enhanced intelligence efforts, increased personnel costs for members of the reserve components ordered to active duty under a provision of law referred to in section 101(a)(13)(B) of title 10, United States Code, and other costs related to operations referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) AUTHORIZATION CONTINGENT ON BUDGET REQUEST.—The authorization of appropriations in subsection (a) shall be effective only to the extent of the amount provided in a budget request for the appropriation of funds for purposes set forth in subsection (a) that is submitted by the President to Congress after the date of the enactment of this Act and—

(1) includes a designation of the requested amount as being essential to respond to or protect against acts or threatened acts of terrorism; and

(2) specifies a proposed allocation and plan for the use of the appropriation for purposes set forth in subsection (a).

SEC. 1004. AUTHORIZATION OF EMERGENCY SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002.

Amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 2002 in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107) are hereby adjusted, with respect to any such authorized amount, by the amount by which appropriations pursuant to such authorization were increased (by a supplemental appropriation) or decreased (by a rescission), or both, in any law making supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 2002 that is enacted during the 107th Congress, second session.

SEC. 1005. UNITED STATES CONTRIBUTION TO NATO COMMON-FUNDED BUDGETS IN FISCAL YEAR 2003.

(a) FISCAL YEAR 2003 LIMITATION.—The total amount contributed by the Secretary of Defense in fiscal year 2003 for the common-funded budgets of NATO may be any amount up to, but not in excess of, the amount specified in subsection (b) (rather than the maximum amount that would otherwise be applicable to those contributions under the fiscal year 1998 baseline limitation).

(b) TOTAL AMOUNT.—The amount of the limitation applicable under subsection (a) is the sum of the following:

(1) The amounts of unexpended balances, as of the end of fiscal year 2002, of funds appropriated for fiscal years before fiscal year 2003 for payments for those budgets.

(2) The amount specified in subsection (c)(1).

(3) The amount specified in subsection (c)(2).

(4) The total amount of the contributions authorized to be made under section 2501.

(c) AUTHORIZED AMOUNTS.—Amounts authorized to be appropriated by titles II and III of this Act are available for contributions for the common-funded budgets of NATO as follows:

(1) Of the amount provided in section 201(1), $750,000 for the Civil Budget.

(2) Of the amount provided in section 301(a)(1), $205,623,000 for the Military Budget.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) COMMON-FUNDED BUDGETS OF NATO.—The term “common-funded budgets of NATO” means the Military Budget, the Security Investment Program, and the Civil Budget of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (and any successor or additional account or program of NATO).

(2) FISCAL YEAR 1998 BASELINE LIMITATION.—The term “fiscal year 1998 baseline limitation” means the maximum annual amount of Department of Defense contributions for common-funded budgets of NATO that is set forth as the annual limitation in section 3(2)(C)(ii) of the resolution of the Senate giving the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the Protocols to the North Atlantic Treaty of 1949 on the Accession of Poland, Hungary, and the Czech Republic (as defined in section 4(7) of that resolution), approved by the Senate on April 30, 1998.

SEC. 1006. DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT ENTERPRISE ARCHITECTURE.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR ENTERPRISE ARCHITECTURE AND TRANSITION PLAN.—Not later than March 15, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall develop a proposed financial management enterprise architecture for all budgetary, accounting, finance, and data feeder systems of the Department of Defense, together with a transition plan for implementing the proposed enterprise architecture.

(b) COMPOSITION OF ARCHITECTURE.—The proposed financial management enterprise architecture developed under subsection (a) shall describe a system that, at a minimum—

(1) includes data standards and system interface requirements that are to apply uniformly throughout the Department of Defense;

(2) enables the Department of Defense—

(A) to comply with Federal accounting, financial management, and reporting requirements;

(B) to routinely produce timely, accurate, and useful financial information for management purposes;

(C) to integrate budget, accounting, and program information and systems; and

(D) to provide for the systematic measurement of performance, including the ability to produce timely, relevant, and reliable cost information.

(c) COMPOSITION OF TRANSITION PLAN.—The transition plan developed under subsection (a) shall contain specific time-phased milestones for modifying or eliminating existing systems and for acquiring new systems necessary to implement the proposed enterprise architecture.

(d) EXPENDITURES FOR IMPLEMENTATION.—The Secretary of Defense may not obligate more than $1,000,000 for a defense financial system improvement on or after the enterprise architecture approval date unless the Financial Management Modernization Executive Committee determines that the defense financial system improvement is consistent with the proposed enterprise architecture and transition plan.

(e) EXPENDITURES PENDING ARCHITECTURE APPROVAL.—The Secretary of Defense may not obligate more than $1,000,000 for a defense financial system improvement during the enterprise architecture pre-approval period unless the Financial Management Modernization Executive Committee determines that the defense financial system improvement is necessary—

(1) to achieve a critical national security capability or address a critical requirement in an area such as safety or security; or

(2) to prevent a significant adverse effect (in terms of a technical matter, cost, or schedule) on a project that is needed to achieve an essential capability, taking into consideration in the determination the alternative solutions for preventing the adverse effect.

(f) COMPTROLLER GENERAL REVIEW.—Not later than March 1 of each of 2003, 2004, and 2005, the Comptroller General shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on defense financial management system improvements that have been undertaken during the previous year. The report shall include the Comptroller General's assessment of the extent to which the improvements comply with the requirements of this section.

(g) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “defense financial system improvement”—

(A) means the acquisition of a new budgetary, accounting, finance, or data feeder system for the Department of Defense, or a modification of an existing budgetary, accounting, finance, or data feeder system of the Department of Defense; and

(B) does not include routine maintenance and operation of any such system.

(2) The term “enterprise architecture approval date” means the date on which the Secretary of Defense approves a proposed financial management enterprise architecture and a transition plan that satisfy the requirements of this section.

(3) The term “enterprise architecture pre-approval period” means the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on the day before the enterprise architecture approval date.

(4) The term “feeder system” means a data feeder system within the meaning of section 2222(c)(2) of title 10, United States Code.

(5) The term “Financial Management Modernization Executive Committee” means the Financial Management Modernization Executive Committee established pursuant to section 185 of title 10, United States Code.

SEC. 1007. DEPARTMENTAL ACCOUNTABLE OFFICIALS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE.

“§ 2773a. Departmental accountable officials

“(a) DESIGNATION.—The Secretary of Defense may designate, in writing, as a departmental accountable official any employee of the Department of Defense or any member of the armed forces who—

“(1) has a duty to provide a certifying official of the Department of Defense with information, data, or services directly relied upon by the certifying official in the certification of vouchers for payment; and

“(1) is not otherwise accountable under subtitle III of title 31 or any other provision of law for payments made on the basis of the vouchers.

“(b) PECUNIARY LIABILITY.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may, in a designation of a departmental accountable official under subsection (a), subject that official to pecuniary liability, in the same manner and to the same extent as an official accountable under subtitle III of title 31, for an illegal, improper, or incorrect payment made pursuant to a voucher certified by a certifying official of the Department of Defense on the basis of information, data, or services that—

“(A) the departmental accountable official provides to the certifying official in the performance of a duty described in subsection (a)(1); and

“(2) Any pecuniary liability imposed on a departmental accountable official under this subsection for a loss to the United States resulting from an illegal, improper, or incorrect payment shall be joint and several with that of any other employee or employees of the United States or member or members of the uniformed services who are pecuniarily liable for the loss.

“(c) RELIEF FROM PECUNIARY LIABILITY.—The Secretary of Defense shall relieve a departmental accountable official from pecuniary liability imposed under subsection (b) in the case of a payment if the Secretary determines that the payment was not a result of fault or negligence on the part of the departmental accountable official.

“(d) CERTIFYING OFFICIAL DEFINED.—In this section, the term ‘certifying official’ means an employee who has the responsibilities specified in section 3528(a) of title 31.”

SEC. 1008. DEPARTMENT-WIDE PROCEDURES FOR ESTABLISHING AND LIQUIDATING PERSONAL PECUNIARY LIABILITY.

(a) REPORT OF SURVEY PROCEDURES.—(1) Chapter 165 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 2786 the following new section:

“§ 2787. Reports of survey

“(a) REGULATIONS.—Under regulations prescribed pursuant to subsection (c), any officer of the armed forces or any civilian employee of the Department of Defense designated in accordance with the regulations may act upon reports of survey and vouchers pertaining to the loss, spoilage, unserviceability, unsuitability, or destruction of, or damage to, property of the United States under the control of the Department of Defense.

“(b) FINALITY OF ACTION.—(1) Action taken under subsection (a) is final except as provided in paragraph (2).

“(2) An action holding a person pecuniarily liable for loss, spoilage, destruction, or damage is not final until approved by a person designated to do so by the Secretary of a military department, commander of a combatant command, or Director of a Defense Agency, as the case may be, who has jurisdiction of the person held pecuniarily liable. The person designated to provide final approval shall be an officer of an armed force, or a civilian employee, under the jurisdiction of the official making the designation.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 165 of such title is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2786 the following new item:

(b) DAMAGE OR REPAIR OF ARMS AND EQUIPMENT.—Section 1007(e) of title 37, United States Code, is amended by striking “Army or the Air Force” and inserting “Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps”.

(c) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED PROVISIONS.—(1) Sections 4835 and 9835 of title 10, United States Code, are repealed.

(2) The tables of sections at the beginning of chapters 453 and 953 of such title are amended by striking the items relating to sections 4835 and 9835, respectively.

SEC. 1009. TRAVEL CARD PROGRAM INTEGRITY.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Section 2784 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

“(d) DISBURSEMENT OF ALLOWANCES DIRECTLY TO CREDITORS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may require that any part of the travel or transportation allowances of an employee of the Department of Defense or a member of the armed forces be disbursed directly to the issuer of a Defense travel card if the amount is disbursed to the issuer in payment of amounts of expenses of official travel that are charged by the employee or member on the Defense travel card.

“(2) For the purposes of this subsection, the travel and transportation allowances referred to in paragraph (1) are amounts to which an employee of the Department of Defense is entitled under section 5702 of title 5 and or a member of the armed forces is entitled section 404 of title 37.

“(e) OFFSETS FOR DELINQUENT TRAVEL CARD CHARGES.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may require that there be deducted and withheld from any pay payable to an employee of the Department of Defense or a member of the armed forces any amount that is owed by the employee or member to a creditor by reason of one or more charges of expenses of official travel of the employee or member on a Defense travel card issued by the creditor if the employee or member—

“(A) is delinquent in the payment of such amount under the terms of the contract under which the card is issued; and “(B) does not dispute the amount of the delinquency.

“(2) The amount deducted and withheld from pay under paragraph (1) with respect to a debt owed a creditor as described in that paragraph shall be disbursed to the creditor to reduce the amount of the debt.

“(3) The amount of pay deducted and withheld from the pay owed to an employee or member with respect to a pay period under paragraph (1) may not exceed 15 percent of the disposable pay of the employee or member for that pay period, except that a higher amount may be deducted and withheld with the written consent of the employee or member.

“(4) The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe procedures for deducting and withholding amounts from pay under this subsection. The procedures shall be substantially equivalent to the procedures under section 3716 of title 31.

“(f) UNDER SECRETARY OF DEFENSE (COMPTROLLER).—The Secretary of Defense shall act through the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) in carrying out this section.

“(g) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘Defense travel card’ means a charge or credit card that—

“(A) is issued to an employee of the Department of Defense or a member of the armed forces under a contract entered into by the Department of Defense and the issuer of the card; and “(B) is to be used for charging expenses incurred by the employee or member in connection with official travel.

“(2) The term ‘disposable pay’, with respect to a pay period, means the amount equal to the excess of the amount of basic pay payable for the pay period over the total of the amounts deducted and withheld from such pay.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsection (a) of such section is amended by striking “, acting through the Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller),”.

SEC. 1010. CLEARANCE OF CERTAIN TRANSACTIONS RECORDED IN TREASURY SUSPENSE ACCOUNTS AND RESOLUTION OF CERTAIN CHECK ISSUANCE DISCREPANCIES.

(a) CLEARING OF SUSPENSE ACCOUNTS.—(1) In the case of any transaction that was entered into by or on behalf of the Department of Defense before March 1, 2001, that is recorded in the Department of Treasury Budget Clearing Account (Suspense) designated as account F3875, the Unavailable Check Cancellations and Overpayments (Suspense) designated as account F3880, or an Undistributed Intergovernmental Payments account designated as account F3885, and for which no appropriation for the Department of Defense has been identified—

(A) any undistributed collection credited to such account in such case shall be deposited to the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury; and

(B) subject to paragraph (2), any undistributed disbursement recorded in such account in such case shall be canceled.

(2) An undistributed disbursement may not be canceled under paragraph (1) until the Secretary of Defense has made a written determination that the appropriate official or officials of the Department of Defense have attempted without success to locate the documentation necessary to demonstrate which appropriation should be charged and further efforts are not in the best interests of the United States.

(b) RESOLUTION OF CHECK ISSUANCE DISCREPANCIES.—(1) In the case of any check drawn on the Treasury that was issued by or on behalf of the Department of Defense before October 31, 1998, for which the Secretary of the Treasury has reported to the Department of Defense a discrepancy between the amount paid and the amount of the check as transmitted to the Department of Treasury, and for which no specific appropriation for the Department of Defense can be identified as being associated with the check, the discrepancy shall be canceled, subject to paragraph (2).

(2) A discrepancy may not be canceled under paragraph (1) until the Secretary of Defense has made a written determination that the appropriate official or officials of the Department of Defense have attempted without success to locate the documentation necessary to demonstrate which appropriation should be charged and further efforts are not in the best interests of the United States.

(c) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary of Defense shall consult the Secretary of the Treasury in the exercise of the authority granted by subsections (a) and (b).

(d) DURATION OF AUTHORITY.—(1) A particular undistributed disbursement may not be canceled under subsection (a) more than 30 days after the date of the written determination made by the Secretary of Defense under such subsection regarding that undistributed disbursement.

(2) A particular discrepancy may not be canceled under subsection (b) more than 30 days after the date of the written determination made by the Secretary of Defense under such subsection regarding that discrepancy.

(3) No authority may be exercised under this section after the date that is two years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1011. ADDITIONAL AMOUNT FOR BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE OR COMBATING TERRORISM IN ACCORDANCE WITH NATIONAL SECURITY PRIORITIES OF THE PRESIDENT.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to other amounts authorized to be appropriated by other provisions of this division, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 2003, $814,300,000 for whichever of the following purposes the President determines that the additional amount is necessary in the national security interests of the United States:

(1) Research, development, test, and evaluation for ballistic missile defense programs of the Department of Defense.

(2) Activities of the Department of Defense for combating terrorism at home and abroad.

(b) OFFSET.—The total amount authorized to be appropriated under the other provisions of this division is hereby reduced by $814,300,000 to reflect the amounts that the Secretary determines unnecessary by reason of a revision of assumptions regarding inflation that are applied as a result of the midsession review of the budget conducted by the Office of Management and Budget during the spring and early summer of 2002.

(c) PRIORITY FOR ALLOCATING FUNDS.—In the expenditure of additional funds made available by a lower rate of inflation, the top priority shall be the use of such funds for Department of Defense activities for protecting the American people at home and abroad by combating terrorism at home and abroad.

SEC. 1012. AVAILABILITY OF AMOUNTS FOR OREGON ARMY NATIONAL GUARD FOR SEARCH AND RESCUE AND MEDICAL EVACUATION MISSIONS IN ADVERSE WEATHER CONDITIONS.

(a) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR ARMY PROCUREMENT.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 101(1) for procurement for the Army for aircraft is hereby increased by $3,000,000.

(b) AVAILABILITY.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 101(1) for procurement for the Army for aircraft, as increased by subsection (a), $3,000,000 shall be available for the upgrade of three UH-60L Blackhawk helicopters of the Oregon Army National Guard to the capabilities of UH-60Q Search and Rescue model helicopters, including Star Safire FLIR, Breeze-Eastern External Rescue Hoist, and Air Methods COTS Medical Systems upgrades, in order to improve the utility of such UH-60L Blackhawk helicopters in search and rescue and medical evacuation missions in adverse weather conditions.

(c) INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR MILITARY PERSONNEL.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 421 for military personnel is hereby increased by $1,800,000.

(d) AVAILABILITY.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 421 for military personnel, as increased by subsection (c), $1,800,000 shall be available for up to 26 additional personnel for the Oregon Army National Guard.

(e) OFFSET.—The amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(1) for operation and maintenance for the Army is hereby reduced by $4,800,000, with the amount of the reduction to be allocated to Base Operations Support (Servicewide Support).

Subtitle B—Naval Vessels and Shipyards

SEC. 1021. NUMBER OF NAVY SURFACE COMBATANTS IN ACTIVE AND RESERVE SERVICE.

(a) CONTINGENT REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT.—If, on the date of the enactment of this Act, the total number of Navy ships comprising the force of surface combatants is less than 116, the Secretary of the Navy shall submit a report on the size of that force to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The report shall be submitted not later than 90 days after such date and shall include a risk assessment for such force that is based on the same assumptions as those that were applied in the QDR 2001 current force risk assessment.

(b) LIMITATION ON REDUCTION.—The force of surface combatants may not be reduced at any time after the date of the enactment of this Act from a number of ships (whether above, equal to, or below 116) to a number of ships below 116 before the date that is 90 days after the date on which the Secretary of the Navy submits to the committees referred to in subsection (a) a written notification of the reduction. The notification shall include the following information:

(1) The schedule for the reduction.

(2) The number of ships that are to comprise the reduced force of surface combatants.

(3) A risk assessment for the reduced force that is based on the same assumptions as those that were applied in the QDR 2001 current force risk assessment.

(c) PRESERVATION OF SURGE CAPABILITY.—Whenever the total number of Navy ships comprising the force of surface combatants is less than 116, the Secretary of the Navy shall maintain on the Naval Vessel Register a sufficient number of surface combatant ships to enable the Navy to regain a total force of 116 surface combatant ships in active and reserve service in the Navy within 120 days after the President decides to increase the force of surface combatants.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “force of surface combatants” means the surface combatant ships in active and reserve service in the Navy.

(2) The term “QDR 2001 current force risk assessment” means the risk assessment associated with a force of 116 surface combatant ships in active and reserve service in the Navy that is set forth in the report on the quadrennial defense review submitted to Congress on September 30, 2001, under section 118 of title 10, United States Code.

SEC. 1022. PLAN FOR FIELDING THE 155-MILLIMETER GUN ON A SURFACE COMBATANT.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PLAN.—The Secretary of the Navy shall submit to Congress a plan for fielding the 155-millimeter gun on one surface combatant ship in active service in the Navy. The Secretary shall submit the plan at the same time that the President submits the budget for fiscal year 2004 to Congress under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code.

(b) FIELDING ON EXPEDITED SCHEDULE.—The plan shall provide for fielding the 155-millimeter gun on an expedited schedule that is consistent with the achievement of safety of operation and fire support capabilities meeting the fire support requirements of the Marine Corps, but not later than October 1, 2006.

SEC. 1023. REPORT ON INITIATIVES TO INCREASE OPERATIONAL DAYS OF NAVY SHIPS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT ON INITIATIVES.—(1) The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, Technology, and Logistics shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on Department of Defense initiatives to increase the number of operational days of Navy ships as described in subsection (b).

(2) The report shall cover the ongoing Department of Defense initiatives as well as potential initiatives that are under consideration within the Department of Defense.

(b) INITIATIVES WITHIN LIMITS OF EXISTING FLEET AND DEPLOYMENT POLICY.—The Under

Secretary shall, in the report, assess the feasibility and identify the projected effects of conducting initiatives that have the potential to increase the number of operational days of Navy ships available to the commanders-in-chief of the regional unified combatant commands without increasing the number of Navy ships and without increasing the routine lengths of deployments of Navy ships above six months.

(c) REQUIRED FOCUS AREAS.—The report shall, at a minimum, address the following four focus areas:

(1) Assignment of additional ships, including submarines, to home ports closer to the areas of operation for the ships (known as “forward homeporting”).

(2) Assignment of ships to remain in a forward area of operations, together with rotation of crews for each ship so assigned.

(3) Retention of ships for use until the end of the full service life, together with investment of the funds necessary to support retention to that extent.

(4) Prepositioning of additional ships with, under normal circumstances, small crews in a forward area of operations.

(d) TIME FOR SUBMITTAL.—The report shall be submitted at the same time that the President submits the budget for fiscal year 2004 to Congress under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 1024. ANNUAL LONG-RANGE PLAN FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS FOR THE NAVY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Navy ships provide a forward presence for the United States that is a key to the national defense of the United States.

(2) The Navy has demonstrated that its ships contribute significantly to homeland defense.

(3) The Navy’s ship recapitalization plan is inadequate to maintain the ship force structure that is described as the current force in the 2001 Quadrennial Defense Review.

(4) The Navy is decommissioning ships as much as 10 years earlier than the projected ship life upon which ship replacement rates are based.

(5) The current force was assessed in the 2001 Quadrennial Defense Review as having moderate to high risk, depending on the scenario considered.

(b) ANNUAL SHIP CONSTRUCTION PLAN.—(1) Chapter 9 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 231. Annual ship construction plan

“(a) ANNUAL SHIP CONSTRUCTION PLAN.—The Secretary of Defense shall include in the defense budget materials for each fiscal year a plan for the construction of combatant and support ships for the Navy that—

“(1) supports the National Security Strategy; or

“(2) if there is no National Security Strategy in effect, supports the ship force structure called for in the report of the latest Quadrennial Defense Review.

“(b) CONTENT.—The ship construction plan included in the defense budget materials for a fiscal year shall provide in detail for the construction of combatant and support ships for the Navy over the 30 consecutive fiscal years beginning with the fiscal year covered by the defense budget materials and shall include the following matters:

“(1) A description of the necessary ship force structure of the Navy.

“(2) The estimated levels of funding necessary to carry out the plan, together with a discussion of the procurement strategies on which such estimated funding levels are based.

“(3) A certification by the Secretary of Defense that both the budget for the fiscal year covered by the defense budget materials and the future-years defense program submitted to Congress in relation to such budget under section 221 of this title provide for funding ship construction for the Navy at a level that is sufficient for the procurement of the ships provided for in the plan on schedule.

“(4) If the budget for the fiscal year provides for funding ship construction at a level that is not sufficient for the recapitalization of the force of Navy ships at the annual rate necessary to sustain the force, an assessment (coordinated with the commanders of the combatant commands in advance) that describes and discusses the risks associated with the reduced force structure that will result from funding ship construction at such insufficient level.

“(1) The term ‘budget’, with respect to a fiscal year, means the budget for such fiscal year that is submitted to Congress by the President under section 1105(a) of title 31.

“(2) The term ‘defense budget materials’, with respect to a fiscal year, means the materials submitted to Congress by the Secretary of Defense in support of the budget for such fiscal year.

“(3) The term ‘Quadrennial Defense Review’ means the Quadrennial Defense Review that is carried out under section 118 of this title.”

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

SEC. 1034. QUADRENNIAL QUALITY OF LIFE REVIEW.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REVIEW.—Chapter 23 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 488. Quadrennial quality of life review

"(a) REVIEW REQUIRED.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall every four years, two years after the submission of the quadrennial defense review to Congress under section 118 of this title, conduct a comprehensive examination of the quality of life of the members of the armed forces (to be known as the 'quadrennial quality of life review'). The review shall include examination of the programs, projects, and activities of the Department of Defense, including the morale, welfare, and recreation activities.

"(2) The quadrennial review shall be designed to result in determinations, and to foster policies and actions, that reflect the priority given the quality of life of members of the armed forces as a primary concern of the Department of Defense leadership.

"(b) CONDUCT OF REVIEW.—Each quadrennial quality of life review shall be conducted so as—

"(1) to assess quality of life priorities and issues consistent with the most recent National Security Strategy prescribed by the President pursuant to section 108 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 404a);

"(2) to identify actions that are needed in order to provide members of the armed forces with the quality of life reasonably necessary to encourage the successful execution of the full range of missions that the members are called on to perform under the national security strategy;

"(3) to provide a full accounting of the backlog of installations in need of maintenance and repair, to determine how the disrepair affects performance and quality of life of members and their families, and to identify the budget plan that would be required to provide the resources necessary to remedy the backlog of maintenance and repair; and

"(4) to identify other actions that have the potential for improving the quality of life of the members of the armed forces.

"(c) CONSIDERATIONS.—Among the matters considered by the Secretary in conducting the quadrennial review, the Secretary shall include the following matters:

"(1) Infrastructure.

"(2) Military construction.

"(3) Physical conditions at military installations and other Department of Defense facilities.

"(4) Budget plans.

"(5) Adequacy of medical care for members of the armed forces and their dependents.

"(6) Adequacy of housing and the basic allowance for housing and basic allowance for subsistence.

"(7) Housing-related utility costs.

"(8) Educational opportunities and costs.

"(9) Length of deployments.

"(10) Rates of pay, and pay differentials between the pay of members and the pay of civilians.

"(11) Retention and recruiting efforts.

"(12) Workplace safety.

"(13) Support services for spouses and children.

"(14) Other elements of Department of Defense programs and Federal Government policies and programs that affect the quality of life of members.

"(d) SUBMISSION OF QQLR TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The Secretary shall submit a report on each quadrennial quality of life review to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The report shall be submitted not later than September 30 of the year in which the review is conducted. The report shall include the following:

"(1) The results of the review, including a comprehensive discussion of how the quality of life of members of the armed forces affects the national security strategy of the United States.

"(2) The long-term quality of life problems of the armed forces, together with proposed solutions.

"(3) The short-term quality of life problems of the armed forces, together with proposed solutions.

"(4) The assumptions used in the review.

"(5) The effects of quality of life problems on the morale of the members of the armed forces.

"(6) The quality of life problems that affect the morale of members of the reserve components in particular, together with solutions.

"(7) The effects of quality of life problems on military preparedness and readiness.

"(8) The appropriate ratio of—

"(A) the total amount expended by the Department of Defense in a fiscal year for programs, projects, and activities designed to improve the quality of life of members of the armed forces, to

"(B) the total amount expended by the Department of Defense in the fiscal year."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"488. Quadrennial quality of life review."

SEC. 1035. REPORTS ON EFFORTS TO RESOLVE WHEREABOUTS AND STATUS OF CAPTAIN MICHAEL SCOTT SPEICHER, UNITED STATES NAVY.

(a) REPORTS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every 90 days thereafter, the Secretary of Defense shall, in consultation with the Secretary of State and the Director of Central Intelligence, submit to Congress a report on the efforts of the United States Government to determine the whereabouts and status of Captain Michael Scott Speicher, United States Navy.

(b) PERIOD COVERED BY REPORTS.—The first report under subsection (a) shall cover efforts described in that subsection preceding the date of the report, and each subsequent report shall cover efforts described in that subsection during the 90-day period ending on the date of such report.

(c) REPORT ELEMENTS.—Each report under subsection (a) shall describe, for the period covered by such report—

(1) all direct and indirect contacts with the Government of Iraq, or any successor government, regarding the whereabouts and status of Michael Scott Speicher;

(2) any request made to the government of another country, including the intelligence service of such country, for assistance in resolving the whereabouts and status of Michael Scott Speicher, including the response to such request;

(3) each current lead on the whereabouts and status of Michael Scott Speicher, including an assessment of the utility of such lead in resolving the whereabouts and status of Michael Scott Speicher; and

(4) any cooperation with nongovernmental organizations or international organizations in resolving the whereabouts and status of Michael Scott Speicher, including the results of such cooperation.

(d) FORM OF REPORTS.—Each report under subsection (a) shall be submitted in classified form, but may include an unclassified summary.

SEC. 1036. REPORT ON EFFORTS TO ENSURE ADEQUACY OF FIRE FIGHTING STAFFS AT MILITARY INSTALLATIONS.

Not later than May 31, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the actions being undertaken to ensure that the fire fighting staffs at military installations are adequate under applicable Department of Defense regulations.

SEC. 1037. REPORT ON DESIGNATION OF CERTAIN LOUISIANA HIGHWAY AS DEFENSE ACCESS ROAD.

Not later than March 1, 2003, the Secretary of the Army shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report containing the results of a study on the advisability of designating Louisiana Highway 28 between Alexandria, Louisiana, and Leesville, Louisiana, a road providing access to the Joint Readiness Training Center, Louisiana, and to Fort Polk, Louisiana, as a defense access road for purposes of section 210 of title 23, United States Code.

SEC. 1038. PLAN FOR FIVE-YEAR PROGRAM FOR ENHANCEMENT OF MEASUREMENT AND SIGNATURES INTELLIGENCE CAPABILITIES.

(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that the national interest will be served by the rapid exploitation of basic research on sensors for purposes of enhancing the measurement and signatures intelligence (MASINT) capabilities of the Federal Government.

(b) PLAN FOR PROGRAM.—(1) Not later than March 30, 2003, the Director of the Central Measurement and Signatures Intelligence Office shall submit to Congress a plan for a five-year program of research intended to provide for the incorporation of the results of basic research on sensors into the measurement and signatures intelligence systems fielded by the Federal Government, including the review and assessment of basic research on sensors for that purpose.

(2) Activities under the plan shall be carried out by a consortium consisting of such governmental and non-governmental entities as the Director considers appropriate for purposes of incorporating the broadest practicable range of sensor capabilities into the systems referred to in paragraph (1). The consortium may include national laboratories, universities, and private sector entities.

(3) The plan shall include a proposal for the funding of activities under the plan, including cost-sharing by non-governmental participants in the consortium under paragraph (2).

SEC. 1039. REPORT ON VOLUNTEER SERVICES OF MEMBERS OF THE RESERVE COMPONENTS IN EMERGENCY RESPONSE TO THE TERRORIST ATTACKS OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on volunteer services described in subsection (b) that were provided by members of the National Guard and other reserve components of the Armed Forces, while not in a duty status pursuant to orders, during the period of September 11 through 14, 2001. The report shall include a discussion of any personnel actions that the Secretary considers appropriate for the members regarding the performance of such services.

(b) COVERED SERVICES.—The volunteer services referred to in subsection (a) are as follows:

(1) Volunteer services provided in the vicinity of the site of the World Trade Center, New York, New York, in support of emergency response to the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001.

(2) Volunteer services provided in the vicinity of the Pentagon in support of emergency response to the terrorist attack on the Pentagon on September 11, 2001.

SEC. 1040. BIENNIAL REPORTS ON CONTRIBUTIONS TO PROLIFERATION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION AND DELIVERY SYSTEMS BY COUNTRIES OF PROLIFERATION CONCERN.

(a) REPORTS.—Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every six months thereafter, the President shall submit to Congress a report identifying each foreign person that, during the six-month period ending on the date of such report, made a material contribution to the development by a country of proliferation concern of—

(1) nuclear, biological, or chemical weapons; or

(2) ballistic or cruise missile systems.

(b) FORM OF SUBMITTAL.—(1) A report under subsection (a) may be submitted in classified form, whether in whole or in part, if the President determines that submittal in that form is advisable.

(2) Any portion of a report under subsection (a) that is submitted in classified form shall be accompanied by an unclassified summary of such portion.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “foreign person” means—

(A) a natural person that is an alien;

(B) a corporation, business association, partnership, society, trust, or any other non-governmental entity, organization, or group that is organized under the laws of a foreign country or has its principal place of business in a foreign country;

(C) any foreign governmental entity operating as a business enterprise; and

(D) any successor, subunit, or subsidiary of any entity described in subparagraph (B) or (C).

(2) The term “country of proliferation concern” means any country identified by the Director of Central Intelligence as having engaged in the acquisition of dual-use and other technology useful for the development or production of weapons of mass destruction (including nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons) and advanced conventional munitions in the most current report under section 721 of the Combatting Proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (title VII of Public Law 104-293; 50 U.S.C. 2366), or any successor report on the acquisition by foreign countries of dual-use and other technology useful for the development or production of weapons of mass destruction.

Subtitle D—Homeland Defense

SEC. 1041. HOMELAND SECURITY ACTIVITIES OF THE NATIONAL GUARD.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Chapter 1 of title 32, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 116. Homeland security activities

“(a) USE OF PERSONNEL PERFORMING FULL-TIME NATIONAL GUARD DUTY.—The Governor of a State may, upon the request by the head of a Federal law enforcement agency and with the concurrence of the Secretary of Defense, order any personnel of the National Guard of the State to perform full-time National Guard duty under section 502(f) of this title for the purpose of carrying out homeland security activities, as described in subsection (b).

“(b) PURPOSE AND DURATION.—(1) The purpose for the use of personnel of the National Guard of a State under this section is to temporarily provide trained and disciplined personnel to a Federal law enforcement agency to assist that agency in carrying out homeland security activities until that agency is able to recruit and train a sufficient force of Federal employees to perform the homeland security activities.

“(2) The duration of the use of the National Guard of a State under this section shall be limited to a period of 179 days. The Governor of the State may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of Defense, extend the period one time for an additional 90 days to meet extraordinary circumstances.

“(c) RELATIONSHIP TO REQUIRED TRAINING.—A member of the National Guard serving on full-time National Guard duty under orders authorized under subsection (a) shall participate in the training required under section 502(a) of this title in addition to the duty performed for the purpose authorized under that subsection. The pay, allowances, and other benefits of the member while participating in the training shall be the same as those to which the member is entitled while performing duty for the purpose of carrying out homeland security activities. The member is not entitled to additional pay, allowances, or other benefits for participation in training required under section 502(a)(1) of this title.

“(d) READINESS.—To ensure that the use of units and personnel of the National Guard of a State for homeland security activities does not degrade the training and readiness of such units and personnel, the following requirements shall apply in determining the homeland security activities that units and personnel of the National Guard of a State may perform:

“(1) The performance of the activities may not adversely affect the quality of that training or otherwise interfere with the ability of a member or unit of the National Guard to perform the military functions of the member or unit.

“(2) National Guard personnel will not degrade their military skills as a result of performing the activities.

“(3) The performance of the activities will not result in a significant increase in the cost of training.

“(4) In the case of homeland security performed by a unit organized to serve as a unit, the activities will support valid unit training requirements.

“(e) PAYMENT OF COSTS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall provide funds to the Governor of a State to pay costs of the use of personnel of the National Guard of the State for the performance of homeland security activities under this section. Such funds shall be used for the following costs:

“(A) The pay, allowances, clothing, subsistence, gratuities, travel, and related expenses (including all associated training expenses, as determined by the Secretary), as authorized by State law, of personnel of the National Guard of that State used, while not in Federal service, for the purpose of homeland security activities.

“(B) The operation and maintenance of the equipment and facilities of the National Guard of that State used for the purpose of homeland security activities.

“(2) The Secretary of Defense shall require the head of a law enforcement agency receiving support from the National Guard of a State in the performance of homeland security activities under this section to reimburse the Department of Defense for the payments made to the State for such support under paragraph (1).

“(f) MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT.—The Secretary of Defense and the Governor of a State shall enter into a memorandum of agreement with the head of each Federal law enforcement agency to which the personnel of the National Guard of that State are to provide support in the performance of homeland security activities under this section. The memorandum of agreement shall—

“(1) specify how personnel of the National Guard are to be used in homeland security activities;

“(2) include a certification by the Adjutant General of the State that those activities are to be performed at a time when the personnel are not in Federal service;

“(3) include a certification by the Adjutant General of the State that—

“(A) participation by National Guard personnel in those activities is service in addition to training required under section 502 of this title; and

“(B) the requirements of subsection (d) of this section will be satisfied;

“(4) include a certification by the Attorney General of the State (or, in the case of a State with no position of Attorney General, a civilian official of the State equivalent to a State attorney general), that the use of the National Guard of the State for the activities provided for under the memorandum of agreement is authorized by, and is consistent with, State law;

“(5) include a certification by the Governor of the State or a civilian law enforcement official of the State designated by the Governor that the activities provided for under the memorandum of agreement serve a State law enforcement purpose; and

“(6) include a certification by the head of the Federal law enforcement agency that the agency will have a plan to ensure that the agency's requirement for National Guard support ends not later than 179 days after the commencement of the support.

“(g) EXCLUSION FROM END-STRENGTH COMPUTATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, members of the National Guard on active duty or full-time National Guard duty for the purposes of administering (or during fiscal year 2003 otherwise implementing) this section shall not be counted toward the annual end strength authorized for reserves on active duty in support of the reserve components of the armed forces or toward the strengths authorized in sections 12011 and 12012 of title 10.

“(h) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress an annual report regarding any assistance provided and activities carried out under this section during the preceding fiscal year. The report shall include the following:

“(1) The number of members of the National Guard excluded under subsection (g) from the computation of end strengths.

“(2) A description of the homeland security activities conducted with funds provided under this section.

“(3) An accounting of the amount of funds provided to each State.

“(4) A description of the effect on military training and readiness of using units and personnel of the National Guard to perform homeland security activities under this section.

“(i) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as a limitation on the authority of any unit of the National Guard of a State, when such unit is not in Federal service, to perform law enforcement functions authorized to be performed by the National Guard by the laws of the State concerned.

“(j) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) The term ‘Governor of a State’ means, in the case of the District of Columbia, the Commanding General of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

“(2) The term ‘State’ means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or a territory or possession of the United States.”.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such section is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

“116. Homeland security activities.”.

SEC. 1042. CONDITIONS FOR USE OF FULL-TIME RESERVES TO PERFORM DUTIES RELATING TO DEFENSE AGAINST WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION.

Section 12310(c)(3) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking “only—” and all that follows through “(B) while assigned” and inserting “only while assigned”.

SEC. 1043. WEAPON OF MASS DESTRUCTION DEFINED FOR PURPOSES OF THE AUTHORITY FOR USE OF RESERVES TO PERFORM DUTIES RELATING TO DEFENSE AGAINST WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION.

(a) WEAPON OF MASS DESTRUCTION REDEFINED.—Section 12304(i)(2) of title 10, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

“(2) The term ‘weapon of mass destruction’ means—

“(A) any weapon that is designed or, through its use, is intended to cause death or serious bodily injury through the release, dissemination, or impact of toxic or poisonous chemicals or their precursors;

“(B) any weapon that involves a disease organism;

“(C) any weapon that is designed to release radiation or radioactivity at a level dangerous to human life; and

“(D) any large conventional explosive that is designed to produce catastrophic loss of life or property.”.

SEC. 1044. REPORT ON DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE HOMELAND DEFENSE ACTIVITIES.

(a) REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than February 1, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on what actions of the Department of Defense would be necessary to carry out the Secretary’s expressed intent—

(1) to place new emphasis on the unique operational demands associated with the defense of the United States homeland; and

(2) to restore the mission of defense of the United States to the position of being the primary mission of the Department of Defense.

(b) CONTENT OF THE REPORT.—The report shall contain, in accordance with the other provisions of this section, the following matters:

(1) HOMELAND DEFENSE CAMPAIGN PLAN.—A homeland defense campaign plan.

(2) INTELLIGENCE.—A discussion of the relationship between—

(A) the intelligence capabilities of—

(i) the Department of Defense; and

(ii) other departments and agencies of the United States; and

(B) the performance of the homeland defense mission.

(3) THREAT AND VULNERABILITY ASSESSMENT.—A compliance-based national threat and vulnerability assessment.

(4) TRAINING AND EXERCISING.—A discussion of the Department of Defense plans for training and exercising for the performance of the homeland defense mission.

(5) BIOTERRORISM INITIATIVE.—An evaluation of the need for a Department of Defense bioterrorism initiative to improve the ability of the department to counter bioterror threats and to assist other agencies to improve the national ability to counter bioterror threats.

(6) CHEMICAL BIOLOGICAL INCIDENT RESPONSE TEAMS.—An evaluation of the need for and feasibility of developing and fielding Department of Defense regional chemical biological incident response teams.

(7) OTHER MATTERS.—Any other matters that the Secretary of Defense considers relevant regarding the efforts necessary to carry out the intent referred to in subsection (a).

(c) HOMELAND DEFENSE CAMPAIGN PLAN.—

(1) ORGANIZATION, PLANNING, AND INTEROPERABILITY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The homeland defense campaign plan under subsection (b)(1) shall contain a discussion of the organization and planning of the Department of Defense for homeland defense, including the expectations for interoperability of the Department of Defense with other departments and agencies of the Federal Government and with State and local governments.

(B) CONTENT.—The plan shall include the following matters:

(i) The duties, definitions, missions, goals, and objectives of organizations in the Department of Defense that apply homeland defense, together with an organizational assessment with respect to the performance of the homeland defense mission and a discussion of any plans for making functional realignments of organizations, authorities, and responsibilities for carrying out that mission.

(ii) The relationships among the leaders of the organizations (including the Secretary of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Commander in Chief of United States Northern Command, the Commanders in Chief of the other regional unified combatant commands, and the reserve components) in the performance of such duties.

(iii) The reviews, evaluations, and standards that are established or are to be established for determining and ensuring the readiness of the organizations to perform such duties.

(2) RESPONSE TO ATTACK ON CRITICAL INFRASTRUCTURE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The homeland defense campaign plan shall contain an outline of the duties and capabilities of the Department of Defense for responding to an attack on critical infrastructure of the United States, including responding to an attack on critical infrastructure of the department, by means of a weapon of mass destruction or a CBRNE weapon or by a cyber means.

(B) VARIOUS ATTACK SCENARIOS.—The outline shall specify, for each major category of attack by a means described in subparagraph (A), the variations in the duties, responses, and capabilities of the various Department of Defense organizations that result from the variations in the means of the attack.

(C) DEFICIENCIES.—The outline shall identify any deficiencies in capabilities and set forth a plan for rectifying any such deficiencies.

(D) LEGAL IMPEDIMENTS.—The outline shall identify and discuss each impediment in law to the effective performance of the homeland defense mission.

(3) ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES IN INTER-AGENCY PROCESS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The homeland defense campaign plan shall contain a discussion of the roles and responsibilities of the Department of Defense in the interagency process of policymaking and planning for homeland defense.

(B) INTEGRATION WITH STATE AND LOCAL ACTIVITIES.—The homeland defense campaign plan shall include a discussion of Department of Defense plans to integrate Department of Defense homeland defense activities with the homeland defense activities of other departments and agencies of the United States and the homeland defense activities of State and local governments, particularly with regard to issues relating to CBRNE and cyber attacks.

(d) INTELLIGENCE CAPABILITIES.—The discussion of the relationship between the intelligence capabilities and the performance of the homeland defense mission under subsection (b)(2) shall include the following matters:

(1) ROLES AND MISSIONS.—The roles and missions of the Department of Defense for the employment of the intelligence capabilities of the department in homeland defense.

(2) INTERAGENCY RELATIONSHIPS.—A discussion of the relationship between the Department of Defense and the other departments and agencies of the United States that have duties for collecting or analyzing intelligence in relation to homeland defense, particularly in light of the conflicting demands of duties relating to the collection and analysis of foreign intelligence.

(3) INTELLIGENCE-RELATED CHANGES.—Any changes that are necessary in the Department of Defense in order to provide effective intelligence support for the performance of homeland defense missions, with respect to—

(A) the preparation of threat assessments and other warning products by the Department of Defense;

(B) collection of terrorism-related intelligence through human intelligence sources, signals intelligence sources, and other intelligence sources; and

(C) intelligence policy, capabilities, and practices.

(4) LEGAL IMPEDIMENTS.—Any impediments in law to the effective performance of intelligence missions in support of homeland defense.

(e) THREAT AND VULNERABILITY ASSESSMENT.—

(1) CONTENT.—The compliance-based national threat and vulnerability assessment under subsection (b)(3) shall include a discussion of the following matters:

(A) CRITICAL FACILITIES.—The threat of terrorist attack on critical facilities, programs, and systems of the United States, together with the capabilities of the Department of Defense to deter and respond to any such attack.

(B) DoD VULNERABILITY.—The vulnerability of installations, facilities, and personnel of the Department of Defense to attack by persons using weapons of mass destruction, CBRNE weapons, or cyber means.

(C) BALANCED SURVIVABILITY ASSESSMENT.—Plans to conduct a balanced survivability assessment for use in determining the vulnerabilities of targets referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

(D) PROCESS.—Plans, including timelines and milestones, necessary to develop a process for conducting compliance-based vulnerability assessments for critical infrastructure, together with the standards to be used for ensuring that the process is executable.

(2) DEFINITION OF COMPLIANCE-BASED.—In subsection (b)(3) and paragraph (1)(D) of this subsection, the term “compliance-based”, with respect to an assessment, means that the assessment is conducted under policies and procedures that require correction of each deficiency identified in the assessment to a standard set forth in Department of Defense Instruction 2000.16 or another applicable Department of Defense instruction, directive, or policy.

(f) TRAINING AND EXERCISING.—The discussion of the Department of Defense plans for training and exercising for the performance of the homeland defense mission under subsection (b)(4) shall contain the following matters:

(1) MILITARY EDUCATION.—The plans for the training and education of members of the Armed Forces specifically for performance of homeland defense missions, including any anticipated changes in the curriculum in—

(A) the National Defense University, the war colleges of the Armed Forces, graduate education programs, and other senior military schools and education programs; and

(B) the Reserve Officers’ Training Corps program, officer candidate schools, enlisted and officer basic and advanced individual training programs, and other entry level military education and training programs.

(2) EXERCISES.—The plans for using exercises and simulation in the training of all components of the Armed Forces, including—

(A) plans for integrated training with departments and agencies of the United States outside the Department of Defense and with agencies of State and local governments; and

(B) plans for developing an opposing force that, for the purpose of developing potential scenarios of terrorist attacks on targets inside the United States, simulates a terrorist group having the capability to engage in such attacks.

(g) BIOTERRORISM INITIATIVE.—The evaluation of the need for a Department of Defense bioterrorism initiative under subsection (b)(5) shall include a discussion that identifies and evaluates options for potential action in such an initiative, as follows:

(1) PLANNING, TRAINING, EXERCISE, EVALUATION, AND FUNDING.—Options for—

(A) refining the plans of the Department of Defense for biodefense to include participation of other departments and agencies of the United States and State and local governments;

(B) increasing biodefense training, exercises, and readiness evaluations by the Department of Defense, including training, exercises, and evaluations that include participation of other departments and agencies of the United States and State and local governments;

(C) increasing Department of Defense funding for biodefense; and

(D) integrating other departments and agencies of the United States and State and local governments into the plans, training, exercises, evaluations, and resourcing.

(2) DISEASE SURVEILLANCE.—Options for the Department of Defense to develop an integrated disease surveillance detection system and to improve systems for communicating information and warnings of the incidence of disease to recipients within the Department of Defense and to other departments and agencies of the United States and State and local governments.

(3) EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT STANDARD.—Options for broadening the scope of the Revised Emergency Management Standard of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations by including the broad and active participation of Federal, State, and local governmental agencies that are expected to respond in any event of a CBRNE or cyber attack.

(4) LABORATORY RESPONSE NETWORK.—Options for the Department of Defense—

(A) to participate in the laboratory response network for bioterrorism; and

(B) to increase the capacity of Department of Defense laboratories rated by the Secretary of Defense as level D laboratories to facilitate participation in the network.

(h) CHEMICAL BIOLOGICAL INCIDENT RESPONSE TEAMS.—The evaluation of the need for and feasibility of developing and fielding Department of Defense regional chemical biological incident response teams under subsection (b)(6) shall include a discussion and evaluation of the following options:

(1) REGIONAL TEAMS.—Options for the Department of Defense, using the chemical biological incident response force as a model, to develop, equip, train, and provide transportation for five United States based, strategically located, regional chemical biological incident response teams.

(2) RESOURCING.—Options and preferred methods for providing the resources and personnel necessary for developing and fielding any such teams.

(i) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) CBRNE.—The term “CBRNE” means chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear, or explosive.

(2) WEAPON OF MASS DESTRUCTION.—The term “weapon of mass destruction” has the meaning given such term in section 1403 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (50 U.S.C. 2302).

SEC. 1045. STRATEGY FOR IMPROVING PREPAREDNESS OF MILITARY INSTALLATIONS FOR INCIDENTS INVOLVING WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION.

(a) COMPREHENSIVE PLAN.—The Secretary of Defense shall develop a comprehensive plan for improving the preparedness of military installations for preventing and responding to incidents involving use or threat of use of weapons of mass destruction.

(b) CONTENT.—The comprehensive plan shall set forth the following:

(1) A strategy that—

(A) identifies—

(i) long-term goals and objectives;

(ii) resource requirements; and

(iii) factors beyond the control of the Secretary that could impede the achievement of the goals and objectives; and

(B) includes a discussion of—

(i) the extent to which local, regional, or national military response capabilities are to be developed and used; and

(ii) how the Secretary will coordinate these capabilities with local, regional, or national civilian capabilities.

(2) A performance plan that—

(A) provides a reasonable schedule, with milestones, for achieving the goals and objectives of the strategy;

(B) performance criteria for measuring progress in achieving the goals and objectives;

(C) a description of the process, together with a discussion of the resources, necessary to achieve the goals and objectives;

(D) a description of the process for evaluating results.

(c) SUBMITTAL TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit the comprehensive plan to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) COMPTROLLER GENERAL REVIEW AND REPORT.—Not later than 60 days after the Secretary submits the comprehensive plan to Congress under subsection (c), the Comptroller General shall review the plan and submit an assessment of the plan to the committees referred to in that subsection.

(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) In each of 2004, 2005, and 2006, the Secretary of Defense shall include a report on the comprehensive plan in the materials that the Secretary submits to Congress in support of the budget submitted by the President such year pursuant to section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code.

(2) The report shall include—

(A) a discussion of any revision that the Secretary has made in the comprehensive plan since the last report; and

(B) an assessment of the progress made in achieving the goals and objectives of the strategy set forth in the plan.

(3) No report is required under this subsection after the Secretary submits under this subsection a report containing a declaration that the goals and objectives set forth in the strategy have been achieved.

(c) REVERTER UPON BREACH OF CONDITIONS.—The Secretary shall include in the instrument of conveyance of the aircraft under subsection (a)—

(1) a condition that the W.A.S.P. museum not convey any ownership interest in, or transfer possession of, the aircraft to any other party without the prior approval of the Secretary; and

(2) a condition that if the Secretary determines at any time that the W.A.S.P. museum has conveyed an ownership interest in, or transferred possession of, the aircraft to any other party without the prior approval of the Secretary, all right, title, and interest in and to the aircraft, including any repair or alteration of the aircraft, shall revert to the United States, and the United States shall have the right of immediate possession of the aircraft.

(d) CONVEYANCE AT NO COST TO THE UNITED STATES.—The conveyance of the aircraft under subsection (a) shall be made at no cost to the United States. Any costs associated with the conveyance, costs of determining compliance with subsection (b), and costs of operation and maintenance of the aircraft conveyed shall be borne by the W.A.S.P. museum.

(e) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with a conveyance under this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 1067. REWARDS FOR ASSISTANCE IN COMBATING TERRORISM.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Chapter 3 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 127a the following new section:

“§ 127b. Rewards for assistance in combating terrorism

“(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may pay a monetary reward to a person for providing United States personnel with information or nonlethal assistance that is beneficial to—

“(1) an operation of the armed forces conducted outside the United States against international terrorism; or

“(2) force protection of the armed forces.

“(b) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—The amount of a reward paid to a recipient under this section may not exceed $200,000.

“(c) DELEGATION TO COMMANDER OF COMBATANT COMMAND.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may delegate to the commander of a combatant command authority to pay a reward under this section in an amount not in excess of $50,000.

“(2) A commander to whom authority to pay rewards is delegated under paragraph (1) may further delegate authority to pay a reward under this section in an amount not in excess of $2,500.

“(c) COORDINATION.—(1) The Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, shall prescribe policies and procedures for offering and paying rewards under this section, and otherwise for administering the authority under this section, that ensure that the payment of a reward under this section does not duplicate or interfere with the payment of a reward authorized by the Secretary of State or the Attorney General.

“(2) The Secretary of Defense shall coordinate with the Secretary of State regarding any payment of a reward in excess of $100,000 under this section.

“(d) PERSONS NOT ELIGIBLE.—The following persons are not eligible to receive an award under this section:

“(1) A citizen of the United States.

“(2) An employee of the United States.

“(3) An employee of a contractor of the United States.

“(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) Not later than 60 days after the end of each fiscal year, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the administration of the rewards program during that fiscal year.

“(2) The report for a fiscal year shall include information on the total amount expended during that fiscal year to carry out this section, including—

“(A) a specification of the amount, if any, expended to publicize the availability of rewards; and

“(B) with respect to each award paid during that fiscal year—

- “(i) the amount of the reward;
- “(ii) the recipient of the reward; and
- “(iii) a description of the information or assistance for which the reward was paid, together with an assessment of the significance of the information or assistance.

“(3) The Secretary may submit the report in classified form if the Secretary determines that it is necessary to do so.

“(f) DETERMINATIONS BY THE SECRETARY.—A determination by the Secretary under this section shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to judicial review.”.

“127b. Rewards for assistance in combating terrorism.”.

SEC. 1068. PROVISION OF SPACE AND SERVICES TO MILITARY WELFARE SOCIETIES.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE SPACE AND SERVICES.—Chapter 152 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 2566. Space and services: provision to military welfare societies

“(a) AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE SPACE AND SERVICES.—The Secretary of a military department may provide, without charge, space and services under the jurisdiction of that Secretary to a military welfare society.

“(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘military welfare society’ means the following:

“(A) The Army Emergency Relief Society.

“(B) The Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society.

“(C) The Air Force Aid Society, Inc.

“(2) The term ‘services’ includes lighting, heating, cooling, electricity, office furniture, office machines and equipment, telephone and other information technology services (including installation of lines and equipment, connectivity, and other associated services), and security systems (including installation and other associated expenses).”.

“2566. Space and services: provision to military welfare societies.”.

SEC. 1069. COMMENDATION OF MILITARY CHAPLAINS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Military chaplains have served with those who fought for the cause of freedom since the founding of the Nation.

(2) Military chaplains and religious support personnel of the Armed Forces have served with distinction as uniformed members of the Armed Forces in support of the Nation’s defense missions during every conflict in the history of the United States.

(3) 400 United States military chaplains have died in combat, some as a result of direct fire while ministering to fallen Americans, while others made the ultimate sacrifice as a prisoner of war.

(4) Military chaplains currently serve in humanitarian operations, rotational deployments, and in the war on terrorism.

(5) Religious organizations make up the very fabric of religious diversity and represent unparalleled levels of freedom of conscience, speech, and worship that set the United States apart from any other nation on Earth.

(6) Religious organizations have richly blessed the uniformed services by sending clergy to comfort and encourage all persons of faith in the Armed Forces.

(7) During the sinking of the USS Dorchester in February 1943 during World War II, four chaplains (Reverend Fox, Reverend Poling, Father Washington, and Rabbi Goode) gave their lives so that others might live.

(8) All military chaplains aid and assist members of the Armed Forces and their family members with the challenging issues of today’s world.

(9) The current war against terrorism has brought to the shores of the United States new threats and concerns that strike at the beliefs and emotions of Americans.

(10) Military chaplains must, as never before, deal with the spiritual well-being of the members of the Armed Forces and their families.

(b) COMMENDATION.—Congress, on behalf of the Nation, expresses its appreciation for the outstanding contribution that all military chaplains make to the members of the Armed Forces and their families.

(c) PRESIDENTIAL PROCLAMATION.—The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to recognize the distinguished service of the Nation’s military chaplains.

"(ii) for any period for which such housing is leased to the teacher, shall receive a quarters allowance in the amount determined under paragraph (1).

"(B) A teacher is entitled to the quarters allowance in accordance with subparagraph (A)(ii) without regard to whether other Government furnished quarters are available for occupancy by the teacher without charge to the teacher."

TITLE XII—MATTERS RELATING TO OTHER NATIONS

Subtitle A—Cooperative Threat Reduction With States of the Former Soviet Union

SEC. 1201. SPECIFICATION OF COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION PROGRAMS AND FUNDS.

(a) SPECIFICATION OF CTR PROGRAMS.—For purposes of section 301 and other provisions of this Act, Cooperative Threat Reduction programs are the programs specified in section 1501(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201; 110 Stat. 2731; 50 U.S.C. 2362 note).

(b) FISCAL YEAR 2003 COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION FUNDS DEFINED.—As used in this title, the term "fiscal year 2003 Cooperative Threat Reduction funds" means the funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations in section 301 for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs.

(c) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Funds appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations in section 301 for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs shall be available for obligation for three fiscal years.

SEC. 1202. FUNDING ALLOCATIONS.

(a) FUNDING FOR SPECIFIC PURPOSES.—Of the $416,700,000 authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 2003 in section 301(a)(23) for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs, not more than the following amounts may be obligated for the purposes specified:

(1) For strategic offensive arms elimination in Russia, $70,500,000.

(2) For strategic nuclear arms elimination in Ukraine, $6,500,000.

(3) For weapons of mass destruction infrastructure elimination in Ukraine, $8,800,000.

(4) For weapons of mass destruction infrastructure elimination in Kazakhstan, $9,000,000.

(5) For weapons transportation security in Russia, $19,700,000.

(6) For weapons storage security in Russia, $40,000,000.

(7) For weapons of mass destruction proliferation prevention in the former Soviet Union, $40,000,000.

(8) For biological weapons proliferation prevention activities in the former Soviet Union, $55,000,000.

(9) For chemical weapons destruction in Russia, $133,600,000.

(10) For activities designated as Other Assessments/Administrative Support, $14,700,000.

(11) For defense and military contacts, $18,900,000.

(b) REPORT ON OBLIGATION OR EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS FOR OTHER PURPOSES.—No fiscal year 2003 Cooperative Threat Reduction funds may be obligated or expended for a purpose other than a purpose listed in paragraphs (1) through (11) of subsection (a) until 30 days after the date that the Secretary of Defense submits to Congress a report on the purpose for which the funds will be obligated or expended and the amount of funds to be obligated or expended. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed as authorizing the obligation or expenditure of fiscal year 2003 Cooperative Threat Reduction funds for a purpose for which the obligation or expenditure of such funds is specifically prohibited under this title or any other provision of law.

(c) LIMITED AUTHORITY TO VARY INDIVIDUAL AMOUNTS.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2), in any case in which the Secretary of Defense determines that it is necessary to do so in the national interest, the Secretary may obligate amounts appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for a purpose listed in any of the paragraphs in subsection (a) in excess of the amount specifically authorized for such purpose.

(2) An obligation of funds for a purpose stated in any of the paragraphs in subsection (a) in excess of the specific amount authorized for such purpose may be made using the authority provided in paragraph (1) only after—

(A) the Secretary submits to Congress notification of the intent to do so together with a complete discussion of the justification for doing so; and

(B) 15 days have elapsed following the date of the notification.

SEC. 1203. AUTHORIZATION OF USE OF COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION FUNDS FOR PROJECTS AND ACTIVITIES OUTSIDE THE FORMER SOVIET UNION.

(a) COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION PROGRAMS AND FUNDS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) Cooperative Threat Reduction programs are—

(A) the programs specified in section 1501(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201; 110 Stat. 2731; 50 U.S.C. 2362 note); and

(B) any other similar programs, as designated by the Secretary of Defense, to address critical emerging proliferation threats in the states of the former Soviet Union that jeopardize United States national security.

(2) Cooperative Threat Reduction funds, for a fiscal year, are the funds authorized to be appropriated for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs for that fiscal year.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF USE OF CTR FUNDS FOR THREAT REDUCTION ACTIVITIES OUTSIDE THE FORMER SOVIET UNION.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, the Secretary of Defense may obligate and expend Cooperative Threat Reduction funds for fiscal year 2003, or Cooperative Threat Reduction funds for a fiscal year before fiscal year 2003 that remain available for obligation as of the date of the enactment of this Act, for proliferation threat reduction projects and activities outside the states of the former Soviet Union if the Secretary determines that such projects and activities will—

(A) assist the United States in the resolution of critical emerging proliferation threats; or

(B) permit the United States to take advantage of opportunities to achieve long-standing United States nonproliferation goals.

(2) The amount that may be obligated under paragraph (1) in any fiscal year for projects and activities described in that paragraph may not exceed $50,000,000.

(c) AUTHORIZED USES OF FUNDS.—The authority under subsection (b) to obligate and expend Cooperative Threat Reduction funds for a project or activity includes authority to provide equipment, goods, and services for the project or activity, but does not include authority to provide cash directly to the project or activity.

(d) SOURCE AND REPLACEMENT OF FUNDS USED.—(1) The Secretary shall, to the maximum extent practicable, ensure that funds for projects and activities under subsection (b) are derived from funds that would otherwise be obligated for a range of Cooperative Threat Reduction programs, so that no particular Cooperative Threat Reduction program is the exclusive or predominant source of funds for such projects and activities.

(2) If the Secretary obligates Cooperative Threat Reduction funds under subsection (b) in a fiscal year, the first budget of the President that is submitted under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, after such fiscal year shall set forth, in addition to any other amounts requested for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs in the fiscal year covered by such budget, a request for Cooperative Threat Reduction funds in the fiscal year covered by such budget in an amount equal to the amount so obligated. The request shall also set forth the Cooperative Threat Reduction program or programs for which such funds would otherwise have been obligated, but for obligation under subsection (b).

(3) Amounts authorized to be appropriated pursuant to a request under paragraph (2) shall be available for the Cooperative Threat Reduction program or programs set forth in the request under the second sentence of that paragraph.

(e) LIMITATION ON OBLIGATION OF FUNDS.—Except as provided in subsection (f), the Secretary may not obligate and expend Cooperative Threat Reduction funds for a project or activity under subsection (b) until 30 days after the date on which the Secretary submits to the congressional defense committees a report on the purpose for which the funds will be obligated and expended, and the amount of the funds to be obligated and expended.

(f) EXCEPTION.—(1) The Secretary may obligate and expend Cooperative Threat Reduction funds for a project or activity under subsection (b) without regard to subsection (e) if the Secretary determines that a critical emerging proliferation threat warrants immediate obligation and expenditure of such funds.

(2) Not later than 72 hours after first obligating funds for a project or activity under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report containing a detailed justification for the obligation of funds. The report on a project or activity shall include the following:

(A) A description of the critical emerging proliferation threat to be addressed, or the long-standing United States nonproliferation goal to be achieved, by the project or activity.

(B) A description of the agreement, if any, under which the funds will be used, including whether or not the agreement provides that the funds will not be used for purposes contrary to the national security interests of the United States.

(C) A description of the contracting process, if any, that will be used in the implementation of the project or activity.

(D) An analysis of the effect of the obligation of funds for the project or activity on ongoing Cooperative Threat Reduction programs.

(E) An analysis of the need for additional or follow-up threat reduction assistance, including whether or not the need for such assistance justifies the establishment of a new cooperative threat reduction program or programs to account for such assistance.

(F) A description of the mechanisms to be used by the Secretary to assure that proper audits and examinations of the project or activity are carried out.

(g) REPORT ON ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION PROGRAMS.—(1) If the Secretary employs the authority in subsection (b) in any two fiscal years, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the advisability of establishing one or more new cooperative threat reduction programs to account for projects and activities funded using such authority.

(2) The report required by paragraph (1) shall be submitted along with the budget justification materials in support of the Department of Defense budget (as submitted with the budget of the President under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code) in the first budget submitted after the end of the two consecutive fiscal years referred to in that paragraph.

SEC. 1204. WAIVER OF LIMITATIONS ON ASSISTANCE UNDER PROGRAMS TO FACILITATE COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION AND NONPROLIFERATION.

(a) ASSISTANCE UNDER COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION ACT OF 1993.—Section 1203 of the Cooperative Threat Reduction Act of 1993 (title XII of Public Law 103-160; 107 Stat. 1778; 22 U.S.C. 5952) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(e) WAIVER OF RESTRICTIONS.—(1) The restrictions in subsection (d) shall cease to apply to a state for a year if the President submits to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate a written certification that the waiver of such restrictions in such year is important to the national security interests of the United States, together with a report containing the following:

“(A) A description of the activity or activities that prevent the President from certifying that the state is committed to the matters set forth in subsection (d) in such year as otherwise provided for in that subsection.

“(B) A description of the strategy, plan, or policy of the President for promoting the commitment of the state to such matters, notwithstanding the waiver.

“(2) The matter included in the report under paragraph (1) shall be submitted in unclassified form, but may include a classified annex.”

(b) ADMINISTRATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON ASSISTANCE.—Subsection (d) of that section is amended—

(1) by striking “any year” and inserting “any fiscal year”; and

(2) by striking “that year” and inserting “such fiscal year”.

(c) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS UNDER FREEDOM SUPPORT ACT.—Section 502 of the FREEDOM Support Act (Public Law 102-511; 106 Stat. 3338; 22 U.S.C. 5852) is amended—

(1) by striking “Funds” and inserting “(a) ELIGIBILITY.—Except as provided in subsection (b), funds”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(b) WAIVER OF ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.—(1) Funds may be obligated for a fiscal year under subsection (a) for assistance or other programs and activities for an independent state of the former Soviet Union that does not meet one or more of the requirements for eligibility under paragraphs (1) through (4) of that subsection if the President certifies in writing to the Congress that the waiver of such requirements in such fiscal year is important to the national security interests of the United States.

“(2) At the time of the exercise of the authority in paragraph (1) with respect to an independent state of the former Soviet Union for a fiscal year, the President shall submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the following:

“(A) A description of the activity or activities that prevent the President from certifying that the state is committed to each matter in subsection (a) in such fiscal year to which the waiver under paragraph (1) applies.

“(B) A description of the strategy, plan, or policy of the President for promoting the commitment of the state to each such matter, notwithstanding the waiver.

“(3) In this subsection, the term ‘congressional defense committees’ means—

“(A) the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; and

“(B) the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.”

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 2002.

SEC. 1205. RUSSIAN TACTICAL NUCLEAR WEAPONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations, in addition to rogue states, are known to be working to acquire weapons of mass destruction, and particularly nuclear warheads.

(2) The largest and least secure potential source of nuclear warheads for terrorists or rogue states is Russia’s arsenal of nonstrategic or “tactical” nuclear warheads, which according to unclassified estimates numbers from 7,000 to 12,000 warheads. Security at Russian nuclear weapon storage sites is insufficient, and tactical nuclear warheads are more vulnerable to terrorist or rogue state acquisition due to their smaller size, greater portability, and greater numbers compared to Russian strategic nuclear weapons.

(3) Russia's tactical nuclear warheads were not covered by the START treaties or the recent Moscow Treaty. Russia is not legally bound to reduce its tactical nuclear stockpile and the United States has no inspection rights regarding Russia's tactical nuclear arsenal.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—(1) One of the most likely nuclear weapon attack scenarios against the United States would involve detonation of a stolen Russian tactical nuclear warhead smuggled into the country.

(2) It is a top national security priority of the United States to accelerate efforts to account for, secure, and reduce Russia's stockpile of tactical nuclear warheads and associated fissile material.

(3) This imminent threat warrants a special nonproliferation initiative.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 30 days after enactment of this Act, the President shall report to Congress on efforts to reduce the particular threats associated with Russia's tactical nuclear arsenal and the outlines of a special initiative related to reducing the threat from Russia's tactical nuclear stockpile.

Subtitle B—Other Matters

SEC. 1211. ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT AND SERVICES FOR COALITION LIAISON OFFICERS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Chapter 6 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 169. Administrative support and services for coalition liaison officers

“(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Defense may provide administrative services and support for the performance of duties by any liaison officer of another nation involved in a coalition while the liaison officer is assigned temporarily to the headquarters of a combatant command, component command, or subordinate operational command of the United States in connection with the planning for or conduct of a coalition operation.

“(b) TRAVEL, SUBSISTENCE, AND OTHER EXPENSES.—The Secretary may pay the travel, subsistence, and similar personal expenses of a liaison officer of a developing country in connection with the assignment of that liaison officer to the headquarters of a combatant command as described in subsection (a) if the assignment is requested by the commander of the combatant command.

“(c) REIMBURSEMENT.—To the extent that the Secretary determines appropriate, the Secretary may provide the services and support authorized under subsections (a) and (b) with or without reimbursement from (or on behalf of) the recipients.

“(1) The term ‘administrative services and support’ includes base or installation support services, office space, utilities, copying services, fire and police protection, and computer support.

“(2) The term ‘coalition’ means an ad hoc arrangement between or among the United States and one or more other nations for common action.”

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter 6 is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

“169. Administrative support and services for coalition liaison officers.”

SEC. 1212. USE OF WARSAW INITIATIVE FUNDS FOR TRAVEL OF OFFICIALS FROM PARTNER COUNTRIES.

Section 1051(b) of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking “paragraph (2)” and inserting “paragraphs (2) and (3)”;

(2) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph (3):

“(3) In the case of defense personnel of a country that is participating in the Partnership for Peace program of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), expenses authorized to be paid under subsection (a) may be paid in connection with travel of personnel to the territory of any of the countries participating in the Partnership for Peace program or of any of the NATO member countries.”

SEC. 1213. SUPPORT OF UNITED NATIONS-SPONSORED EFFORTS TO INSPECT AND MONITOR IRAQI WEAPONS ACTIVITIES.

(a) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF ASSISTANCE IN FISCAL YEAR 2003.—The total amount of the assistance for fiscal year 2003 that is provided by the Secretary of Defense under section 1505 of the Weapons of Mass Destruction Control Act of 1992 (22 U.S.C. 5859a) as activities of the Department of Defense in support of activities under that Act may not exceed $15,000,000.

(b) EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE.—Subsection (f) of section 1505 of the Weapons of Mass Destruction Control Act of 1992 (22 U.S.C. 5859a) is amended by striking “2002” and inserting “2003”.

SEC. 1214. ARCTIC AND WESTERN PACIFIC ENVIRONMENTAL COOPERATION PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 138 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“§ 2350m. Arctic and Western Pacific Environmental Cooperation Program

“(a) AUTHORITY TO CONDUCT PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense may, with the concurrence of the Secretary of State, conduct on a cooperative basis with countries located in the Arctic and Western Pacific regions a program of environmental activities provided for in subsection (b) in such regions. The program shall be known as the ‘Arctic and Western Pacific Environmental Cooperation Program’.

“(b) PROGRAM ACTIVITIES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), activities under the program under subsection (a) may include cooperation and assistance on environmental matters in the Arctic and Western Pacific regions among elements of the Department of Defense and the military departments or agencies of countries located in such regions.

“(2) Activities under the program may not include activities relating to the following:

“(A) The conduct of any peacekeeping exercise or other peacekeeping-related activity with the Russian Federation.

“(B) The provision of housing.

“(C) The provision of assistance to promote environmental restoration.

“(D) The provision of assistance to promote job retraining.

“(c) LIMITATION ON FUNDING FOR PROJECTS OTHER THAN RADIOLOGICAL PROJECTS.—Not more than 20 percent of the amount made available for the program under subsection (a) in any fiscal year may be available for projects under the program other than projects on radiological matters.

“(d) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) Not later than March 1, 2003, and each year thereafter, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on activities under the program under subsection (a) during the preceding fiscal year.

“(2) The report on the program for a fiscal year under paragraph (1) shall include the following:

“(A) A description of the activities carried out under the program during that fiscal year, including a separate description of each project under the program.

“(B) A statement of the amounts obligated and expended for the program during that fiscal year, set forth in aggregate and by project.

“(C) A statement of the life cycle costs of each project, including the life cycle costs of such project as of the end of that fiscal year and an estimate of the total life cycle costs of such project upon completion of such project.

“(D) A statement of the participants in the activities carried out under the program during that fiscal year, including the elements of the Department of Defense and the military departments or agencies of other countries.

“(E) A description of the contributions of the military departments and agencies of other countries to the activities carried out under the program during that fiscal year, including any financial or other contributions to such activities.”

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of that subchapter is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

(b) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED AUTHORITY ON ARCTIC MILITARY COOPERATION PROGRAM.—Section 327 of the Strom Thurmond National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1999 (Public Law 105-261; 112 Stat. 1965) is repealed.

SEC. 1215. DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE HIV/AIDS PREVENTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a) EXPANSION OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Defense is authorized to expand, in accordance with this section, the Department of Defense program of HIV/AIDS prevention educational activities undertaken in connection with the conduct of United States military training, exercises, and humanitarian assistance in sub-Saharan African countries.

(b) ELIGIBLE COUNTRIES.—The Secretary may carry out the program in all eligible countries. A country shall be eligible for activities under the program if the country—

(1) is a country suffering a public health crisis (as defined in subsection (e)); and

(2) participates in the military-to-military contacts program of the Department of Defense.

(c) PROGRAM ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary shall provide for the activities under the program—

(1) to focus, to the extent possible, on military units that participate in peace keeping operations; and

(2) to include HIV/AIDS-related voluntary counseling and testing and HIV/AIDS-related surveillance.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301(a)(22) to the Department of Defense for operation and maintenance of the Defense Health Program, $30,000,000 may be available for carrying out the program described in subsection (a) as expanded pursuant to this section.

(2) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended.

(e) COUNTRY SUFFERING A PUBLIC HEALTH CRISIS DEFINED.—In this section, the term “country suffering a public health crisis” means a country that has rapidly rising rates of incidence of HIV/AIDS or in which HIV/AIDS is causing significant family, community, or societal disruption.

SEC. 1216. MONITORING IMPLEMENTATION OF THE 1979 UNITED STATES-CHINA AGREEMENT ON COOPERATION IN SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY.

(a) RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE OFFICE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COOPERATION.—The Office of Science and Technology Cooperation of the Department of State shall monitor the implementation of the 1979 United States-China Agreement on Cooperation in Science and Technology and its protocols (in this section referred to as the “Agreement”), and keep a systematic account of the protocols thereto. The Office shall coordinate the activities of all agencies of the United States Government that carry out cooperative activities under the Agreement.

(b) GUIDELINES.—The Secretary of State shall ensure that all activities conducted under the Agreement and its protocols comply with applicable laws and regulations concerning the transfer of militarily sensitive and dual-use technologies.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than April 1, 2004, and every two years thereafter, the Secretary of State, shall submit a report to Congress, in both classified and unclassified form, on the implementation of the Agreement and activities thereunder.

(2) REPORT ELEMENTS.—Each report under this subsection shall provide an evaluation of the benefits of the Agreement to the Chinese economy, military, and defense industrial base and shall include the following:

(A) An accounting of all activities conducted under the Agreement since the previous report, and a projection of activities to be undertaken in the next two years.

(B) An estimate of the costs to the United States to administer the Agreement within the period covered by the report.

(C) An assessment of how the Agreement has influenced the policies of the People’s Republic of China toward scientific and technological cooperation with the United States.

(D) An analysis of the involvement of Chinese nuclear weapons and military missile specialists in the activities of the Joint Commission.

(E) A determination of the extent to which the activities conducted under the Agreement have enhanced the military and industrial base of the People’s Republic of China, and an assessment of the impact of projected activities for the next two years, including transfers of technology, on China’s economic and military capabilities.

(F) Any recommendations on improving the monitoring of the activities of the Commission by the Secretaries of Defense and State.

(3) CONSULTATION PRIOR TO SUBMISSION OF REPORTS.—The Secretary of State shall prepare the report in consultation with the Secretaries of Commerce, Defense, and Energy, the Directors of the National Science Foundation and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the intelligence community.

Subtitle B—Real Property and Facilities Administration

SEC. 2811. AGREEMENTS WITH PRIVATE ENTITIES TO ENHANCE MILITARY TRAINING, TESTING, AND OPERATIONS.

“§ 2697. Agreements with private entities to enhance military training, testing, and operations

“(a) AGREEMENTS WITH PRIVATE ENTITIES AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of a military department may enter into an agreement with a private entity described in subsection (b) to address the use or development of real property in the vicinity of an installation under the jurisdiction of such Secretary for purposes of—

“(1) limiting any development or use of such property that would otherwise be incompatible with the mission of such installation; or

“(2) preserving habitat on such property in a manner that is compatible with both—

“(A) current or anticipated environmental requirements that would or might otherwise restrict, impede, or otherwise interfere, whether directly or indirectly, with current or anticipated military training, testing, or operations on such installation; and

“(B) current or anticipated military training, testing, or operations on such installation.

“(b) COVERED PRIVATE ENTITIES.—A private entity described in this subsection is any private entity that has as its stated principal organizational purpose or goal the conservation, restoration, or preservation of land and natural resources, or a similar purpose or goal.

“(c) INAPPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS.—Chapter 63 of title 31 shall not apply to any agreement entered into under this section.

“(d) ACQUISITION AND ACCEPTANCE OF PROPERTY AND INTERESTS.—(1) Subject to the provisions of this subsection, an agreement with a private entity under this section—

“(A) may provide for the private entity to acquire all right, title, and interest in and to any real property, or any lesser interest therein, as may be appropriate for purposes of this section; and

“(B) shall provide for the private entity to transfer to the United States, upon the request of the United States, any property or interest so acquired.

“(2) Property or interests may not be acquired pursuant to an agreement under this section unless the owner of such property or interests, as the case may be, consents to the acquisition.

“(3) An agreement under this section providing for the acquisition of property or interests under paragraph (1)(A) shall provide for the sharing by the United States and the private entity concerned of the costs of the acquisition of such property or interests.

“(4) The Secretary concerned shall identify any property or interests to be acquired pursuant to an agreement under this section. Such property or interests shall be limited to the minimum property or interests necessary to ensure that the property concerned is developed and used in a manner appropriate for purposes of this section.

“(5) The Secretary concerned may accept on behalf of the United States any property or interest to be transferred to the United States under paragraph (1)(B).

“(6) The Secretary concerned may, for purposes of the acceptance of property or interests under this subsection, accept an appraisal or title documents prepared or adopted by a non-Federal entity as satisfying the applicable requirements of section 301 of the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 4651) or section 355 of the Revised Statutes (40 U.S.C. 255) if the Secretary finds that such appraisal or title documents substantially comply with such requirements.

“(e) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary concerned may require such additional terms and conditions in an agreement under this section as such Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

“(f) FUNDING.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Range Enhancement Initiative Fund of the Department of Defense are available for purposes of any agreement under this section.

“(2) In the case of an installation operated primarily with funds authorized to be appropriated for research, development, test, and evaluation, funds authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Defense, or the military department concerned, for research, development, test, and evaluation are available for purposes of an agreement under this section with respect to such installation.

“(3) Amounts in the Fund that are made available for an agreement of a military department under this section shall be made available by transfer from the Fund to the applicable operation and maintenance account of the military department, including the operation and maintenance account for the active component, or for a reserve component, of the military department.”.

SEC. 2812. CONVEYANCE OF SURPLUS REAL PROPERTY FOR NATURAL RESOURCE CONSERVATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 159 of title 10, United States Code, as amended by section 2811 of this Act, is further amended by inserting after section 2697 the following new section:

“§ 2698. Conveyance of surplus real property for natural resource conservation

“(a) AUTHORITY TO CONVEY.—Subject to subsection (c), the Secretary of a military department may, in the sole discretion of such Secretary, convey to any State or local government or instrumentality thereof, or private entity that has as its primary purpose or goal the conservation of open space or natural resources on real property, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to any real property, including any improvements thereon, under the jurisdiction of such Secretary that is described in subsection (b).

“(1) is suitable, as determined by the Secretary concerned, for use for the conservation of open space or natural resources;

“(2) is surplus property for purposes of title II of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.); and

“(3) has been available for public benefit conveyance under that title for a sufficient time, as determined by the Secretary concerned in consultation with the Administrator of General Services, to permit potential claimants to seek public benefit conveyance of such property, but without the submittal during that time of a request for such conveyance.

“(c) CONDITIONS OF CONVEYANCE.—Real property may not be conveyed under this section unless the conveyee of such property agrees that such property—

“(1) shall be used and maintained for the conservation of open space or natural resources in perpetuity, unless otherwise provided for under subsection (e); and

“(2) may be subsequently conveyed only if—

“(A) the Secretary concerned approves in writing such subsequent conveyance;

“(B) the Secretary concerned notifies the appropriate committees of Congress of the subsequent conveyance not later than 21 days before the subsequent conveyance; and

“(C) after such subsequent conveyance, shall be used and maintained for the conservation of open space or natural resources in perpetuity, unless otherwise provided for under subsection (e).

“(d) USE FOR INCIDENTAL PRODUCTION OF REVENUE.—Real property conveyed under this section may be used for the incidental production of revenue, as determined by the Secretary concerned, if such production of revenue is compatible with the use of such property for the conservation of open space or natural resources, as so determined.

“(e) REVERSION.—If the Secretary concerned determines at any time that real property conveyed under this section is not being used and maintained in accordance with the agreement of the conveyee under subsection (c), all right, title, and interest in and to such real property, including any improvements thereon, shall revert to the United States, and the United States shall have the right of immediate entry thereon.

“(f) PROPERTY UNDER BASE CLOSURE LAWS.—The Secretary concerned may not make a conveyance under this section of any real property to be disposed of under a base closure law in a manner that is inconsistent with the requirements and conditions of such base closure law.

“(g) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary concerned may establish such additional terms and conditions in connection with a conveyance of real property under this section as such Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

“(h) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) The term ‘appropriate committees of Congress’ has the meaning given that term in section 2801(c)(4) of this title.

“(2) The term ‘State’ includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

“(3) The term ‘base closure law’ means the following:

“(A) Section 2687 of this title.

“(B) Title II of the Defense Authorization Amendments and Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1988 (10 U.S.C. 2687 note).

“(C) The Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 (part A of title XXIX of Public Law 101–510; 10 U.S.C. 2687 note).

“(D) Any other similar authority for the closure or realignment of military installations that is enacted after the date of the enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003.”.

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 159 of that title, as amended by section 2811 of this Act, is further amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2687 the following new item:

“2698. Conveyance of surplus real property for natural resource conservation.”.

(b) ACCEPTANCE OF FUNDS TO COVER ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Section 2695(b) of that title is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(5) The conveyance of real property under section 2698 of this title.”.

(c) AGREEMENTS WITH PRIVATE ENTITIES.—Section 2701(d) of that title is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking “with any State or local government agency, or with any Indian tribe,” and inserting “any State or local government agency, any Indian tribe, or, for purposes under section 2697 or 2698 of this title, with any private entity”; and

(2) by striking paragraph (4), as redesignated by section 311(1) of this Act, and inserting the following new paragraph (4):

“(4) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection:

“(A) The term ‘Indian tribe’ has the meaning given such term in section 101(36) of Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601(36)).

“(B) The term ‘private entity’ means any private entity that has as its stated principal organizational purpose or goal the conservation, restoration, or preservation of land and natural resources, or a similar purpose or goal.”.

SEC. 2813. MODIFICATION OF DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM ON REDUCTION IN LONG-TERM FACILITY MAINTENANCE COSTS.

(a) ADMINISTRATOR OF PROGRAM.—Subsection (a) of section 2814 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (division B of Public Law 107–107; 115 Stat. 1310; 10 U.S.C. 2809 note) is amended by striking “Secretary of the Army” and inserting “Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of a military department”.

(b) CONTRACTS.—Subsection (b) of that section is amended to read as follows:

“(b) CONTRACTS.—(1) Not more than 12 contracts may contain requirements referred to in subsection (a) for the purpose of the demonstration program.

“(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), the demonstration program may only cover contracts entered into on or after the date of the enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003.

“(3) The Secretary of the Army shall treat any contract containing requirements referred to in subsection (a) that was entered into under the authority in that subsection during the period beginning on December 28, 2001, and ending on the date of the enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003 as a contract for the purpose of the demonstration program under that subsection.”.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Subsection (d) of that section is amended by striking “Secretary of the Army” and inserting “Secretary of Defense”.

(d) FUNDING.—(1) Subsection (f) of that section is amended by striking “the Army” and inserting “the military departments or defense-wide”.

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall not affect the availability for the purpose of the demonstration program under section 2814 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002, as amended by this section, of any amounts authorized to be appropriated before the date of the enactment of this Act for the Army for military construction that have been obligated for the demonstration program, but not expended, as of that date.

Subtitle C—Land Conveyances

SEC. 2821. CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN ALASKA NO LONGER REQUIRED FOR NATIONAL GUARD PURPOSES.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Army may convey to the State of Alaska, or any governmental entity, Native Corporation, or Indian tribe within the State of Alaska, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to any parcel of real property, including any improvements thereon, described in subsection (b) that the Secretary considers appropriate in the public interest.

(b) COVERED PROPERTY.—Real property described in this subsection is any property located in the State of Alaska that, as determined by the Secretary—

(1) is currently under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army;

(2) before December 2, 1980, was under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army for use of the Alaska National Guard;

(3) is located in a unit of the National Wildlife Refuge System designated in the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act (94 Stat. 2371; 16 U.S.C. 1301 note);

(4) is excess to the needs of the Alaska National Guard and the Department of Defense; and

(5) is in such condition that—

(A) the anticipated cost to the United States of retaining such property exceeds the value of such property; or

(B) such property is unsuitable for retention by the United States.

(c) CONSIDERATION.—(1) The conveyance of real property under this section shall, at the election of the Secretary, be for no consideration or for consideration in an amount determined by the Secretary to be appropriate under the circumstances.

(2) If consideration is received under paragraph (1) for property conveyed under subsection (a), the Secretary may use the amounts received, to the extent provided in appropriations Acts, to pay for—

(A) the cost of a survey described in subsection (d) with respect to such property;

(B) the cost of carrying out any environmental assessment, study, or analysis, and any remediation, that may be required under Federal law, or is considered appropriate by the Secretary, in connection with such property or the conveyance of such property; and

(C) any other costs incurred by the Secretary in conveying such property.

(d) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of any real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary.

(e) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with a conveyance of real property under this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “Indian tribe” has the meaning given such term in section 102 of the Federally Recognized Indian Tribe List Act of 1994 (Public Law 103-454; 108 Stat. 4791; 25 U.S.C. 479a).

(2) The term “Native Corporation” has the meaning given such term in section 3 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602).

SEC. 2822. LAND CONVEYANCE, FORT CAMPBELL, KENTUCKY.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Army may convey, without consideration, to the City of Hopkinsville, Kentucky (in this section referred to as the “City”), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property at Fort Campbell, Kentucky, consisting of approximately 50 acres and containing an abandoned railroad spur for the purpose of permitting the City to use the property for storm water management, recreation, transportation, and other public purposes.

(b) REIMBURSEMENT OF TRANSACTION COSTS.—(1) The City shall reimburse the Secretary for any costs incurred by the Secretary in carrying out the conveyance authorized by subsection (a).

(2) Any reimbursement for costs that is received under paragraph (1) shall be credited to the fund or account providing funds for such costs. Amounts so credited shall be merged with amounts in such fund or account, and shall be available for the same purposes, and subject to the same conditions and limitations, as amounts in such fund or account.

(c) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The acreage of the real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) has been determined by the Secretary through a legal description outlining such acreage. No further survey of the property is required before conveyance under that subsection.

(d) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance under subsection (a) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2823. MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY FOR LAND TRANSFER AND CONVEYANCE, NAVAL SECURITY GROUP ACTIVITY, WINTER HARBOR, MAINE.

(a) MODIFICATION OF CONVEYANCE AUTHORITY FOR COREA AND WINTER HARBOR PROPERTIES.—Section 2845 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (division B of Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1319) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (b) and inserting the following new subsection (b):

“(b) CONVEYANCE AND TRANSFER OF COREA AND WINTER HARBOR PROPERTIES AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary of the Navy may convey, without consideration, to the State of Maine, any political subdivision of the State of Maine, or any tax-supported agency in the State of Maine, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to parcels of real property, including any improvements thereon and appurtenances thereto, comprising the former facilities of the Naval Security Group Activity, Winter Harbor, Maine, as follows:

“(2) The Secretary of the Navy may transfer to the administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior a parcel of real property consisting of approximately 404 acres at the former Naval Security Group Activity, which is the balance of the real property comprising the Corea Operations Site.

“(3) The Secretary of the Interior shall administer the property transferred under paragraph (2) as part of the National Wildlife Refuge System.”; and

(2) in subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h), by striking “subsection (b)” each place it appears and inserting “subsection (b)(1)”.

(b) EXEMPTION OF MODIFIED CONVEYANCES FROM FEDERAL SCREENING REQUIREMENT.—That section is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (g) and (h) as subsections (h) and (i), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection (g):

“(g) EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN CONVEYANCES FROM FEDERAL SCREENING.—Any conveyance authorized by subsection (b)(1) of this section, as amended by section 2823 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003, is exempt from the requirement to screen the property concerned for further Federal use pursuant to section 2696 of title 10, United States Code.”.

SEC. 2824. LAND CONVEYANCE, WESTOVER AIR RESERVE BASE, MASSACHUSETTS.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Navy may convey, without consideration, to the City of Chicopee, Massachusetts (in this section referred to as the “City”), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, including 133 housing units and other improvements thereon, consisting of approximately 30.38 acres located at Westover Air Reserve Base in Chicopee, Massachusetts, for the purpose of permitting the City to use the property for economic development and other public purposes.

(b) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—(1) The Secretary may require the City to reimburse the Secretary for the costs incurred by the Secretary to carry out the conveyance under subsection (a), including survey costs, costs related to environmental documentation (other than the environmental baseline survey), and other administrative costs related to the conveyance.

(2) Section 2695(c) of title 10, United States Code, shall apply to any amount received under this subsection.

(c) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary.

(d) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance under subsection (a) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2825. LAND CONVEYANCE, NAVAL STATION NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Navy may convey to the State of Rhode Island, or any political subdivision thereof, any or all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, together with improvements thereon, consisting of approximately 34 acres located in Melville, Rhode Island, and known as the Melville Marina site.

(b) CONSIDERATION.—(1) As consideration for the conveyance of real property under subsection (a), the conveyee shall pay the United States an amount equal to the fair market value of the real property, as determined by the Secretary based on an appraisal of the real property acceptable to the Secretary.

(2) Any consideration received under paragraph (1) shall be deposited in the account established under section 204(h) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 485(h)), and shall be available as provided for in that section.

(c) REIMBURSEMENT OF TRANSACTION COSTS.—(1) The Secretary may require the conveyee of the real property under subsection (a) to reimburse the Secretary for any costs incurred by the Secretary in carrying out the conveyance.

(2) Any reimbursement for costs that is received under paragraph (1) shall be credited to the fund or account providing funds for such costs. Amounts so credited shall be merged with amounts in such fund or account, and shall be available for the same purposes, and subject to the same conditions and limitations, as amounts in such fund or account.

(d) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary.

(e) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance under subsection (a) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2826. LAND EXCHANGE, BUCKLEY AIR FORCE BASE, COLORADO.

(a) EXCHANGE AUTHORIZED.—Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of the Air Force may convey to the State of Colorado (in this section referred to as the “State”) all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, including improvements thereon, consisting of all or part of the Watkins Communications Site in Arapahoe County, Colorado.

(b) LIMITATION.—The Secretary of the Air Force may carry out the conveyance authorized by subsection (a) only with the concurrence of the Secretary of Defense.

(c) CONSIDERATION.—(1) As consideration for the conveyance authorized by subsection (a) the State shall convey to the United States of all right, title, and interest of the State in and to a parcel of real property, including improvements thereon, consisting of approximately 41 acres that is owned by the State and is contiguous to Buckley Air Force Base, Colorado.

(2) The Secretary shall have jurisdiction over the real property conveyed under paragraph (1).

(3) Upon conveyance to the United States under paragraph (1), the real property conveyed under that paragraph is withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the general land laws, including the mining laws and mineral and geothermal leasing laws.

(d) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the parcels of real property to be conveyed under this section shall be determined by surveys satisfactory to the Secretary.

SEC. 2827. LAND ACQUISITION, BOUNDARY CHANNEL DRIVE SITE, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA.

(a) ACQUISITION AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of Defense may, using amounts authorized to be appropriated to be appropriated by section 2401, acquire all right, title, and interest in and to a parcel of real property, including any improvements thereon, in Arlington County, Virginia, consisting of approximately 7.2 acres and known as the Boundary Channel Drive Site. The parcel is located southeast of Interstate Route 395 at the end of Boundary Channel Drive and was most recently occupied by the Twin Bridges Marriott.

(b) INCLUSION IN PENTAGON RESERVATION.—Upon its acquisition under subsection (a), the parcel acquired under that subsection shall be included in the Pentagon Reservation, as that term is defined in section 2674(f)(1) of title 10, United States Code.

(c) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property to be acquired under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary.

(d) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such terms and conditions in connection with the acquisition under this section as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2828. LAND CONVEYANCES, WENDOVER AIR FORCE BASE AUXILIARY FIELD, NEVADA.

(a) CONVEYANCES AUTHORIZED TO WEST WENDOVER, NEVADA.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior may convey, without consideration, to the City of West Wendover, Nevada, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following:

(A) The lands at Wendover Air Force Base Auxiliary Field, Nevada, identified in Easement No. AFMC-HL-2-00-334 that are determined by the Secretary of the Air Force to be no longer required.

(B) The lands at Wendover Air Force Base Auxiliary Field identified for disposition on the map entitled “West Wendover, Nevada—Excess”, dated January 5, 2001, that are determined by the Secretary of the Air Force to be no longer required.

(2) The purposes of the conveyances under this subsection are—

(A) to permit the establishment and maintenance of runway protection zones; and

(B) to provide for the development of an industrial park and related infrastructure.

(3) The map referred to in paragraph (1)(B) shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Director of the Bureau of Land Management and the Elko District Office of the Bureau of Land Management.

(b) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED TO TOOELE COUNTY, UTAH.—(1) The Secretary of the Interior may convey, without consideration, to Tooele County, Utah, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the lands at Wendover Air Force Base Auxiliary Field identified in Easement No. AFMC-HL-2-00-318 that are determined by the Secretary of the Air Force to be no longer required.

(2) The purpose of the conveyance under this subsection is to permit the establishment and maintenance of runway protection zones and an aircraft accident potential protection zone as necessitated by continued military aircraft operations at the Utah Test and Training Range.

(c) MANAGEMENT OF CONVEYED LANDS.—The lands conveyed under subsections (a) and (b) shall be managed by the City of West Wendover, Nevada, City of Wendover, Utah, Tooele County, Utah, and Elko County, Nevada—

(1) in accordance with the provisions of an Interlocal Memorandum of Agreement entered into between the Cities of West Wendover, Nevada, and Wendover, Utah, Tooele County, Utah, and Elko County, Nevada, providing for the coordinated management and development of the lands for the economic benefit of both communities; and

(2) in a manner that is consistent with such provisions of the easements referred to subsections (a) and (b) that, as jointly determined by the Secretary of the Air Force and Secretary of the Interior, remain applicable and relevant to the operation and management of the lands following conveyance and are consistent with the provisions of this section.

(d) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary of the Air Force and the Secretary of the Interior may jointly require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyances required by subsections (a) and (b) as the Secretaries consider appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2829. LAND CONVEYANCE, FORT HOOD, TEXAS.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Army may convey, without consideration, to the Veterans Land Board of the State of Texas (in this section referred to as the “Board”), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, including any improvements thereon, consisting of approximately 174 acres at Fort Hood, Texas, for the purpose of permitting the Board to establish a State-run cemetery for veterans.

(b) REVERSIONARY INTEREST.—(1) If at the end of the five-year period beginning on the date of the conveyance authorized by subsection (a), the Secretary determines that the property conveyed under that subsection is not being used for the purpose specified in that subsection, all right, title, and interest in and to the property, including any improvements thereon, shall revert to the United States, and the United States shall have the right of immediate entry thereon.

(2) Any determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be made on the record after an opportunity for a hearing.

(c) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of the survey shall be borne by the Board.

(d) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance under subsection (a) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2830. LAND CONVEYANCES, ENGINEER PROVING GROUND, FORT BELVOIR, VIRGINIA.

(a) CONVEYANCE TO FAIRFAX COUNTY, VIRGINIA, AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary of the Army may convey, without consideration, to Fairfax County, Virginia, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, including any improvements thereon, consisting of approximately 135 acres, located in the northwest portion of the Engineer Proving Ground (EPG) at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, in order to permit the County to use such property for park and recreational purposes.

(2) The parcel of real property authorized to be conveyed by paragraph (1) is generally described as that portion of the Engineer Proving Ground located west of Accotink Creek, east of the Fairfax County Parkway, and north of Cissna Road to the northern boundary, but excludes a parcel of land consisting of approximately 15 acres located in the southeast corner of such portion of the Engineer Proving Ground.

(3) The land excluded under paragraph (2) from the parcel of real property authorized to be conveyed by paragraph (1) shall be reserved for an access road to be constructed in the future.

(b) CONVEYANCE OF BALANCE OF PROPERTY AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary may convey to any competitively selected grantee all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the real property, including any improvements thereon, at the Engineering Proving Ground, not conveyed under the authority in subsection (a).

(c) CONSIDERATION.—(1) As consideration for the conveyance authorized by subsection (b), the grantee shall provide the United States, whether by cash payment, in-kind contribution, or a combination thereof, an amount that is not less than the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary, of the property conveyed under that subsection.

(2) In-kind consideration under paragraph (1) may include the maintenance, improvement, alteration, repair, remodeling, restoration (including environmental restoration), or construction of facilities for the Department of the Army at Fort Belvoir or at any other site or sites designated by the Secretary.

(3) If in-kind consideration under paragraph (1) includes the construction of facilities, the grantee shall also convey to the United States—

(A) title to such facilities, free of all liens and other encumbrances; and

(B) if the United States does not have fee simple title to the land underlying such facilities, convey to the United States all right, title, and interest in and to such lands not held by the United States.

(4) The Secretary shall deposit any cash received as consideration under this subsection in the special account established pursuant to section 204(h) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 485(h)).

(d) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED AUTHORITY.—Section 2821 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990 and 1991 (division B of Public Law 101-189; 103 Stat. 1658), as amended by section 2854 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996 (division B of Public Law 104-106; 110 Stat. 568), is repealed.

(e) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property to be conveyed under subsections (a) and (b) shall be determined by surveys satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of each such survey shall be borne by the grantee.

(f) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyances under subsections (a) and (b) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

SEC. 2831. MASTER PLAN FOR USE OF NAVY ANNEX, ARLINGTON, VIRGINIA.

(a) REPEAL OF COMMISSION ON NATIONAL MILITARY MUSEUM.—Title XXIX of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (division B of Public Law 106-65; 113 Stat. 880; 10 U.S.C. 111 note) is repealed.

(b) MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY FOR TRANSFER FROM NAVY ANNEX.—Section 2881 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (113 Stat. 879) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(2), as amended by section 2863(f) of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (division B of Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1332), by striking “as a site—” and all that follows and inserting “as a site for such other memorials or museums that the Secretary considers compatible with Arlington National Cemetery and the Air Force Memorial.”; and

(2) in subsection (d)—

(A) in paragraph (2), by striking “the recommendation (if any) of the Commission on the National Military Museum to use a portion of the Navy Annex property as the site for the National Military Museum”, and inserting “the use of the acres reserved under (b)(2) as a memorial or museum”; and

(B) in paragraph (4), by striking “the date on which the Commission on the National Military Museum submits to Congress its report under section 2903” and inserting “the date of the enactment of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003”.

(c) CONSTRUCTION OF AMENDMENTS.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) may not be construed to delay the establishment of the United States Air Force Memorial authorized by section 2863 of the Military Construction Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (115 Stat. 1330).

SEC. 2832. LAND CONVEYANCE, SUNFLOWER ARMY AMMUNITION PLANT, KANSAS.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Army or the Administrator of General Services may convey, without consideration, to the Johnson County Park and Recreation District, Kansas (in this section referred to as the “District”), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, including any improvements thereon, in the State of Kansas consisting of approximately 2,000 acres, a portion of the Sunflower Army Ammunition Plant. The purpose of the conveyance is to permit the District to use the parcel for public recreational purposes.

(b) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage, location, and legal description of the real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the official making the conveyance. The cost of such legal description, survey, or both shall be borne by the District.

(c) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The official making the conveyance of real property under subsection (a) may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance as that official considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall take effect on January 31, 2003.

SEC. 2833. LAND CONVEYANCE, BLUEGRASS ARMY DEPOT, RICHMOND, KENTUCKY.

(a) CONVEYANCE AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary of the Army may convey, without consideration, to Madison County, Kentucky (in this section referred to as the “County”), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property, including any improvements thereon, consisting of approximately 10 acres at the Bluegrass Army Depot, Richmond, Kentucky, for the purpose of facilitating the construction of a veterans’ center on the parcel by the State of Kentucky.

(2) The Secretary may not make the conveyance authorized by this subsection unless the Secretary determines that the State of Kentucky has appropriated adequate funds for the construction of the veterans’ center.

(b) REVERSIONARY INTEREST.—If the Secretary determines that the real property conveyed under subsection (a) ceases to be utilized for the sole purpose of a veterans’ center or that reasonable progress is not demonstrated in constructing the center and initiating services to veterans, all right, title, and interest in and to the property shall revert to the United States, and the United States shall have the right of immediate entry onto the property. Any determination under this subsection shall be made on the record after an opportunity for a hearing.

(c) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The Secretary shall apply section 2695 of title 10, United States Code, to the conveyance authorized by subsection (a).

(d) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary. The cost of the survey shall be borne by the County.

(e) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance under subsection (a) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

Subtitle D—Other Matters

SEC. 2841. TRANSFER OF FUNDS FOR ACQUISITION OF REPLACEMENT PROPERTY FOR NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE SYSTEM LANDS IN NEVADA.

(a) TRANSFER OF FUNDS AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary of the Air Force may, using amounts authorized to be appropriated by section 2304(a), transfer to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service $15,000,000 to fulfill the obligations of the Air Force under section 3011(b)(5)(F) of the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1999 (title XXX of Public Law 106-65; 113 Stat. 889).

(2) Upon receipt by the Service of the funds transferred under paragraph (1), the obligations of the Air Force referred to in that paragraph shall be considered fulfilled.

(b) CONTRIBUTION TO FOUNDATION.—(1) The United States Fish and Wildlife Service may grant funds received by the Service under subsection (a) in a lump sum to the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation for use in accomplishing the purposes of section 3011(b)(5)(F) of the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1999.

(2) Funds received by the Foundation under paragraph (1) shall be subject to the provisions of the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation Establishment Act (16 U.S.C. 3701 et seq.), other than section 10(a) of that Act (16 U.S.C. 3709(a)).

DIVISION C—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY AUTHORIZATIONS AND OTHER AUTHORIZATIONS

TITLE XXXI—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Subtitle A—National Security Programs Authorizations

SEC. 3101. NATIONAL NUCLEAR SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 2003 for the activities of the National Nuclear Security Administration in carrying out programs necessary for national security in the amount of $8,160,043,000, to be allocated as follows:

(1) WEAPONS ACTIVITIES.—For weapons activities, $5,988,188,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For directed stockpile work, $1,218,967,000.

(B) For campaigns, $2,090,528,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For operation and maintenance, $1,740,983,000.

(ii) For construction, $349,545,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 01-D-101, distributed information systems laboratory, Sandia National Laboratories, Livermore, California, $13,305,000.

Project 00-D-103, terascale simulation facility, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $35,030,000.

Project 00-D-107, joint computational engineering laboratory, Sandia National Laboratories, Albuquerque, New Mexico, $7,000,000.

Project 98-D-125, tritium extraction facility, Savannah River Plant, Aiken, South Carolina, $70,165,000.

Project 96-D-111, national ignition facility (NIF), Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $224,045,000.

(C) For readiness in technical base and facilities, $1,735,129,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For operation and maintenance, $1,464,783,000.

(ii) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $270,346,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 03-D-101, Sandia underground reactor facility (SURF), Sandia National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $2,000,000.

Project 03-D-103, project engineering and design (PED), various locations, $17,839,000.

Project 03-D-121, gas transfer capacity expansion, Kansas City Plant, Kansas City, Missouri, $4,000,000.

Project 03-D-122, purification prototype facility, Y-12 Plant, Oak Ridge, Tennessee, $20,800,000.

Project 03-D-123, special nuclear material component requalification facility, Pantex Plant, Amarillo, Texas, $3,000,000.

Project 02-D-103, project engineering and design (PED), various locations, $24,945,000.

Project 02-D-105, engineering technology complex upgrade, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $10,000,000.

Project 02-D-107, electrical power systems safety communications and bus upgrades, Nevada Test Site, Nevada, $7,500,000.

Project 01-D-103, project engineering and design (PED), various locations, $6,164,000.

Project 01-D-107, Atlas relocation, Nevada Test Site, Nevada, $4,123,000.

Project 01-D-108, microsystems and engineering sciences applications (MESA), Sandia National Laboratories, Albuquerque, New Mexico, $75,000,000.

Project 01-D-124, HEU storage facility, Y-12 Plant, Oak Ridge, Tennessee, $25,000,000.

Project 01-D-126, weapons evaluation test laboratory, Pantex Plant, Amarillo, Texas, $8,650,000.

Project 01-D-800, sensitive compartmented information facility, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $9,611,000.

Project 99-D-103, isotope sciences facilities, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $4,011,000.

Project 99-D-104, protection of real property (roof reconstruction, phase II), Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $5,915,000.

Project 99-D-127, stockpile management restructuring initiative, Kansas City Plant, Kansas City, Missouri, $29,900,000.

Project 99-D-128, stockpile management restructuring initiative, Pantex Plant, Amarillo, Texas, $407,000.

Project 98-D-123, stockpile management restructuring initiative, tritium facility modernization and consolidation, Savannah River Plant, Aiken, South Carolina, $10,481,000.

Project 96-D-102, stockpile stewardship facilities revitalization, Phase VI, various locations, $1,000,000.

(C) For secure transportation asset, $157,083,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For operation and maintenance, $102,578,000.

(ii) For program direction, $54,505,000.

(D) For safeguards and security, $574,954,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For operation and maintenance, $566,054,000.

(ii) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $8,900,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 99-D-132, stockpile management restructuring initiative, nuclear material safeguards and security upgrades project, Los Alamos National Laboratory, Los Alamos, New Mexico, $8,900,000.

(E) For facilities and infrastructure, $242,512,000.

(2) DEFENSE NUCLEAR NONPROLIFERATION.—For defense nuclear nonproliferation activities, $1,129,130,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For operation and maintenance, $1,037,130,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For nonproliferation and verification research and development, $298,907,000.

(ii) For nonproliferation programs, $446,223,000.

(iii) For fissile materials, $292,000,000.

(B) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $156,000,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 01-D-407, highly enriched uranium blend-down, Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina, $30,000,000.

Project 99-D-141, pit disassembly and conversion facility, Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina, $33,000,000.

Project 99-D-143, mixed oxide fuel fabrication facility, Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina, $93,000,000.

(3) NAVAL REACTORS.—For naval reactors, $707,020,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For naval reactors development, $682,590,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For operation and maintenance, $671,290,000.

(ii) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $11,300,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 03-D-201, cleanroom technology facility, Bettis Atomic Power Laboratory, West Mifflin, Pennsylvania, $7,200,000.

Project 01-D-200, major office replacement building, Schenectady, New York, $2,100,000.

Project 90-N-102, expended core facility dry cell project, Naval Reactors Facility, Idaho, $2,000,000.

(B) For program direction, $24,430,000.

(4) OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATOR FOR NUCLEAR SECURITY.—For the Office of the Administrator for Nuclear Security, and for program direction for the National Nuclear Security Administration (other than for naval reactors and secure transportation asset), $335,705,000.

SEC. 3102. DEFENSE ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 2003 for environmental management activities in carrying out programs necessary for national security in the amount of $6,710,774,000, to be allocated as follows:

(1) CLOSURE PROJECTS.—For closure projects carried out in accordance with section 3143 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997 (Public Law 104-201; 110 Stat. 2836; 42 U.S.C. 7277n), $1,109,314,000.

(2) SITE/PROJECT COMPLETION.—For site completion and project completion in carrying out environmental management activities necessary for national security programs, $793,950,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For operation and maintenance, $779,706,000.

(B) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $14,244,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 02-D-402, Intec cathodic protection system expansion, Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory, Idaho Falls, Idaho, $1,119,000.

Project 02-D-420, plutonium stabilization and packaging, Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina, $2,000,000.

Project 01-D-414, project engineering and design (PED), various locations, $5,125,000.

Project 86-D-103, decontamination and waste treatment facility, Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, Livermore, California, $6,000,000.

(3) POST-2006 COMPLETION.—For post-2006 completion in carrying out environmental restoration and waste management activities necessary for national security programs, $2,617,199,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For operation and maintenance, $1,704,341,000.

(B) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $14,870,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 93-D-187, high-level waste removal from filled waste tanks, Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina, $14,870,000.

(C) For the Office of River Protection in carrying out environmental restoration and waste management activities necessary for national security programs, $897,988,000, to be allocated as follows:

(i) For operation and maintenance, $226,256,000.

(ii) For plant projects (including maintenance, restoration, planning, construction, acquisition, modification of facilities, and the continuation of projects authorized in prior years, and land acquisition related thereto), $671,732,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 03-D-403, immobilized high-level waste interim storage facility, Richland, Washington, $6,363,000.

Project 01-D-416, waste treatment and immobilization plant, Richland, Washington, $619,000,000.

Project 97-D-402, tank farm restoration and safe operations, Richland, Washington, $25,424,000.

Project 94-D-407, initial tank retrieval systems, Richland, Washington, $20,945,000.

(4) SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT.—For science and technology development in carrying out environmental management activities necessary for national security programs, $92,000,000.

(5) EXCESS FACILITIES.—For excess facilities in carrying out environmental management activities necessary for national security programs, $1,300,000.

(6) SAFEGUARDS AND SECURITY.—For safeguards and security in carrying out environmental management activities necessary for national security programs, $278,260,000.

(7) URANIUM ENRICHMENT DECONTAMINATION AND DECOMMISSIONING FUND.—For contribution to the Uranium Enrichment Decontamination and Decommissioning Fund under chapter 28 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2297g et seq.), $441,000,000.

(8) ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT CLEANUP REFORM.—For accelerated environmental restoration and waste management activities, $1,000,000,000.

(9) PROGRAM DIRECTION.—For program direction in carrying out environmental restoration and waste management activities necessary for national security programs, $396,098,000.

SEC. 3103. OTHER DEFENSE ACTIVITIES.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 2003 for other defense activities in carrying out programs necessary for national security in the amount of $489,883,000, to be allocated as follows:

(1) INTELLIGENCE.—For intelligence, $43,559,000.

(2) COUNTERINTELLIGENCE.—For counterintelligence, $48,083,000.

(3) OFFICE OF SECURITY.—For the Office of Security for security, $252,218,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For nuclear safeguards and security, $156,102,000.

(B) For security investigations, $45,870,000.

(C) For program direction, $50,246,000.

(4) INDEPENDENT OVERSIGHT AND PERFORMANCE ASSURANCE.—For independent oversight and performance assurance, $22,615,000.

(5) OFFICE OF ENVIRONMENT, SAFETY, AND HEALTH.—For the Office of Environment, Safety, and Health, $104,910,000, to be allocated as follows:

(A) For environment, safety, and health (defense), $86,892,000.

(B) For program direction, $18,018,000.

(A) For worker and community transition, $22,965,000.

(B) For program direction, $2,809,000.

(7) OFFICE OF HEARINGS AND APPEALS.—For the Office of Hearings and Appeals, $3,136,000.

SEC. 3104. DEFENSE ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT PRIVATIZATION.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 2003 for privatization initiatives in carrying out environmental restoration and waste management activities necessary for national security programs in the amount of $158,399,000, to be allocated as follows:

Project 98-PVT-2, spent nuclear fuel dry storage, Idaho Falls, Idaho, $53,399,000.

Project 97-PVT-2, advanced mixed waste treatment project, Idaho Falls, Idaho, $105,000,000.

SEC. 3105. DEFENSE NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL.

Funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy for fiscal year 2003 for payment to the Nuclear Waste Fund established in section 302(c) of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 (42 U.S.C. 10222(c)) in the amount of $215,000,000.

Subtitle B—Recurring General Provisions

SEC. 3121. REPROGRAMMING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Until the Secretary of Energy submits to the congressional defense committees the report referred to in subsection (b) and a period of 30 days has elapsed after the date on which such committees receive the report, the Secretary may not use amounts appropriated pursuant to this title for any program—

(1) in amounts that exceed, in a fiscal year—

(A) 115 percent of the amount authorized for that program by this title; or

(B) $5,000,000 more than the amount authorized for that program by this title; or

(2) which has not been presented to, or requested of, Congress.

(b) REPORT.—(1) The report referred to in subsection (a) is a report containing a full and complete statement of the action proposed to be taken and the facts and circumstances relied upon in support of the proposed action.

(2) In the computation of the 30-day period under subsection (a), there shall be excluded any day on which either House of Congress is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—(1) In no event may the total amount of funds obligated pursuant to this title exceed the total amount authorized to be appropriated by this title.

(2) Funds appropriated pursuant to this title may not be used for an item for which Congress has specifically denied funds.

SEC. 3122. LIMITS ON MINOR CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS.

(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Energy may carry out any minor construction project using operation and maintenance funds, or facilities and infrastructure funds, authorized by this title.

(b) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit to the congressional defense committees on an annual basis a report on each exercise of the authority in subsection (a) during the preceding year. Each report shall provide a brief description of each minor construction project covered by the report.

(c) COST VARIATION REPORTS TO CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—If, at any time during the construction of any minor construction project authorized by this title, the estimated cost of the project is revised and the revised cost of the project exceeds $5,000,000, the Secretary shall immediately submit to the congressional defense committees a report explaining the reasons for the cost variation.

(d) MINOR CONSTRUCTION PROJECT DEFINED.—In this section, the term “minor construction project” means any plant project not specifically authorized by law if the approved total estimated cost of the plant project does not exceed $5,000,000.

SEC. 3123. LIMITS ON CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), construction on a construction project may not be started or additional obligations incurred in connection with the project above the total estimated cost, whenever the current estimated cost of the construction project, authorized by section 3101, 3102, or 3103, or which is in support of national security programs of the Department of Energy and was authorized by any previous Act, exceeds by more than 25 percent the higher of—

(A) the amount authorized for the project; or

(B) the amount of the total estimated cost for the project as shown in the most recent budget justification data submitted to Congress.

(2) An action described in paragraph (1) may be taken if—

(A) the Secretary of Energy has submitted to the congressional defense committees a report on the actions and the circumstances making such action necessary; and

(B) a period of 30 days has elapsed after the date on which the report is received by the committees.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) does not apply to a construction project with a current estimated cost of less than $5,000,000.

SEC. 3124. FUND TRANSFER AUTHORITY.

(a) TRANSFER TO OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The Secretary of Energy may transfer funds authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy pursuant to this title to other Federal agencies for the performance of work for which the funds were authorized. Funds so transferred may be merged with and be available for the same purposes and for the same time period as the authorizations of the Federal agency to which the amounts are transferred.

(b) TRANSFER WITHIN DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary of Energy may transfer funds authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy pursuant to this title between any such authorizations. Amounts of authorizations so transferred may be merged with and be available for the same purposes and for the same period as the authorization to which the amounts are transferred.

(2) Not more than 5 percent of any such authorization may be transferred between authorizations under paragraph (1). No such authorization may be increased or decreased by more than 5 percent by a transfer under such paragraph.

(c) LIMITATIONS.—The authority provided by this subsection to transfer authorizations—

(1) may be used only to provide funds for items relating to activities necessary for national security programs that have a higher priority than the items from which the funds are transferred; and

(2) may not be used to provide funds for an item for which Congress has specifically denied funds.

(d) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary of Energy shall promptly notify the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives of any transfer of funds to or from authorizations under this title.

SEC. 3125. AUTHORITY FOR CONCEPTUAL AND CONSTRUCTION DESIGN.

(a) REQUIREMENT OF CONCEPTUAL DESIGN.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2) and except as provided in paragraph (3), before submitting to Congress a request for funds for a construction project that is in support of a national security program of the Department of Energy, the Secretary of Energy shall complete a conceptual design for that project.

(2) If the estimated cost of completing a conceptual design for a construction project exceeds $3,000,000, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a request for funds for the conceptual design before submitting a request for funds for the construction project.

(3) The requirement in paragraph (1) does not apply to a request for funds—

(A) for a minor construction project the total estimated cost of which is less than $5,000,000; or

(B) for emergency planning, design, and construction activities under section 3126.

(b) AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION DESIGN.—(1) Within the amounts authorized by this title, the Secretary of Energy may carry out construction design (including architectural and engineering services) in connection with any proposed construction project if the total estimated cost for such design does not exceed $600,000.

(2) If the total estimated cost for construction design in connection with any construction project exceeds $600,000, funds for that design must be specifically authorized by law.

SEC. 3126. AUTHORITY FOR EMERGENCY PLANNING, DESIGN, AND CONSTRUCTION ACTIVITIES.

(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Energy may use any funds available to the Department of Energy pursuant to an authorization in this title, including funds authorized to be appropriated for advance planning, engineering, and construction design, and for plant projects, under sections 3101, 3102, 3103, and 3104 to perform planning, design, and construction activities for any Department of Energy national security program construction project that, as determined by the Secretary, must proceed expeditiously in order to protect public health and safety, to meet the needs of national defense, or to protect property.

(b) LIMITATION.—The Secretary may not exercise the authority under subsection (a) in the case of any construction project until the Secretary has submitted to the congressional defense committees a report on the activities that the Secretary intends to carry out under this section and the circumstances making those activities necessary.

(c) SPECIFIC AUTHORITY.—The requirement of section 3125(b)(2) does not apply to emergency planning, design, and construction activities conducted under this section.

SEC. 3127. FUNDS AVAILABLE FOR ALL NATIONAL SECURITY PROGRAMS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.

Subject to the provisions of appropriation Acts and section 3121, amounts appropriated pursuant to this title for management and support activities and for general plant projects are available for use, when necessary, in connection with all national security programs of the Department of Energy.

SEC. 3128. AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), when so specified in an appropriations Act, amounts appropriated for operation and maintenance or for plant projects may remain available until expended.

(b) EXCEPTION FOR PROGRAM DIRECTION FUNDS.—Amounts appropriated for program direction pursuant to an authorization of appropriations in subtitle A shall remain available to be expended only until the end of fiscal year 2004.

SEC. 3129. TRANSFER OF DEFENSE ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT FUNDS.

(a) TRANSFER AUTHORITY FOR DEFENSE ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT FUNDS.—The Secretary of Energy shall provide the manager of each field office of the Department of Energy with the authority to transfer defense environmental management funds from a program or project under the jurisdiction of that office to another such program or project.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—(1) Not more than three transfers may be made to or from any program or project under subsection (a) in a fiscal year.

(2) The amount transferred to or from a program or project in any one transfer under subsection (a) may not exceed $5,000,000.

(3) A transfer may not be carried out by a manager of a field office under subsection (a) unless the manager determines that the transfer is necessary—

(A) to address a risk to health, safety, or the environment; or

(B) to assure the most efficient use of defense environmental management funds at the field office.

(4) Funds transferred pursuant to subsection (a) may not be used for an item for which Congress has specifically denied funds or for a new program or project that has not been authorized by Congress.

(c) EXEMPTION FROM REPROGRAMMING REQUIREMENTS.—The requirements of section 3121 shall not apply to transfers of funds pursuant to subsection (a).

(d) NOTIFICATION.—The Secretary, acting through the Assistant Secretary of Energy for Environmental Management, shall notify Congress of any transfer of funds pursuant to subsection (a) not later than 30 days after such transfer occurs.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “program or project” means, with respect to a field office of the Department of Energy, any of the following:

(A) A program referred to or a project listed in paragraph (2) or (3) of section 3102.

(B) A program or project not described in subparagraph (A) that is for environmental restoration or waste management activities necessary for national security programs of the Department, that is being carried out by that office, and for which defense environmental management funds have been authorized and appropriated before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The term “defense environmental management funds” means funds appropriated to the Department of Energy pursuant to an authorization for carrying out environmental restoration and waste management activities necessary for national security programs.

(f) DURATION OF AUTHORITY.—The managers of the field offices of the Department may exercise the authority provided under subsection (a) during the period beginning on October 1, 2002, and ending on September 30, 2003.

SEC. 3130. TRANSFER OF WEAPONS ACTIVITIES FUNDS.

(a) TRANSFER AUTHORITY FOR WEAPONS ACTIVITIES FUNDS.—The Secretary of Energy shall provide the manager of each field office of the Department of Energy with the authority to transfer weapons activities funds from a program or project under the jurisdiction of that office to another such program or project.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—(1) Not more than three transfers may be made to or from any program or project under subsection (a) in a fiscal year.

(2) The amount transferred to or from a program or project in any one transfer under subsection (a) may not exceed $5,000,000.

(3) A transfer may not be carried out by a manager of a field office under subsection (a) unless the manager determines that the transfer—

(A) is necessary to address a risk to health, safety, or the environment; or

(B) will result in cost savings and efficiencies.

(4) A transfer may not be carried out by a manager of a field office under subsection (a) to cover a cost overrun or scheduling delay for any program or project.

(5) Funds transferred pursuant to subsection (a) may not be used for an item for which Congress has specifically denied funds or for a new program or project that has not been authorized by Congress.

(c) EXEMPTION FROM REPROGRAMMING REQUIREMENTS.—The requirements of section 3121 shall not apply to transfers of funds pursuant to subsection (a).

(d) NOTIFICATION.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator for Nuclear Security, shall notify Congress of any transfer of funds pursuant to subsection (a) not later than 30 days after such transfer occurs.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “program or project” means, with respect to a field office of the Department of Energy, any of the following:

(A) A program referred to or a project listed in section 3101(1).

(B) A program or project not described in subparagraph (A) that is for weapons activities necessary for national security programs of the Department, that is being carried out by that office, and for which weapons activities funds have been authorized and appropriated before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) The term “weapons activities funds” means funds appropriated to the Department of Energy pursuant to an authorization for carrying out weapons activities necessary for national security programs.

(f) DURATION OF AUTHORITY.—The managers of the field offices of the Department may exercise the authority provided under subsection (a) during the period beginning on October 1, 2002, and ending on September 30, 2003.

Subtitle C—Program Authorizations, Restrictions, and Limitations

SEC. 3131. AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT CLEANUP REFORM.

(a) LIMITATION ON AVAILABILITY FOR ENVIRONMENTAL MANAGEMENT CLEANUP REFORM.—None of the funds authorized to be appropriated by section 3102(8) for the Department of Energy for environmental management cleanup reform may be obligated or expended until the Secretary of Energy—

(1) publishes in the Federal Register, and submits to the congressional defense committees, a report setting forth criteria established by the Secretary—

(A) for selecting the projects that will receive funding using such funds; and

(B) for setting priorities among the projects selected under subparagraph (A); or

(2) notifies the congressional defense committees that the criteria described by paragraph (1) will not be established.

(b) REQUIREMENTS REGARDING ESTABLISHMENT OF CRITERIA.—Before establishing criteria, if any, under subsection (a)(1), the Secretary shall publish a proposal for such criteria in the Federal Register, and shall provide a period of 45 days for public notice and comment on the proposal.

(c) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS IF CRITERIA ARE NOT ESTABLISHED.—(1) If the Secretary exercises the authority under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary shall reallocate the funds referred to in subsection (a) among sites that received funds during fiscal year 2002 for defense environmental restoration and waste management activities under section 3102 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-197; 115 Stat. 1358).

(2) The amount of funds referred to in subsection (a) that are allocated under paragraph (1) to a site described in that paragraph shall bear the same ratio to the amount of funds referred to in subsection (a) as the amount of funds received by such site during fiscal year 2002 under section 3102 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 bears to the total amount of funds made available to all sites during fiscal year 2002 under that section.

(3) No funds allocated under paragraph (1) may be obligated or expended until 30 days after the Secretary submits to the congressional defense committee a list of the projects at each site allocated funds under that paragraph, and the amount of such funds to be provided to each such project at each such site.

(4) Funds referred to in subsection (a) may not be obligated or expended for any site that was not funded in fiscal year 2002 from amounts available to the Department of Energy under title XXXI of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002.

SEC. 3132. ROBUST NUCLEAR EARTH PENETRATOR.

Not later than February 3, 2003, the Secretary of Defense shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Energy, submit to the congressional defense committees a report on the Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator (RNEP). The report shall set forth—

(1) the military requirements for the Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator;

(2) the nuclear weapons employment policy regarding the Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator;

(3) a detailed description of the categories or types of targets that the Robust Nuclear Earth Penetrator is designed to hold at risk; and

(4) an assessment of the ability of conventional weapons to address the same categories and types of targets described under paragraph (3).

SEC. 3133. DATABASE TO TRACK NOTIFICATION AND RESOLUTION PHASES OF SIGNIFICANT FINDING INVESTIGATIONS.

(a) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR DATABASE.—Amounts authorized to be appropriated by section 3101(1) for the National Nuclear Security Administration for weapons activities shall be available to the Deputy Administrator for Nuclear Security for Defense Programs for the development and implementation of a database for all national security laboratories to track the notification and resolution phases of Significant Finding Investigations (SFIs). The purpose of the database is to facilitate the monitoring of the progress and accountability of the national security laboratories in Significant Finding Investigations.

(b) IMPLEMENTATION DEADLINE.—The database required by subsection (a) shall be implemented not later than September 30, 2003.

(c) NATIONAL SECURITY LABORATORY DEFINED.—In this section, the term “national security laboratory” has the meaning given that term in section 3281(1) of the National Nuclear Security Administration Act (title XXXII of Public Law 106-65; 113 Stat. 968; 50 U.S.C. 2471(1)).

SEC. 3134. REQUIREMENTS FOR SPECIFIC REQUEST FOR NEW OR MODIFIED NUCLEAR WEAPONS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT.—(1) In any fiscal year after fiscal year 2002 in which the Secretary of Energy plans to carry out activities described in paragraph (2) relating to the development of a new nuclear weapon or modified nuclear weapon, the Secretary shall specifically request funds for such activities in the budget of the President for that fiscal year under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code.

(2) The activities described in this paragraph are as follows:

(A) The conduct, or provision for conduct, of research and development which could lead to the production of a new nuclear weapon by the United States.

(B) The conduct, or provision for conduct, of engineering or manufacturing to carry out the production of a new nuclear weapon by the United States.

(C) The conduct, or provision for conduct, of research and development which could lead to the production of a modified nuclear weapon by the United States.

(D) The conduct, or provision for conduct, of engineering or manufacturing to carry out the production of a modified nuclear weapon by the United States.

(b) BUDGET REQUEST FORMAT.—The Secretary shall include in a request for funds under subsection (a) the following:

(1) In the case of funds for activities described in subparagraph (A) or (C) of subsection (a)(2), a dedicated line item for each such activity for a new nuclear weapon or modified nuclear weapons that is in phase 1 or 2A or phase 6.1 or 6.2A, as the case may be, of the nuclear weapons acquisition process.

(2) In the case of funds for activities described in subparagraph (B) or (D) of subsection (a)(2), a dedicated line item for each such activity for a new nuclear weapon or modified nuclear weapon that is in phase 3 or higher or phase 6.3 or higher, as the case may be, of the nuclear weapons acquisition process.

(c) EXCEPTION.—Subsections (a) shall not apply to funds for purposes of conducting, or providing for the conduct of, research and development, or manufacturing and engineering, determined by the Secretary to be necessary—

(1) for the nuclear weapons life extension program;

(2) to modify an existing nuclear weapon solely to address safety or reliability concerns; or

(3) to address proliferation concerns.

(d) CONSTRUCTION WITH PROHIBITION ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ON LOW-YIELD NUCLEAR WEAPONS.—Nothing in this section may be construed to modify, repeal, or in any way affect the provisions of section 3136 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103-160; 107 Stat. 1946; 42 U.S.C. 2121 note), relating to prohibitions on research and development on low-yield nuclear weapons.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term “life extension program” means the program to repair or replace non-nuclear components, or to modify the pit or canned subassembly, of nuclear weapons in the nuclear weapons stockpile on the date of the enactment of this Act in order to assure that such nuclear weapons retain the ability to meet the military requirements applicable to such nuclear weapons when first placed in the nuclear weapons stockpile.

(2) The term “modified nuclear weapon” means a nuclear weapon that contains a pit or canned subassembly, either of which—

(A) is in the nuclear weapons stockpile as of the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(B) is being modified in order to meet a military requirement that is other than the military requirements applicable to such nuclear weapon when first placed in the nuclear weapons stockpile.

(3) The term “new nuclear weapon” means a nuclear weapon that contains a pit or canned subassembly, either of which is neither—

(A) in the nuclear weapons stockpile on the date of the enactment of this Act; nor

(B) in production as of that date.

SEC. 3135. REQUIREMENT FOR AUTHORIZATION BY LAW FOR FUNDS OBLIGATED OR EXPENDED FOR DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL SECURITY ACTIVITIES.

Section 660 of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7270) is amended—

(1) by inserting “(a)” before “Appropriations”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(b)(1) No funds for the Department may be obligated or expended for—

“(A) national security programs and activities of the Department; or unless funds therefor have been specifically authorized by law.

“(2) Nothing in paragraph (1) may be construed to preclude the requirement under subsection (a), or under any other provision of law, for an authorization of appropriations for programs and activities of the Department (other than programs and activities covered by that paragraph) as a condition to the obligation and expenditure of funds for programs and activities of the Department (other than programs and activities covered by that paragraph).”.

SEC. 3136. LIMITATION ON AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR PROGRAM TO ELIMINATE WEAPONS GRADE PLUTONIUM PRODUCTION IN RUSSIA.

(a) LIMITATION.—Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated by this title for the program to eliminate weapons grade plutonium production, the Administrator for Nuclear Security may not obligate or expend more than $100,000,000 for that program until 30 days after the date on which the Administrator submits to the congressional defense committees a copy of an agreement entered into between the United States Government and the Government of the Russian Federation to shut down the three plutonium-producing reactors in Russia.

(b) AGREEMENT ELEMENTS.—The agreement under subsection (a)—

(1) shall contain—

(A) a commitment to shut down the three plutonium-producing reactors;

(B) the date on which each such reactor will be shut down;

(C) a schedule and milestones for each such reactor to complete the shut down of such reactor by the date specified under subparagraph (B);

(D) an arrangement for access to sites and facilities necessary to meet such schedules and milestones; and

(E) an arrangement for audit and examination procedures in order to evaluate progress in meeting such schedules and milestones; and

(2) may include cost sharing arrangements.

Subtitle D—Proliferation Matters

SEC. 3151. ADMINISTRATION OF PROGRAM TO ELIMINATE WEAPONS GRADE PLUTONIUM PRODUCTION IN RUSSIA.

(a) TRANSFER OF PROGRAM TO DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.—The program to eliminate weapons grade plutonium production in Russia shall be transferred from the Department of Defense to the Department of Energy.

(b) TRANSFER OF ASSOCIATED FUNDS.—(1) Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation in law on the availability of Cooperative Threat Reduction funds specified in paragraph (2), the Cooperative Threat Reduction funds specified in that paragraph that are available for the program referred to in subsection (a) shall be transferred from the Department of Defense to the Department of Energy.

(2) The Cooperative Threat Reduction funds specified in this paragraph are the following:

(A) Fiscal year 2002 Cooperative Threat Reduction funds, as specified in section 1301(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1254; 22 U.S.C. 5952 note).

(B) Fiscal year 2001 Cooperative Threat Reduction funds, as specified in section 1301(b) of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (as enacted into law by Public Law 106-398; 114 Stat. 1654A-339).

(C) Fiscal year 2000 Cooperative Threat Reduction funds, as specified in section 1301(b) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (Public Law 106-65; 113 Stat. 792; 22 U.S.C. 5952 note).

(c) AVAILABILITY OF TRANSFERRED FUNDS.—(1) Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation in law on the availability of Cooperative Threat Reduction funds specified in subsection (b)(2), the Cooperative Threat Reduction funds transferred under subsection (b) for the program referred to in subsection (a) shall be available for activities as follows:

(A) To design and construct, refurbish, or both, fossil fuel energy plants in Russia that provide alternative sources of energy to the energy plants in Russia that produce weapons grade plutonium.

(B) To carry out limited safety upgrades of not more than three energy plants in Russia that produce weapons grade plutonium in order to permit the shutdown of such energy plants and eliminate the production of weapons grade plutonium in such energy plants.

(2) Amounts available under paragraph (1) for activities referred to in that paragraph shall remain available for such activities until expended.

SEC. 3152. REPEAL OF REQUIREMENT FOR REPORTS ON OBLIGATION OF FUNDS FOR PROGRAMS ON FISSIONABLE MATERIALS IN RUSSIA.

Section 3131 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1996 (Public Law 104-106; 110 Stat. 617; 22 U.S.C. 5952 note) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking “(a) AUTHORITY.—”; and

(2) by striking subsection (b).

SEC. 3153. EXPANSION OF ANNUAL REPORTS ON STATUS OF NUCLEAR MATERIALS PROTECTION, CONTROL, AND ACCOUNTING PROGRAMS.

(a) COVERED PROGRAMS.—Subsection (a) of section 3171 of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 (as enacted into law by Public Law 106-398; 114 Stat. 1654A-475) is amended by striking “Russia that” and inserting “countries where such materials”.

(b) REPORT CONTENTS.—Subsection (b) of that section is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by inserting “in each country covered by subsection (a)” after “locations,”;

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking “in Russia” and inserting “in each such country”;

(3) in paragraph (3), by inserting “in each such country” after “subsection (a)”;

(4) in paragraph (5), by striking “by total amount and by amount per fiscal year” and inserting “by total amount per country and by amount per fiscal year per country”.

SEC. 3154. TESTING OF PREPAREDNESS FOR EMERGENCIES INVOLVING NUCLEAR, RADIOLOGICAL, CHEMICAL, OR BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS.

(a) EXTENSION OF TESTING.—Section 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (title XIV of Public Law 104-201; 110 Stat. 2720; 50 U.S.C. 2315) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by striking “of five successive fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1997” and inserting “of fiscal years 1997 through 2013”; and

(2) in subsection (b)(2), by striking “of five successive fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1997” and inserting “of fiscal years 1997 through 2013”.

(b) CONSTRUCTION OF EXTENSION WITH DESIGNATION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL AS LEAD OFFICIAL.—The amendment made by subsection (a) may not be construed as modifying the designation of the President entitled “Designation of the Attorney General as the Lead Official for the Emergency Response Assistance Program Under Sections 1412 and 1415 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997”, dated April 6, 2000, designating the Attorney General to assume programmatic and funding responsibilities for the Emergency Response Assistance Program under sections 1412 and 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996.

SEC. 3155. PROGRAM ON RESEARCH AND TECHNOLOGY FOR PROTECTION FROM NUCLEAR OR RADIOLOGICAL TERRORISM.

(a) PROGRAM REQUIRED.—(1) The Administrator for Nuclear Security shall carry out a program on research and technology for protection from nuclear or radiological terrorism, including technology for the detection (particularly as border crossings and ports of entry), identification, assessment, control, disposition, consequence management, and consequence mitigation of the dispersal of radiological materials or of nuclear terrorism.

(2) The Administrator shall carry out the program as part of the support of the Administrator for homeland security and counterterrorism within the National Nuclear Security Administration

(b) PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—In carrying out the program required by subsection (a), the Administrator shall—

(1) provide for the development of technologies to respond to threats or incidents involving nuclear or radiological terrorism in the United States;

(2) demonstrate applications of the technologies developed under paragraph (1), including joint demonstrations with the Office of Homeland Security and other appropriate Federal agencies;

(3) provide, where feasible, for the development in cooperation with the Russian Federation of technologies to respond to nuclear or radiological terrorism in the former states of the Soviet Union, including the demonstration of technologies so developed;

(4) provide, where feasible, assistance to other countries on matters relating to nuclear or radiological terrorism, including—

(A) the provision of technology and assistance on means of addressing nuclear or radiological incidents;

(B) the provision of assistance in developing means for the safe disposal of radioactive materials;

(C) in coordination with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the provision of assistance in developing the regulatory framework for licensing and developing programs for the protection and control of radioactive sources; and

(D) the provision of assistance in evaluating the radiological sources identified as not under current accounting programs in the report of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy entitled “Accounting for Sealed Sources of Nuclear Material Provided to Foreign Countries”, and in identifying and controlling radiological sources that represent significant risks; and

(5) in coordination with the Office of Environment, Safety, and Health of the Department of Energy, the Department of Commerce, and the International Atomic Energy Agency, develop consistent criteria for screening international transfers of radiological materials.

(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR INTERNATIONAL ELEMENTS OF PROGRAM.—(1) In carrying out activities in accordance with paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (b), the Administrator shall consult with—

(A) the Secretary of Defense, Secretary of State, and Secretary of Commerce; and

(B) the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(2) The Administrator shall encourage joint leadership between the United States and the Russian Federation of activities on the development of technologies under subsection (b)(4).

(d) INCORPORATION OF RESULTS IN EMERGENCY RESPONSE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—To the maximum extent practicable, the technologies and information developed under the program required by subsection (a) shall be incorporated into the program on responses to emergencies involving nuclear and radiological weapons carried out under section 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (title XIV of Public Law 104-201; 50 U.S.C. 2315).

(e) AMOUNT FOR ACTIVITIES.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 3101(2) for the Department of Energy for the National Nuclear Security Administration for defense nuclear nonproliferation and available for the development of a new generation of radiation detectors for homeland defense, up to $15,000,000 shall be available for carrying out this section.

SEC. 3156. EXPANSION OF INTERNATIONAL MATERIALS PROTECTION, CONTROL, AND ACCOUNTING PROGRAM.

(a) EXPANSION OF PROGRAM TO ADDITIONAL COUNTRIES AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of Energy may expand the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting (MPC&A) program of the Department of Energy to encompass countries outside the Russian Federation and the independent states of the former Soviet Union.

(b) NOTICE TO CONGRESS OF USE OF FUNDS FOR ADDITIONAL COUNTRIES.—Not later than 30 days after the Secretary obligates funds for the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program, as expanded under subsection (a), for activities in or with respect to a country outside the Russian Federation and the independent states of the former Soviet Union, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a notice of the obligation of such funds for such activities.

(c) ASSISTANCE TO DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR NUCLEAR MATERIALS SECURITY PROGRAMS.—(1) As part of the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program, the Secretary of Energy may provide technical assistance to the Secretary of State in the efforts of the Secretary of State to assist other nuclear weapons states to review and improve their nuclear materials security programs.

(2) The technical assistance provided under paragraph (1) may include the sharing of technology or methodologies to the states referred to in that paragraph. Any such sharing shall—

(A) be consistent with the treaty obligations of the United States; and

(B) take into account the sovereignty of the state concerned and its weapons programs, as well the sensitivity of any information involved regarding United States weapons or weapons systems.

(3) The Secretary of Energy may include the Russian Federation in activities under paragraph (1) if the Secretary determines that the experience of the Russian Federation under the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program with the Russian Federation would make the participation of the Russian Federation in such activities useful in providing technical assistance under that paragraph.

(d) PLAN FOR ACCELERATED CONVERSION OR RETURN OF WEAPONS-USABLE NUCLEAR MATERIALS.—(1) The Secretary shall develop a plan to accelerate the conversion or return to the country of origin of all weapons-usable nuclear materials located in research reactors and other facilities outside the country of origin.

(2) The plan under paragraph (1) for nuclear materials of origin in the Soviet Union shall be developed in consultation with the Russian Federation.

(3) As part of the plan under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall identify the funding and schedules required to assist the research reactors and facilities referred to in that paragraph in upgrading their materials protection, control, and accounting procedures until the weapons-usable nuclear materials in such reactors and facilities are converted or returned in accordance with that paragraph.

(4) The provision of assistance under paragraph (3) shall be closely coordinated with ongoing efforts of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the same purpose.

(e) RADIOLOGICAL DISPERSAL DEVICE MATERIALS PROTECTION, CONTROL, AND ACCOUNTING.—(1) The Secretary shall establish within the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program a program on the protection, control, and accounting of materials usable in radiological dispersal devices.

(2) The program under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) an identification of vulnerabilities regarding radiological materials worldwide;

(B) the mitigation of vulnerabilities so identified through appropriate security enhancements; and

(C) an acceleration of efforts to recover and control diffused radiation sources and ‘orphaned’ radiological sources that are of sufficient strength to represent a significant risk.

(3) The program under paragraph (1) shall be known as the Radiological Dispersal Device Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program.

(f) STUDY OF PROGRAM TO SECURE CERTAIN RADIOLOGICAL MATERIALS.—(1) The Secretary, acting through the Administrator for Nuclear Security, shall require the Office of International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting of the Department of Energy to conduct a study to determine the feasibility and advisability of developing a program to secure radiological materials outside the United States that pose a threat to the national security of the United States.

(2) The study under paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) An identification of the categories of radiological materials that are covered by that paragraph, including an order of priority for securing each category of such radiological materials.

(B) An estimate of the number of sites at which such radiological materials are present.

(C) An assessment of the effort required to secure such radiological materials at such sites, including—

(i) a description of the security upgrades, if any, that are required at such sites;

(ii) an assessment of the costs of securing such radiological materials at such sites;

(iii) a description of any cost-sharing arrangements to defray such costs;

(iv) a description of any legal impediments to such effort, including a description of means of overcoming such impediments; and

(v) a description of the coordination required for such effort among appropriate United States Government entities (including the Nuclear Regulatory Commission), participating countries, and international bodies (including the International Atomic Energy Agency).

(D) A description of the pilot project undertaken in Russia.

(3) In identifying categories of radiological materials under paragraph (2)(A), the Secretary shall take into account matters relating to specific activity, half-life, radiation type and energy, attainability, difficulty of handling, and toxicity, and such other matters as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(4) Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the study conducted under this subsection. The report shall include the matters specified under paragraph (2) and such other matters, including recommendations, as the Secretary considers appropriate as a result of the study.

(5) In this subsection, the term ‘‘radiological material’’ means any radioactive material, other than plutonium (Pu) or uranium enriched above 20 percent uranium-235.

(g) AMENDMENT OF CONVENTION ON PHYSICAL PROTECTION OF NUCLEAR MATERIAL.—(1) It is the sense of Congress that the President should encourage amendment of the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials in order to provide that the Convention shall—

(A) apply to both the domestic and international use and transport of nuclear materials;

(B) incorporate fundamental practices for the physical protection of such materials; and

(C) address protection against sabotage involving nuclear materials.

(2) In this subsection, the term ‘‘Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials’’ means the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Materials, With Annex, done at Vienna on October 26, 1979.

(h) AMOUNT FOR ACTIVITIES.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 3102(2) for the Department of Energy for the National Nuclear Security Administration for defense nuclear nonproliferation, up to $5,000,000 shall be available for carrying out this section.

SEC. 3157. ACCELERATED DISPOSITION OF HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM AND PLUTONIUM.

(a) SENSE OF CONGRESS ON PROGRAM TO SECURE STOCKPILES OF HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM AND PLUTONIUM.—(1) It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with the Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense, should develop a comprehensive program of activities to encourage all countries with nuclear materials to adhere to, or to adopt standards equivalent to, the International Atomic Energy Agency standard on The Physical Protection of Nuclear Material and Nuclear Facilities (INFCIRC/225/Rev.4), relating to the security of stockpiles of highly enriched uranium (HEU) and plutonium (Pu).

(2) To the maximum extent practicable, the program should be developed in consultation with the Russian Federation, other Group of 8 countries, and other allies of the United States.

(3) Activities under the program should include specific, targeted incentives intended to encourage countries that cannot undertake the expense of conforming to the standard referred to in paragraph (1) to relinquish their highly enriched uranium (HEU) or plutonium (Pu), including incentives in which a country, group of countries, or international body—

(A) purchase such materials and provide for their security (including by removal to another location);

(B) undertake the costs of decommissioning facilities that house such materials;

(C) in the case of research reactors, convert such reactors to low-enriched uranium reactors; or

(D) upgrade the security of facilities that house such materials in order to meet stringent security standards that are established for purposes of the program based upon agreed best practices.

(b) PROGRAM ON ACCELERATED DISPOSITION OF HEU AUTHORIZED.—(1) The Secretary of Energy may carry out a program to pursue with the Russian Federation, and any other nation that possesses highly enriched uranium, options for blending such uranium so that the concentration of U-235 in such uranium is below 20 percent.

(2) The options pursued under paragraph (1) shall include expansion of the Material Consolidation and Conversion program of the Department of Energy to include—

(A) additional facilities for the blending of highly enriched uranium; and

(B) additional centralized secure storage facilities for highly enriched uranium designated for blending.

(c) INCENTIVES REGARDING HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM IN RUSSIA.—As part of the options pursued under subsection (b) with the Russian Federation, the Secretary may provide financial and other incentives for the removal of all highly enriched uranium from any particular facility in the Russian Federation if the Secretary determines that such incentives will facilitate the consolidation of highly enriched uranium in the Russian Federation to the best-secured facilities.

(d) CONSTRUCTION WITH HEU DISPOSITION AGREEMENT.—Nothing in this section may be construed as terminating, modifying, or otherwise effecting requirements for the disposition of highly enriched uranium under the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Russian Federation Concerning the Disposition of Highly Enriched Uranium Extracted from Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington on February 18, 1993.

(e) PRIORITY IN BLENDING ACTIVITIES.—In pursuing options under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to the blending of highly enriched uranium from weapons, though highly enriched uranium from sources other than weapons may also be blended.

(f) TRANSFER OF HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM AND PLUTONIUM TO UNITED STATES.—(1) As part of the program under subsection (b), the Secretary may, upon the request of any nation—

(A) purchase highly enriched uranium or weapons grade plutonium from the nation at a price determined by the Secretary;

(B) transport any uranium or plutonium so purchased to the United States; and

(C) store any uranium or plutonium so transported in the United States.

(2) The Secretary is not required to blend any highly enriched uranium purchased under paragraph (1)(A) in order to reduce the concentration of U-235 in such uranium to below 20 percent. Amounts authorized to be appropriated by subsection (m) may not be used for purposes of blending such uranium.

(g) TRANSFER OF HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM TO RUSSIA.—(1) As part of the program under subsection (b), the Secretary may encourage nations with highly enriched uranium to transfer such uranium to the Russian Federation for disposition under this section.

(2) The Secretary may pay any nation that transfers highly enriched uranium to the Russian Federation under this subsection an amount determined appropriate by the Secretary.

(3) The Secretary may bear the cost of any blending and storage of uranium transferred to the Russian Federation under this subsection, including any costs of blending and storage under a contract under subsection (h). Any site selected for such storage shall have undergone complete materials protection, control, and accounting upgrades before the commencement of such storage.

(h) CONTRACTS FOR BLENDING AND STORAGE OF HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM IN RUSSIA.—(1)

As part of the program under subsection (b), the Secretary may enter into one or more contracts with the Russian Federation—

(A) to blend in the Russian Federation highly enriched uranium of the Russian Federation and highly enriched uranium transferred to the Russian Federation under subsection (g); or

(B) to store in the Russian Federation highly enriched uranium before blending or the blended material.

(2) Any site selected for the storage of uranium or blended material under paragraph (1)(B) shall have undergone complete materials protection, control, and accounting upgrades before the commencement of such storage.

(i) LIMITATION ON RELEASE FOR SALE OF BLENDED URANIUM.—Uranium blended under this section may not be released for sale until the earlier of—

(1) January 1, 2014; or

(2) the date on which the Secretary certifies that such uranium can be absorbed into the global market without undue disruption to the uranium mining industry in the United States.

(j) PROCEEDS OF SALE OF URANIUM BLENDED BY RUSSIA.—Upon the sale by the Russian Federation of uranium blended under this section by the Russian Federation, the Secretary may elect to receive from the proceeds of such sale an amount not to exceed 75 percent of the costs incurred by the Department of Energy under subsections (c), (g), and (h).

(k) REPORT ON STATUS OF PROGRAM.—Not later than July 1, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the status of the program carried out under the authority in subsection (b). The report shall include—

(1) a description of international interest in the program;

(2) schedules and operational details of the program; and

(3) recommendations for future funding for the program.

(l) HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM DEFINED.—In this section, the term “highly enriched uranium” means uranium with a concentration of U-235 of 20 percent or more.

(m) AMOUNT FOR ACTIVITIES.—Of the amount to be appropriated by section 3102(2) for the Department of Energy for the National Nuclear Security Administration for defense nuclear nonproliferation, up to $40,000,000 shall be available for carrying out this section.

SEC. 3158. DISPOSITION OF PLUTONIUM IN RUSSIA.

(a) NEGOTIATIONS WITH RUSSIAN FEDERATION.—(1) The Secretary of Energy is encouraged to continue to support the Secretary of State in negotiations with the Ministry of Atomic Energy of the Russian Federation to finalize the plutonium disposition program of the Russian Federation (as established under the agreement described in subsection (b)).

(2) As part of the negotiations, the Secretary of Energy may consider providing additional funds to the Ministry of Atomic Energy in order to reach a successful agreement.

(3) If such an agreement, meeting the requirements in subsection (c), is reached with the Ministry of Atomic Energy, which requires additional funds for the Russian work, the Secretary shall either seek authority to use funds available for another purpose, or request supplemental appropriations, for such work.

(b) AGREEMENT.—The agreement referred to in subsection (a) is the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Russian Federation Concerning the Management and Disposition of Plutonium Designated As No Longer Required For Defense Purposes and Related Cooperation, signed August 29, 2000, and September 1, 2000.

(c) REQUIREMENT FOR DISPOSITION PROGRAM.—The plutonium disposition program under subsection (a)—

(1) shall include transparent verifiable steps;

(2) shall proceed at a rate approximately equivalent to the rate of the United States program for the disposition of plutonium;

(3) shall provide for cost-sharing among a variety of countries;

(4) shall provide for contributions by the Russian Federation;

(5) shall include steps over the near term to provide high confidence that the schedules for the disposition of plutonium of the Russian Federation will be achieved; and

(6) may include research on more speculative long-term options for the future disposition of the plutonium of the Russian Federation in addition to the near-term steps under paragraph (5).

SEC. 3159. STRENGTHENED INTERNATIONAL SECURITY FOR NUCLEAR MATERIALS AND SAFETY AND SECURITY OF NUCLEAR OPERATIONS.

(a) REPORT ON OPTIONS FOR INTERNATIONAL PROGRAM TO STRENGTHEN SECURITY AND SAFETY.—(1) Not later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall submit to Congress a report on options for an international program to develop strengthened security for all nuclear materials and safety and security for current nuclear operations.

(2) The Secretary shall consult with the Office of Nuclear Energy Science and Technology of the Department of Energy in the development of options for purposes of the report.

(3) In evaluating options for purposes of the report, the Secretary shall consult with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency on the feasibility and advisability of actions to reduce the risks associated with terrorist attacks on nuclear power plants outside the United States.

(4) Each option for an international program under paragraph (1) may provide that the program is jointly led by the United States, the Russian Federation, and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(5) The Secretary shall include with the report on options for an international program under paragraph (1) a description and assessment of various management alternatives for the international program. If any option requires Federal funding or legislation to implement, the report shall also include recommendations for such funding or legislation, as the case may be.

(b) JOINT PROGRAMS WITH RUSSIA ON PROLIFERATION RESISTANT NUCLEAR ENERGY TECHNOLOGIES.—The Director of the Office of Nuclear Energy Science and Technology Energy shall, in coordination with the Secretary, pursue with the Ministry of Atomic Energy of the Russian Federation joint programs between the United States and the Russian Federation on the development of proliferation resistant nuclear energy technologies, including advanced fuel cycles.

(c) PARTICIPATION OF INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL EXPERTS.—In developing options under subsection (a), the Secretary shall, in consultation with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Russian Federation, and the International Atomic Energy Agency, convene and consult with an appropriate group of international technical experts on the development of various options for technologies to provide strengthened security for nuclear materials and safety and security for current nuclear operations, including the implementation of such options.

(d) ASSISTANCE REGARDING HOSTILE INSIDERS AND AIRCRAFT IMPACTS.—(1) The Secretary may, utilizing appropriate expertise of the Department of Energy and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, provide assistance to nuclear facilities abroad on the interdiction of hostile insiders at such facilities in order to prevent incidents arising from the disablement of the vital systems of such facilities.

(2) The Secretary may carry out a joint program with the Russian Federation and other countries to address and mitigate concerns on the impact of aircraft with nuclear facilities in such countries.

(e) ASSISTANCE TO IAEA IN STRENGTHENING INTERNATIONAL NUCLEAR SAFETY AND SECURITY.—The Secretary may expand and accelerate the programs of the Department of Energy to support the International Atomic Energy Agency in strengthening international nuclear safety and security.

(f) AMOUNT FOR ACTIVITIES.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 3102(2) for the Department of Energy for the National Nuclear Security Administration for defense nuclear nonproliferation, up to $35,000,000 shall be available for carrying out this section as follows:

(1) For activities under subsections (a) through (d), $20,000,000, of which—

(A) $5,000,000 shall be available for sabotage protection for nuclear power plants and other nuclear facilities abroad; and

(B) $10,000,000 shall be available for development of proliferation resistant nuclear energy technologies under subsection (b).

(2) For activities under subsection (e), $15,000,000.

SEC. 3160. EXPORT CONTROL PROGRAMS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PURSUE OPTIONS FOR STRENGTHENING EXPORT CONTROL PROGRAMS.—The Secretary of Energy may pursue in the former Soviet Union and other regions of concern, principally in South Asia, the Middle East, and the Far East, options for accelerating programs that assist countries in such regions in improving their domestic export control programs for materials, technologies, and expertise relevant to the construction or use of a nuclear or radioactive dispersal device.

(b) AMOUNT FOR ACTIVITIES.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 3102(2) for the Department of Energy for the National Nuclear Security Administration for defense nuclear nonproliferation, up to $5,000,000 shall be available for carrying out this section.

SEC. 3161. IMPROVEMENTS TO NUCLEAR MATERIALS PROTECTION, CONTROL, AND ACCOUNTING PROGRAM OF THE RUSSIAN FEDERATION.

(a) REVISED FOCUS FOR PROGRAM.—(1) The Secretary of Energy shall work cooperatively with the Russian Federation to update and improve the Joint Action Plan for the Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting programs of the Department and the Russian Federation Ministry of Atomic Energy.

(2) The updated plan shall shift the focus of the upgrades of the nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting program of the Russian Federation in order to assist the Russian Federation in achieving, as soon as practicable but not later than January 1, 2012, a sustainable nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting system for the nuclear materials of the Russian Federation that is supported solely by the Russian Federation.

(b) PACE OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall work with the Russian Federation, including applicable institutes in Russia, to pursue acceleration of the nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting programs at nuclear defense facilities in the Russian Federation.

(c) TRANSPARENCY OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall work with the Russian Federation to identify various alternatives to provide the United States adequate transparency in the nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting program of the Russian Federation to assure that such program is meeting applicable goals for nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting.

(d) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—In furtherance of the activities required under this section, it is the sense of Congress the Secretary should—

(1) enhance the partnership with the Russian Ministry of Atomic Energy in order to increase the pace and effectiveness of nuclear materials accounting and security activities at facilities in the Russian Federation, including serial production enterprises; and

(2) clearly identify the assistance required by the Russian Federation, the contributions anticipated from the Russian Federation, and the transparency milestones that can be used to assess progress in meeting the requirements of this section.

SEC. 3162. COMPREHENSIVE ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS ON COORDINATION AND INTEGRATION OF ALL UNITED STATES NONPROLIFERATION ACTIVITIES.

Section 1205 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1247) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(d) ANNUAL REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION OF PLAN.—(1) Not later than January 31, 2003, and each year thereafter, the President shall submit to Congress a report on the implementation of the plan required by subsection (a) during the preceding year.

“(2) Each report under paragraph (1) shall include—

“(A) a discussion of progress made during the year covered by such report in the matters of the plan required by subsection (a);

“(B) a discussion of consultations with foreign nations, and in particular the Russian Federation, during such year on joint programs to implement the plan;

“(C) a discussion of cooperation, coordination, and integration during such year in the implementation of the plan among the various departments and agencies of the United States Government, as well as private entities that share objectives similar to the objectives of the plan; and

“(D) any recommendations that the President considers appropriate regarding modifications to law or regulations, or to the administration or organization of any Federal department or agency, in order to improve the effectiveness of any programs carried out during such year in the implementation of the plan.”.

SEC. 3163. UTILIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL LABORATORIES AND SITES IN SUPPORT OF COUNTERTERRORISM AND HOMELAND SECURITY ACTIVITIES.

(a) AGENCIES AS JOINT SPONSORS OF LABORATORIES FOR WORK ON ACTIVITIES.—Each department or agency of the Federal Government, or of a State or local government, that carries out work on counterterrorism and homeland security activities at a Department of Energy national laboratory may be a joint sponsor, under a multiple agency sponsorship arrangement with the Department, of such laboratory in the performance of such work.

(b) AGENCIES AS JOINT SPONSORS OF SITES FOR WORK ON ACTIVITIES.—Each department or agency of the Federal Government, or of a State or local government, that carries out work on counterterrorism and homeland security activities at a Department of Energy site may be a joint sponsor of such site in the performance of such work as if such site were a federally funded research and development center and such work were performed under a multiple agency sponsorship arrangement with the Department.

(c) PRIMARY SPONSORSHIP.—The Department of Energy shall be the primary sponsor under a multiple agency sponsorship arrangement required under subsection (a) or (b).

(d) WORK.—(1) The Administrator for Nuclear Security shall act as the lead agent in coordinating the formation and performance of a joint sponsorship agreement between a requesting agency and a Department of Energy national laboratory or site for work on counterterrorism and homeland security.

(2) A request for work may not be submitted to a national laboratory or site under this section unless approved in advance by the Administrator.

(3) Any work performed by a national laboratory or site under this section shall comply with the policy on the use of federally funded research and development centers under section 35.017(a)(4) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(4) The Administrator shall ensure that the work of a national laboratory or site requested under this section is performed expeditiously and to the satisfaction of the head of the department or agency submitting the request.

(e) FUNDING.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2), a joint sponsor of a Department of Energy national laboratory or site under this section shall provide funds for work of such national laboratory or site, as the case may be, under this section under the same terms and conditions as apply to the primary sponsor of such national laboratory under section 303(b)(1)(C) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253(b)(1)(C)) or of such site to the extent such section applies to such site as a federally funded research and development center by reason of subsection (b).

(2) The total amount of funds provided a national laboratory or site in a fiscal year under this subsection by joint sponsors other than the Department of Energy shall not exceed an amount equal to 25 percent of the total funds provided such national laboratory or site, as the case may be, in such fiscal year from all sources.

Subtitle E—Other Matters

SEC. 3171. INDEMNIFICATION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY CONTRACTORS.

Section 170d.(1)(A) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2210(d)(1)(A)) is amended by striking “until August 1, 2002,” and inserting “until August 1, 2012”.

SEC. 3172. WORKER HEALTH AND SAFETY RULES FOR DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY FACILITIES.

The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 is amended by inserting after section 234B (42 U.S.C. 2282b) the following:

“SEC. 234C. WORKER HEALTH AND SAFETY RULES FOR DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NUCLEAR FACILITIES.

“(a) PERSONS SUBJECT TO PENALTY.—

“(1) CIVIL PENALTY.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A person (or any subcontractor or supplier of the person) who has entered into an agreement of indemnification under section 2210(d) (or any subcontractor or supplier of the person) that violates (or is the employer of a person that violates) Department of Energy Order No. 440.1A (1998), or any rule or regulation relating to industrial or construction health and safety promulgated by the Secretary of Energy (referred to in this section as the “Secretary”) after public notice and opportunity for comment under section 553 of title 5, United States Code (commonly known as the ‘Administrative Procedure Act’), shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $100,000 for each such violation.

“(B) CONTINUING VIOLATIONS.—If any violation under this subsection is a continuing violation, each day of the violation shall constitute a separate violation for the purpose of computing the civil penalty under subparagraph (A).

“(2) REGULATIONS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 270 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations for industrial and construction health and safety that incorporate the provisions and requirements contained in Department of Energy Order No. 440.1A (1998).

“(B) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The regulations promulgated under subparagraph (A) shall take effect on the date that is 1 year after the promulgation date of the regulations.

“(3) VARIANCES OR EXEMPTIONS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may provide in the regulations promulgated under paragraph (2) a procedure for granting variances or exemptions to the extent necessary to avoid serious impairment of the national security of the United States.

“(B) DETERMINATION.—In determining whether to provide a variance or exemption under subparagraph (A), the Secretary of Energy shall assess—

“(i) the impact on national security of not providing a variance or exemption; and “(ii) the benefits or detriments to worker health and safety of providing a variance or exemption.

“(C) PROCEDURE.—Before granting a variance or exemption, the Secretary of Energy shall—

“(i) notify affected employees;

“(ii) provide an opportunity for a hearing on the record; and

“(iii) notify Congress of any determination to grant a variance at least 60 days before the proposed effective date of the variance or exemption.

“(4) APPLICABILITY.—This subsection does not apply to any facility that is a component of, or any activity conducted under, the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program.

“(5) ENFORCEMENT GUIDANCE ON STRUCTURES TO BE DISPOSED OF.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In enforcing the regulations under paragraph (2), the Secretary of Energy shall, on a case-by-case basis, evaluate whether a building, facility, structure, or improvement of the Department of Energy that is permanently closed and that is expected to be demolished, or title to which is expected to be transferred to another entity for reuse, should undergo major retrofitting to comply with specific general industry standards.

“(B) NO EFFECT ON HEALTH AND SAFETY ENFORCEMENT.—This subsection does not diminish or otherwise affect—

“(i) the enforcement of any worker health and safety regulations under this section with respect to the surveillance and maintenance or decontamination, decommissioning, or demolition of buildings, facilities, structures, or improvements; or “(ii) the application of any other law (including regulations), order, or contractual obligation.

“(b) CONTRACT PENALTIES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall include in each contract with a contractor of the Department provisions that provide an appropriate reduction in the fees or amounts paid to the contractor under the contract in the event of a violation by the contractor or contractor employee of any regulation or order relating to industrial or construction health and safety.

“(2) CONTENTS.—The provisions shall specify various degrees of violations and the amount of the reduction attributable to each degree of violation.

“(c) POWERS AND LIMITATIONS.—The powers and limitations applicable to the assessment of civil penalties under section 234A, except for subsection (d) of that section, shall apply to the assessment of civil penalties under this section.

“(d) TOTAL AMOUNT OF PENALTIES.—In the case of an entity described in subsection (d) of section 234A, the total amount of civil penalties under subsection (a) or under subsection (a) of section 234B in a fiscal year may not exceed the total amount of fees paid by the Department of Energy to that entity in that fiscal year.”

SEC. 3173. ONE-YEAR EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY TO PAY VOLUNTARY SEPARATION INCENTIVE PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 3161(a) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 (Public Law 106-65; 5 U.S.C. 5597 note) is amended by striking “January 1, 2004” and inserting “January 1, 2005”.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—The amendment made by subsection (a) may be superseded by another provision of law that takes effect after the date of the enactment of this Act, and before January 1, 2004, establishing a uniform system for providing voluntary separation incentives (including a system for requiring approval of plans by the Office of Management and Budget) for employees of the Federal Government.

SEC. 3174. SUPPORT FOR PUBLIC EDUCATION IN THE VICINITY OF LOS ALAMOS NATIONAL LABORATORY, NEW MEXICO.

(a) SUPPORT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003.—From amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Energy by this title, $6,900,000 shall be available for payment by the Secretary for fiscal year 2003 to the Los Alamos National Laboratory Foundation, a not-for-profit foundation chartered in accordance with section 3167(a) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1998 (Public Law 105-85; 111 Stat. 2052).

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—The foundation referred to in subsection (a) shall—

(1) utilize funds provided under this section as a contribution to the endowment fund for the foundation; and

(2) use the income generated from investments in the endowment fund that are attributable to the payment made under this section to fund programs to support the educational needs of children in the public schools in the vicinity of Los Alamos National Laboratory, New Mexico.

(c) REPEAL OF SUPERSEDED AUTHORITY AND MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY TO EXTEND CON-

TRACT.—(1) Subsection (b) of section 3136 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107-107; 115 Stat. 1368) is amended to read as follows:

“(b) SUPPORT FOR FISCAL YEARS 2003 THROUGH 2013.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary may provide for a contract extension through fiscal year 2013 similar to the contract extension referred to in subsection (a)(2).”

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall take effect on October 1, 2002.

Subtitle F—Disposition of Weapons-Usable Plutonium at Savannah River, South Carolina

SEC. 3181. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In September 2000, the United States and the Russian Federation signed a Plutonium Management and Disposition Agreement by which each agreed to dispose of 34 metric tons of weapons-grade plutonium.

(2) The agreement with Russia is a significant step toward safeguarding nuclear materials and preventing their diversion to rogue states and terrorists.

(3) The Department of Energy plans to dispose of 34 metric tons of weapons-grade plutonium in the United States before the end of 2019 by converting the plutonium to a mixed-oxide fuel to be used in commercial nuclear power reactors.

(4) The Department has formulated a plan for implementing the agreement with Russia through construction of a mixed-oxide fuel fabrication facility, the so-called MOX facility, and a pit disassembly and conversion facility at the Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina.

(5) The United States and the State of South Carolina have a compelling interest in the safe, proper, and efficient operation of the plutonium disposition facilities at the Savannah River Site. The MOX facility will also be economically beneficial to the State of South Carolina, and that economic benefit will not be fully realized unless the MOX facility is built.

(6) The State of South Carolina desires to ensure that all plutonium transferred to the State of South Carolina is stored safely; that the full benefits of the MOX facility are realized as soon as possible; and, specifically, that all defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials transferred to the Savannah River Site either be processed or be removed expeditiously.

SEC. 3182. DISPOSITION OF WEAPONS-USABLE PLUTONIUM AT SAVANNAH RIVER SITE.

(a) PLAN FOR CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF MOX FACILITY.—(1) Not later than February 1, 2003, the Secretary of Energy shall submit to Congress a plan for the construction and operation of the MOX facility at the Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina.

(2) The plan under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) a schedule for construction and operations so as to achieve, as of January 1, 2009, and thereafter, the MOX production objective, and to produce 1 metric ton of mixed oxide fuel by December 31, 2009; and

(B) a schedule of operations of the MOX facility designed so that 34 metric tons of defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials at the Savannah River Site will be processed into mixed oxide fuel by January 1, 2019.

(3)(A) Not later than February 15 each year, beginning in 2004 and continuing for as long as the MOX facility is in use, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the implementation of the plan required by paragraph (1).

(B) Each report under subparagraph (A) for years before 2010 shall include—

(i) an assessment of compliance with the schedules included with the plan under paragraph (2); and

(ii) a certification by the Secretary whether or not the MOX production objective can be met by January 2009.

(C) Each report under subparagraph (A) for years after 2009 shall—

(i) address whether the MOX production objective has been met; and

(ii) assess progress toward meeting the obligations of the United States under the Plutonium Management and Disposition Agreement.

(D) For years after 2017, each report under subparagraph (A) shall also include an assessment of compliance with the MOX production objective and, if not in compliance, the plan of the Secretary for achieving one of the following:

(i) Compliance with such objective.

(ii) Removal of all remaining defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials from the State of South Carolina.

(b) CORRECTIVE ACTIONS.—(1) If a report under subsection (a)(3) indicates that construction or operation of the MOX facility is behind the applicable schedule under subsection (a)(2) by 12 months or more, the Secretary shall submit to Congress, not later than August 15 of the year in which such report is submitted, a plan for corrective actions to be implemented by the Secretary to ensure that the MOX facility project is capable of meeting the MOX production objective by January 1, 2009.

(2) If a plan is submitted under paragraph (1) in any year after 2008, the plan shall include corrective actions to be implemented by the Secretary to ensure that the MOX production objective is met.

(3) Any plan for corrective actions under paragraph (1) or (2) shall include established milestones under such plan for achieving compliance with the MOX production objective.

(4) If, before January 1, 2009, the Secretary determines that there is a substantial and material risk that the MOX production objective will not be achieved by 2009 because of a failure to achieve milestones set forth in the most recent corrective action plan under this subsection, the Secretary shall suspend further transfers of defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials to be processed by the MOX facility until such risk is addressed and the Secretary certifies that the MOX production objective can be met by 2009.

(5) If, after January 1, 2009, the Secretary determines that the MOX production objective has not been achieved because of a failure to achieve milestones set forth in the most recent corrective action plan under this subsection, the Secretary shall suspend further transfers of defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials to be processed by the MOX facility until the Secretary certifies that the MOX production objective can be met by 2009.

(6)(A) Upon making a determination under paragraph (4) or (5), the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the options for removing from the State of South Carolina an amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials equal to the amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials transferred to the State of South Carolina after April 15, 2002.

(B) Each report under subparagraph (A) shall include an analysis of each option set forth in the report, including the cost and schedule for implementation of such option, and any requirements under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) relating to consideration or selection of such option.

(C) Upon submittal of a report under paragraph (A), the Secretary shall commence any analysis that may be required under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 in order to select among the options set forth in the report.

(c) CONTINGENT REQUIREMENT FOR REMOVAL OF PLUTONIUM AND MATERIALS FROM SAVANNAH RIVER SITE.—If the MOX production objective is not achieved as of January 1, 2009, the Secretary shall, consistent with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 and other applicable laws, remove from the State of South Carolina, for storage or disposal elsewhere—

(1) not later than January 1, 2011, not less than 1 metric ton of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials; and

(2) not later than January 1, 2017, an amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials equal to the amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials transferred to the Savannah River Site between April 15, 2002 and January 1, 2017, but not processed by the MOX facility.

(d) ECONOMIC AND IMPACT ASSISTANCE.—(1) If the MOX production objective is not achieved as of January 1, 2011, the Secretary shall pay to the State of South Carolina each year beginning on or after that date through 2016 for economic and impact assistance an amount equal to $1,000,000 per day until the later of—

(A) the passage of 100 days in such year;

(B) the MOX production objective is achieved in such year; or

(C) the Secretary has removed from the State of South Carolina in such year at least 1 metric ton of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials.

(2)(A) If the MOX production objective is not achieved as of January 1, 2017, the Secretary shall pay to the State of South Carolina each year beginning on or after that date through 2024 for economic and impact assistance an amount equal to $1,000,000 per day until the later of—

(i) the passage of 100 days in such year;

(ii) the MOX production objective is achieved in such year; or

(iii) the Secretary has removed from the State of South Carolina an amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials equal to the amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials transferred to the Savannah River Site between April 15, 2002 and January 1, 2017, but not processed by the MOX facility.

(B) Nothing in this paragraph may be construed to terminate, supersede, or otherwise affect any other requirements of this section.

(3) The Secretary shall make payments, if any, under this subsection, from amounts authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Energy.

(4) If the State of South Carolina obtains an injunction that prohibits the Department from taking any action necessary for the Department to meet any deadline specified by this subsection, that deadline shall be extended for a period of time equal to the period of time during which the injunction is in effect.

(e) FAILURE TO COMPLETE PLANNED DISPOSITION PROGRAM.—If on July 1 each year beginning in 2020 and continuing for as long as the MOX facility is in use, less than 34 metric tons of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials have been processed by the MOX facility, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a plan for—

(1) completing the processing of 34 metric tons of defense plutonium and defense plutonium material by the MOX facility; or

(2) removing from the State of South Carolina an amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials equal to the amount of defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials transferred to the Savannah River Site after April 15, 2002, but not processed by the MOX facility.

(f) REMOVAL OF MIXED-OXIDE FUEL UPON COMPLETION OF OPERATIONS OF MOX FACILITY.—If, one year after the date on which operation of the MOX facility permanently ceases any mixed-oxide fuel remains at the Savannah River Site, the Secretary shall submit to Congress—

(1) a report on when such fuel will be transferred for use in commercial nuclear reactors; or

(2) a plan for removing such fuel from the State of South Carolina.

(g) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) MOX PRODUCTION OBJECTIVE.—The term “MOX production objective” means production at the MOX facility of mixed-oxide fuel from defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials at an average rate equivalent to not less than one metric ton of mixed-oxide fuel per year. The average rate shall be determined by measuring production at the MOX facility from the date the facility is declared operational to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission through the date of assessment.

(2) MOX FACILITY.—The term “MOX facility” means the mixed-oxide fuel fabrication facility at the Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina.

(3) DEFENSE PLUTONIUM; DEFENSE PLUTONIUM MATERIALS.—The terms “defense plutonium” and “defense plutonium materials” mean weapons-usable plutonium.

SEC. 3183. STUDY OF FACILITIES FOR STORAGE OF PLUTONIUM AND PLUTONIUM MATERIALS AT SAVANNAH RIVER SITE.

(a) STUDY.—The Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board shall conduct a study of the adequacy of K-Area Materials Storage facility (KAMS), and related support facilities such as Building 235-F, at the Savannah River Site, Aiken, South Carolina, for the storage of defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials in connection with the disposition program provided in section 3182 and in connection with the amended Record of Decision of the Department of Energy for fissile materials disposition.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board shall submit to Congress and the Secretary of Energy a report on the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) REPORT ELEMENTS.—The report under subsection (b) shall—

(1) address—

(A) the suitability of KAMS and related support facilities for monitoring and observing any defense plutonium or defense plutonium materials stored in KAMS;

(B) the adequacy of the provisions made by the Department for remote monitoring of such defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials by way of sensors and for handling of retrieval of such defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials; and

(C) the adequacy of KAMS should such defense plutonium and defense plutonium materials continue to be stored at KAMS after 2019; and

(2) include such recommendations as the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board considers appropriate to enhance the safety, reliability, and functionality of KAMS.

(d) REPORTS ON ACTIONS ON RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 6 months after the date on which the report under subsection (b) is submitted to Congress, and every year thereafter, the Secretary and the Board shall each submit to Congress a report on the actions taken by the Secretary in response to the recommendations, if any, included in the report.

TITLE XXXII—DEFENSE NUCLEAR FACILITIES SAFETY BOARD

SEC. 3201. AUTHORIZATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003, $19,494,000 for the operation of the Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board under chapter 21 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2286 et seq.).

SEC. 3202. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FORMERLY USED SITES REMEDIAL ACTION PROGRAM OF THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003 for the Department of the Army, $140,000,000 for the formerly used sites remedial action program of the Corps of Engineers.

AUTHORIZING TESTIMONY, DOCUMENT PRODUCTION, AND LEGAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 299 submitted earlier today by the majority and the Republican leaders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 299) to authorize testimony, document production and legal representation in City of Columbus versus Jacqueline Downing, et al. and City of Columbus versus Vincent Ramos.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, this resolution concerns requests for testimony in criminal actions in Franklin County Municipal Court in Ohio. In the cases of City of Columbus v. Jacqueline Downing, et al. and City of Columbus v. Vincent Ramos, the city prosecutor has charged the defendants with criminal trespass for refusing to leave Senator DEWINE's Columbus office after the building was closed for the night, and with resisting arrest. Pursuant to subpoenas issued on behalf of the city prosecutor, this resolution authorizes an employee in Senator DEWINE's office who witnessed the events giving rise to the trespass charges, and any other employee in the Senator's office from whom testimony may be required, to testify and produce documents at trial in these cases, with representation by the Senate legal counsel.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that a statement by the majority leader be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 299) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 299

Whereas, in the cases of City of Columbus v. Jacqueline Downing, et al., Nos. 2002 CR B 01082-25, 010835-37 and City of Columbus v. Vincent Ramos, No. 2002 CR B 010835-37 pending in the Franklin County Municipal Court in the State of Ohio, testimony has been requested from Michael Dawson, an employee in the office of Senator Mike DeWine;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. §§288b(a) and 288c(a)(2), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent employees of the Senate with respect to any subpoena, order, or request for testimony relating to their official responsibilities;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate may, by the judicial or administrative process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate;

Whereas, when it appears that evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate may promote the administration of justice, the Senate will take such action as will promote the ends of justice consistent with the privileges of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Michael Dawson and any other employee of Senator DeWine's office from whom testimony may be required are authorized to testify and produce documents in the cases of City of Columbus v. Jacqueline Downing, et al., and City of Columbus v. Vincent Ramos, except concerning matters for which a privilege should be asserted.

SEC. 2. The Senate Legal Counsel is authorized to represent Michael Dawson and any other employee of Senator DeWine's office in connection with the testimony and document production authorized in section one of this resolution.

EXPRESSING SENSE OF SENATE
THAT SMALL BUSINESS PARTICIPATION IS VITAL TO DEFENSE OF OUR NATION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Small Business and Entrepreneurship Committee be discharged from further consideration of S. Res. 264 and the Senate now proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 264) expressing the sense of the Senate that small business participation is vital to the defense of our Nation, and that Federal, State, and local governments should aggressively seek out and purchase innovative technologies and services from American small businesses to help in homeland defense and the fight against terrorism.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc; the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 264) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 264

Whereas on September 11, 2001, the people of the United States were subject to the worst terrorist attack in American history;

Whereas in October 2001, the Pentagon's Technical Support Working Group, which is responsible for seeking new technologies to assist the military, sent an urgent plea, seeking ideas on how to fight terrorism;

Whereas in just 2 months, over 12,500 ideas were submitted to the Technical Support Working Group, most of them from small businesses;

Whereas small businesses remain the most innovative sector of the United States economy, accounting for the vast majority of new product ideas and technological innovations; and

Whereas despite their achievements, small businesses often have difficulty marketing and supplying goods and services to Federal, State, and local governments: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) small business participation is vital to the defense of the United States and should play an active role in assisting the United States military, Federal intelligence and law enforcement agencies, and State and local police forces to combat terrorism through the design and development of innovative products; and

(2) Federal, State, and local governments should aggressively seek out and purchase innovative technologies and services from, and promote research opportunities for, American small businesses to help in homeland defense and the fight against terrorism.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, JULY 9,

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, July 9; that following the prayer and the pledge, the Journal of Proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there be a period for morning business until 10:15 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the first half of the time under the control of the Republican leader or his designee, and the second half of the time under the control of the Republican leader or his designee; that at 10:15 a.m., the Senate resume consideration of the accounting reform bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M.
TOMORROW

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:38 p.m., adjourned until Tuesday, July 9, 2002, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MEDICARE MODERNIZATION AND
PRESCRIPTION DRUG ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. DARRELL E. ISSA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend Chairman Thomas, Chairman TAUZIN, and the House Republican leadership for their work on H.R. 4954, a bill which attempts to balance the needs of two national objectives: ensuring that all Americans have access to affordable prescription drugs and exercising fiscal responsibility.

No American should be denied needed prescription drugs because he or she cannot afford them. This bill, if adopted, will ensure that low income seniors, who cannot afford them will receive the prescription drugs they need.

H.R. 4954 takes a new approach to providing Medicare beneficiaries with prescription drugs and improves the mechanisms for paying healthcare providers. Under this approach, the federal government will pay some of the costs and private insurance plans will be expected to pick up the tab for others. This setup will encourage participants to seek out cost effective ways of addressing potential health problems through preventive measures and competitive bidding. Rival proposals that do not include the participation of the private sector choke out the innovation of competition and often lead to price gouging.

According to Congressional Budget Office estimates, H.R. 4954 should fit within the framework of the budget resolution this House agreed to this year. The Democratic alternative to H.R. 4954 would burst the seams of the budget resolution and is in no way a fiscally responsible plan. Nonetheless, I harbor ominous concerns about the wisdom of spending $350 billion on a new entitlement program at a time when we are already running a deficit. Although I have not seen any specific plan that takes a better approach to helping needy Americans obtain prescription drug benefits, I hesitate in lending my support to H.R. 4954 because I believe that a more thoughtful process might result in a better and more fiscally responsible proposal than any this body is scheduled to consider today.

Mr. Speaker, in our lifetimes we have seen too many government programs expand to the detriment of our nation. The actual cost of entitlement programs has sometimes doubled, tripled, and even quadrupled that of the original estimate. The authors of this bill have taken many precautions to preserve the private medical insurance system and have attempted to limit government aid to Americans who actually need assistance. My greatest concern about this bill, however, is that it may lure Americans who can afford prescription drugs away from private plans and into the black hole of dependency on the taxpayers. If this Congress adopts this bill we must all remain vigilant and turn away from all temptations to morph this entitlement program into a monster that will take a trillion dollar bite out of the general revenues.

This Congress will be credited or held responsible for the results of this initiative for many years to come. I, nevertheless, recognize that our nation's seniors are in need and know that we must respond. H.R. 4954 is the best prescription drug benefit plan before us and I support its passage.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No.'s 249, 250, 251 and 252, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on rollcall No. 249, "yea" on rollcall No. 250, "yea" on rollcall No. 251 and "yea" on rollcall No. 252.

THE REDEDICATION OF THE
CARROLL COUNTY COURTHOUSEHON. SAM GRAVES

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. GRAVES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the rededication of the Carroll County Courthouse on June 29th, 2002, located in Carrollton, Missouri.

This year will mark the 100th year that the courthouse has served the good people of Carroll County. Serving as a place for the community to gather and for the dispensation of justice, the courthouse has stood the test of time. Within its walls, juries have served, county government has convened, and elections have been tallied ensuring that the will of the people of Carroll County is carried out.

Although age and time have been kind to the courthouse, it was not until recently that the courthouse was renovated to include new elevators and restrooms that make it fully accessible to all the people of the county.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in celebrating the Rededication of the Carroll County Courthouse.

IN RECOGNITION OF HOWARD
BERNSTEINHON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my constituent and friend, Howard Bernstein, of Boca Raton, Florida.

In 1945, instead of being at home with his family, Howard Bernstein was on a ship near Okinawa, Japan, "engulfed in the fight for freedom." He was fighting a war where the enemy had threatened the security and liberty of his home, a war in which he wondered if "there would even be a tomorrow."

On April 2nd, while going about his duties, his ship encountered a group of Japanese kamikaze planes, bent on destroying his fleet. During the attack, Howard was hit by a piece of shrapnel, injuring his right eye. Not noticing the blood, he continued fighting, seeking medical attention only when the battle had ended. After receiving treatment, he told both the Captain's Yeoman and the medical Corpsman not to report his injury, as he did not want to alarm his mother, who had another son fighting in the Pacific, in addition to having lost her husband unexpectedly.

Howard Bernstein returned home after the war, enjoying the freedom he and his comrades had worked so hard to preserve. Only recently did he want to commemorate his injury with a Purple Heart, as he wanted to have the medal "as part of [his] heritage." However, since Howard had not reported his injury, he was initially denied a Purple Heart. It took two sworn affidavits of support from his former comrades for him to finally be given the tribute he so richly deserves.

Today, we recognize Howard Bernstein for his courage and bravery in battle and his unflagging devotion to home and family. In honoring Howard, we honor all those who would risk their lives to preserve the liberty of all people, and all those who would sacrifice personal gain for the consideration of others.

TRIBUTE TO COLONEL BRENT
SWARTHON. BOB RILEY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the retirement of Colonel Brent Swart, the Garrison Commander of the United States Army Aviation and Missile Command (AMCOM) at Redstone Arsenal in Alabama. His unwavering patriotism and dedication to the armed services is truly commendable.

Colonel Swart's 26 years of meritorious service in the Army represent his loyalty to the United States of America. This milestone is one many strive for, but few reach. Colonel Swart is a decorated officer and has received the Army Meritorious Service Medal with four Oak Leaf Clusters, the Parachutist Badge and the Army Commendation and the Army Achievement medals, both with Oak Leaf Clusters. On July 1, 2002, when Colonel Swart retires from 26 years of service, it will truly be a day worthy of commendation.

As the Garrison Commander at AMCOM, it was Colonel Swart's duty to allocate the base's operating budget of over $130 million. Under his command were 1,649 military, civilian, and contract employees who came to work each day confident they could put their lives in Colonel Swart's hands. Through Colonel Swart's leadership, four separate multi-functional organizations housed in four separate buildings were consolidated under one roof, therefore increasing effectiveness, productivity and communications.

Colonel Swart's guidance has also been instrumental in providing community service to North Alabama. Over 40 community and family service organizations that enhance the overall quality of life of soldiers, civilians, retirees and their families have benefited from Swart's leadership. The beneficiaries range from a bowling center that received a $750,000 renovation, to a significant upgrading of the Child Development Center, to drastic assistance given to the neighborhood child rearing center.

Colonel Stewart also took strides during his tenure at AMCOM to advance an environmental program. Swart improved relationships with surrounding communities affected by the Redstone Arsenal Environmental Restoration Program. Additionally, he spearheaded a ground breaking water treatment program which eliminated large quantities of hazardous substances from the water.

Colonel Swart's family is from Clay County, Alabama, the same county in which my family has resided for several generations. During his 26 years of service to the Army, Colonel Swart has made Clay County and all of Alabama proud. We thank him for serving our Nation during his career in the Army and wish him well in retirement.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES A. AHRENS

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that a long and exceptionally distinguished career has come to an end. Lt. Col. James Ahrens has retired as Director of Institutional Research from Wentworth Military Academy and Junior College in Lexington, MO.

Lt. Col. Ahrens has led a life of serving his family, community and country. In 1962, he graduated from Grinnell College, Iowa, with a history degree and entered the United States Air Force as a radar controller and public affairs officer. While in the United States Air Force, James received a master's degree in Public Relations from the School of Public Communications at Boston University. He retired from all military service in 1995.

Lt. Col. Ahrens arrived at Wentworth in January of 1982 to teach social science courses in the junior college division. While at Wentworth, he joined the 418th Civil Affairs Company in Grandview, MO, after receiving a direct commission in the United States Army Reserve as a Civil Affairs Officer. Lt. Col. Ahrens mobilized and commanded this unit as it served in Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Turkey during Operations Desert Storm and Provide Comfort in 1991. He served as a detachment commander, company executive officer and commander before the end of his tour.

During his years at Wentworth, he served as Assistant/Associate Dean, managing the Junior College from 1989 through academic year 1994. He served as acting Dean of Continuing Education until January 1995. He was also assigned as Director of Institutional Research from 1995 through May 2001. Lt. Col. Ahrens also coached soccer, track, was a sponsor of the Civil War Living History Club and assisted with academic competition for high school students for a number of years.

Lt. Col. Ahrens is an accomplished historian who has completed a history of Wentworth Military Academy and Junior College from 1947 through 2000. He is also published in Vertical World magazine, which is a history of the United States Air Force Helicopter School.

Lt. Col. Ahrens has distinguished himself as a husband, father, grandfather, teacher and soldier. He has and continues to make his friends and family proud. I am certain that my colleagues will join me in wishing Lt. Col. Ahrens and his family all the best.

SENSE OF HOUSE THAT NEWDOW
V. U.S. CONGRESS WAS ERRO-NEOUSLY DECIDED

SPEECH OF

HON. DARRELL E. ISSA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 459, a resolution condemning the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for ruling that the phrase "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance is unconstitutional.

The ruling by the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals flies directly in the face of Thomas Jefferson's reasoning for the formation of our Nation. In writing the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson reasoned that all men have been endowed with inalienable rights by God and to defend these rights governments are instituted among men.

Mr. Speaker, Judge Goodwin and Judge Reinhardt do not understand the irony of their decision: without God, according to Thomas Jefferson, there is no American government and thus no 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Judges are supposed to interpret the Constitution and laws passed by Congress: not revise the wisdom of our founding fathers to their own liking. If this harmful judicial attitude is not soon corrected, we may find ourselves condemning judicial decisions to delete text from the Declaration of Independence.

I would like to assure my colleagues and the American people that, although the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals exercises appellate jurisdiction over the State of California, this decision is not indicative of the sentiment of the people of California. The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals is notorious for the fact that its decisions are overturned by the U.S. Supreme Court more often than any other circuit. I am confident that this decision will, like many others this court has made, be overturned.

The Senate has acted swiftly to condemn this decision. I urge them to back up their rhetoric with action and expedite their approval of the President's Judicial nominations for the five existing vacancies on the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals so that similar decisions may be avoided in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to speak and I urge all my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution.

ON NAMING THE DEER PARK, NEW YORK POST OFFICE FOR RAY
DOWNEY, A TRUE AMERICAN HERO

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, on June 30th, I was honored to attend a ceremony where the Post Office in Deer Park, New York was renamed for New York Fire Department Chief of Operations Ray Downey, one of the many firefighters lost in the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center on September 11, 2002. In fact, Chief Downey was the most senior member of the Fire Department killed that day. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, this House voted in December to rename the Post Office. I wanted to share my remarks from that day with the House:

Our country has been reunited with the tragedy of September 11th. And we should be. But I want to tell you about something that I experienced on September 12th. Something that has stood out in my mind, above everything else that occurred that week.

It was a unique week in American history—unprecedented tragedy, unprecedented heroism. For me, one moment stands out even more than the evening of September 11th, when I stood with my colleagues on the steps of the Capitol, that we were told was a target of terrorists only hours before, holding hands and singing God Bless America as the sun descended over the dome and over one of America's most horrific days.

A moment stands out even more than September 13th, when I sat with President Bush in the White House Cabinet room and we talked about the battle to come. More than September 15th, when I went with the President to the site of the World Trade Center, where we lost Ray Downey and 3000 innocent victims of terror.

It stands above that evening, when I cast the proudest vote of my career: the vote authorizing the President to do what had to be done for the protection of our children and survival of our values and our way of life.

Of all those extraordinary experiences, one really stands out . . . from September 12th.

I was on the Floor of the House. And we had just heard from CNN or AP that Ray Downey didn't make it. I went to a phone, and I called Ray's daughter, Marie Tortorici. It would be the very first of what turned out to be over 100 condolence calls I would make as a Member of Congress to the families of my constituents who died from terror on September 11th.

'I'm sorry,' I told Marie.

And here's what she said: 'We still have hope. We still have faith. We are praying and we want you to pray also.'

And so, I went back to the floor of the House, and addressed the Congress, and asked them to say a prayer for the Downey family.

In their darkest hour, the Downey family still had hope, still had faith, still had prayer. And this is what Osama bin Laden and those who live in the darkness of nature don't understand about our country, who we are, what are our values, and where we summon our strength.

When I visited with the President on September 14th I saw the destruction the terrorists caused: the twisted metal and the shattered glass and the smoky, acrid ruins. But I also saw the signs of the true America. Rescue workers who had planted tiny American flags in their battered helmets. Their arms were weary from digging for three straight days and three straight nights, but not so weary that they couldn't pump their arms into the air and chant USA, USA, USA when the President arrived.

I spoke to two workers: one from Huntington Station and the other from Islip. I said, how long have you been here? They said, since the building went down. I said, how long will you stay, they said, we're not leaving. This is something al Qaeda could never understand or appreciate. When Americans saw bloodshed, we lined up for hours to give blood back. When we feel fear, we turn to our faith. We unfurl our flags. When Ray Downey's family was in trouble, they responded with hope and with faith.

Because that's what Ray was all about. When Ray Downey saw a building come down, he headed for it. When Ray Downey saw a building collapse in Oklahoma City, half a country away, he headed for it. That's what made him special. Not a hero looking for accolades. Just an American doing his job in the best way he could with a courage forged by hope and faith. That will inspire generations of Americans yet unborn.

When I went to the floor weeks later and asked my colleagues to cosponsor the bill that named this post office, they lined up to sign it. Republicans. Democrats. From New York. From Oklahoma. From California. When I asked Senator Clinton to introduce it in the Senate, she rushed it. And when I asked the President to sign it, he said, "how soon."

Ray Downey had a way of bringing us together. In sports . . . in the Fire Department . . . in Deer Park. We could really use him in Washington right now. We may not have him physically. But we will always have his spirit of hope, and faith and strength to guide us.

And when generations to come visit this post office and say, "who was Ray Downey?" The answer will be clear. He was a kind, gentle and loving man who died so that others would live.

He was one of those guys who gave his life to make us the home of the brave . . . and the land of the free. And when I think of him, as I do often, I recall the words from Romeo and Juliet:

And, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine

That all the world will be in love with night
And pay no worship to the garish sun.

God bless the Downey family. God bless America.

CITY OF SANTA CLARA'S SESQUICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the City of Santa Clara, California, on the occasion of its 150th anniversary as an incorporated city. The sesquicentennial celebration for this "All-America City" gives us the chance to honor the past, enjoy the present, and look towards a bright future.

Santa Clara is a city where tourists love to explore, students love to learn, and locals love to live. What was once a land of wide-open spaces and orchards is now the home of over 100,000 people and several globally-recognized technology companies. Santa Clara's evolution has been an exciting one, but even as the community has become fertile ground where the high tech industry can flourish, it has continued to embrace the human touch.

The region's history started long before the city's incorporation, dating back 6000 years to the time of the Ohlone Indians. Thousands of years passed before the next settlers arrived, drawn to the area by the scenic landscape and the abundant water resources. These settlers, mostly missionaries and military explorers, chose the area that is now the City of Santa Clara to build a new mission, and in 1777 the Mission Santa Clara de Asis was established. This Franciscan mission, the eighth-oldest of California's 21 original missions, still stands on the campus of Santa Clara University, and is a living tribute to the legacy of Father Junipero Serra and to the work of Father Francisco Palou, founder of the mission.

After Santa Clara's incorporation in 1852, the allure of the region's natural resources attracted ranchers and farmers from the Eastern United States, Mexico, and Europe. Stores were opened and soil was cultivated, and by 1900 Santa Clara boasted a population of 3,650. The city suffered through and survived the historic San Francisco Earthquake of 1906, and later sent many brave women and men to serve in the World Wars.

Following World War II, Santa Clara experienced another population boom thanks to a growing number of manufacturing concerns such as the Owens-Corning Fiberglass Corporation. The growing population of almost 60,000 began to fill the suburbs developing around the city, a precursor to the population boom that would accompany a skyrocketing new industry arriving just a few decades later.

The arrival and rapid expansion of the technology industry would quickly bring Santa Clara and the whole of Silicon Valley to worldwide prominence. The technology industry has seen incredible growth in the past twenty years, and the City of Santa Clara has permanently established itself at the forefront of this phenomenon. Some of the most powerful names in the industry, names like Sun Microsystems, Applied Materials, and Intel are all headquartered here. Santa Clara's entire history is full of originality and opportunity, recent history being no exception.

The most important aspect of the relationship between the technology sector and the City of Santa Clara is that it is built on a foundation of reciprocity and mutual respect. The city's two major challenges—providing affordable housing and reusing state surplus land—are being addressed in a collaborative effort by the city and leading high-tech firms. The Intel Teacher Housing Fund, for example, will provide $500 a month for eligible teachers' mortgage payments, and Sun Microsystems set aside part of the land occupied by their headquarters for the preservation of historic buildings and for use by the public. The city, of course, provides a willing and able workforce, and has done a tremendous job of accommodating the large inflow of tech-savvy job hunters and entrepreneurs.

The mutually beneficial relationship between the city and the tech industry is just one of the many reasons why Santa Clara is a special place, and those of us who live in the area aren't the only ones noticing. Last year, the City of Santa Clara won an All-America City award from the National Civic League, one of only 10 cities to receive the award. We who know the city have always believed that Santa Clara is a special place, but the 54-member delegation representing Santa Clara at the competition last June did an exceptional job of ensuring that the panel of judges understood Santa Clara as well. The delegation, consisting of community groups, government officials, business leaders, and private citizens outlined the ways in which Santa Clara goes above and beyond meeting the requirements for the award, from the symbiotic relationship between the city and industry, to the contributions of Santa Clara's volunteer work force, to the city's commitment towards improving the lives of local youths. These factors, combined with the intangible qualities that only a native can describe, helped the City of Santa Clara bring home this prestigious award.

I believe that the words of the All-America City delegation put it best: "Santa Clara blends the best of a modern, urban metropolis with the comfortable charm of Small Town, USA." Santa Clara is a perfect place to raise a family, pursue a career, and fulfill lifelong dreams. It is the home of California's oldest institution of higher learning—Santa Clara University—and other fine schools like Mission College and the Santa Clara, Wilcox, and Wilson High Schools. The weather is beautiful, and the best that California has to offer is right around every corner. I am proud to represent this city as a Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in honoring the history and celebrating the achievements of Santa Clara, California, on the occasion of its 150th anniversary. The city is an example for all others, and I look forward to being a part of its bright future.

MEDICARE MODERNIZATION AND
PRESCRIPTION DRUG ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. LYNN N. RIVERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my disappointment with H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002. I am very concerned about the burden many seniors bear in paying for their prescription drugs, and I support adding prescription drug coverage as part of the Medicare benefit. However, this sham bill will not help seniors, and it particularly fails senior women in Michigan.

Too many seniors have to choose between paying for food or medicine. Medicare made a promise of better health to America's seniors. It's time to make good on that promise and provide prescription drugs as part of the entitlement. I know what it's like to go without health insurance—I did it when my children were small and our jobs didn't provide it. It's terrifying and it forces families to make excruciating choices.

Unfortunately, H.R. 4954 is no answer to the problem of seniors' lack of drug coverage. The bill relies on private insurance companies to supply the drug benefit rather than the Medicare program itself, despite the fact that the insurance industry has already explained that such policies are not viable and that it is unlikely many companies will offer drug benefit policies. What we have learned from the attempt to push Medicare patients into HMOs in order to cut down costs should have been instructive. Many HMOs have found the Medicare+Choice reimbursement rates to be too low and have stopped taking and treating Medicare+Choice patients. Many of my constituents have been forced to return to Medicare fee-for-service because their HMOs have left the state or now refuse Medicare+Choice patients. Private drug coverage seems even less likely to be successful.

In addition, the proposal fails to provide any coverage to beneficiaries who spend between $2,000 and $3,700 annually on prescription drugs, leaving a substantial portion of seniors with no drug coverage. It is unfair to exclude this group of seniors from coverage solely because their expenditure levels lie in a particular range.

In addition, the bill provides no guaranteed drug benefit, no guaranteed premium, no consistency for seniors in different regions of the country, and no measures to address rapid increases in the costs of prescription drugs. To propose such a benefit knowing it will be ineffective is highly misleading.

I take the struggles of seniors to afford essential drugs too seriously to support a bill that provides rhetoric without real assistance. It is unfortunate that we will not have the chance to debate and vote on a bill that would truly address seniors' needs, such as the Medicare Rx Drug Benefit and Discount Act. The Democratic plan lowers drug prices and covers ALL seniors under Medicare. This plan is also voluntary—if seniors have prescription coverage they can keep it. Under the Democratic plan, seniors will have a deductible of $25 a month, and their expenses are capped at $2,000 per year. There is absolutely no gap in coverage. This is by far the better plan for Michigan's seniors.

I hope I will have the opportunity to vote for an effective and comprehensive Medicare drug benefit in the future. In the meantime, I will oppose this bill and other proposals that provide ineffective or inadequate drug assistance to seniors.

MEDICARE MODERNIZATION AND
PRESCRIPTION DRUG ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in qualified support of H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act. I urge my colleagues to carefully consider this issue before making a final decision.

Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of the explosion in costs for prescription drugs in recent years. This phenomenon has in part been linked to the rapid proliferation of the number of new drugs that have become available in the past decade. We are currently enjoying a period of revolutionary advances in the fields of medicine and medical technology. Yet at the same time, a significant portion of our elderly population is unable to benefit from these new advances, due to the high costs that are associated with them. This is ironic, when one realizes that senior citizens are the primary group that these new advances are targeting.

One fact that has become increasingly apparent is that Medicare is woefully inadequate in meeting the medical needs of today's senior citizens. When Medicare was created in 1965, outpatient prescription drugs were simply not a major component of health care. For this reason, Medicare did not provide coverage for self-administered medicine.

Today's health care environment is vastly different from that of 1965. The majority of care is now provided in an outpatient setting, and dozens of new prescription drugs enter the market every year to treat the common ailments of the elderly, including cancer, heart disease, arthritis and osteoporosis.

But while the health care environment has made remarkable progress since 1965, Medicare has stood in place. Consequently, along with most of my colleagues, I have heard from constituents who are now facing the dilemma of paying for these expensive new drugs while living on a fixed income. The story of the individual who is forced to choose between food and medicine is no exaggeration. It is an all too common occurrence across the country. The high cost of prescription drugs has become a threat to the retirement security of our Nation's senior citizens.

It is for this reason that I am pleased to learn that both the Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce Committees have completed their work on a proposal to provide prescription drug coverage for Medicare beneficiaries. What concerns me, however, is the process by which this measure was brought to the full House for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the decision to add prescription drug coverage will result in the largest change to the Medicare program since its creation. This is not something that should be done lightly or in haste, or in response to an arbitrarily imposed political deadline. Given that, I have serious reservations about bringing such major policy-changing legislation to the floor for final passage less than three weeks after it was introduced.

With that said, I would like to comment on the positive points of the bill as well as highlight some of my specific concerns with the legislation.

In my view, any proposal to offer prescription drug coverage under Medicare needs to contain the following characteristics: be voluntary, have universal eligibility under Medicare, contain stop-loss protections to guard against catastrophic expenses, offer choices in the type of coverage provided, and remain a good value over time.

The proposal outlined in H.R. 4954 clearly meets these requirements. In fact, it is an improvement over the first attempt by Congress to deal with this issue back in 2000. It contains a lower premium, lower catastrophic protection threshold, greater savings for the average senior, and higher subsidies for low-income individuals and couples.

H.R. 4954 establishes a comprehensive, permanent prescription drug benefit for those eligible under Medicare. Specifically, the measure provides $310 billion over ten years for a voluntary plan with the following standard benefits: an annual $250 deductible; for the first $251–$1,000 spent on prescription drugs, the senior pays 20 percent; for the next $1,001–$2,000 spent on prescription drugs, the senior pays 50 percent; it provides 100 percent coverage for every out of pocket dollar spent over $3700; it contains a premium of around $33 per month.

This measure avoids a one-size-fits-all government imposed solution by offering senior citizens a choice in the types of plans in which to enroll. In doing this, the government will guarantee that at least two plans will be available in every area of the country. Moreover, the proposal fully funds all costs for those enrollees below 150% of the poverty rate, and partially funds the costs of those up to 175% of the poverty rate. Those seniors will be responsible for a $2 copayment on generic and preferred drugs, and a $5 copayment on non-preferred drugs.

Participation in the plan will be purely voluntary. However, to encourage healthy seniors to enroll, there is a cumulative penalty for those who elect not to opt into the program when they are first eligible to do so. An important exception to this, however, are those seniors already enrolled in a continuing coverage plan, whether through their employer or through an employee retirement plan.

This is an important component that was not included in the measure passed in 2000. Its inclusion should prevent the danger of adverse selection, the condition whereby most seniors in good health avoid signing up for a plan, leaving the majority of enrollees coming from the sickest segment of the population. If this were to occur, the premiums and deductibles would have to be far higher than presently outlined.

Moreover, by covering part or all of the costs of those with incomes up to 175% of the poverty level, the measure further reduces the danger from adverse selection. In the final analysis, the legislation strives to ensure that there would be an adequate base of healthy seniors to offset the portion in greatest need of the benefit.

As I noted, I do have some reservations about certain aspects of this bill. My chief concern is that this legislation does not adequately address the matter of those drug companies which are raising the prices on their products annually at rates three to ten times the rate of inflation.

While it is true that this measure exempts the new plan from the Medicaid "best prices requirement," whereby any savings achieved through this plan would need to be extended to Medicaid as well, I am unsure whether this in itself is enough to deter the drug companies from trying to take advantage of the perceived windfall that they might see in the Federal Government assuming a large portion of the costs of drugs used by senior citizens.

We also need to be cognizant of the viability of private insurers underwriting plans in areas where it is not profitable for them to do so. Recent experience with Medicare + Choice plans in my district have borne out this concern. In such cases, the government would step in as the "insurer of last resort," assuming a share of the risk as well as subsidizing the cost of offering service in a rural area. My chief concern with this is that it has the potential to become a costly venture for the government, where the private insurers deliberately hold out in order to secure a greater level of government funding.

In spite of these reservations, I firmly believe that this legislation is an important first step in providing a benefit to our senior citizens which is long overdue. The prescription drugs situation will not change on its own in the future. The pharmaceutical companies have demonstrated scant interest in holding the levels of their annual price increases in line with inflation. Rather, while we will continue to see a flood of new revolutionary products hitting the market, this will be accompanied by price increases that put these products out of reach of their intended audience.

I am not calling for price controls. I believe in the free market, and in market capitalism. However, since the last time the House visited this issue, the drug companies have ignored the invisible hand in favor of the cash cow. Drug marketers, like any other entrepreneur, have the right to make a profit, but they are not entitled to do so on the back of the American taxpayer. If the government is going to subsidize a portion of the drug costs borne by seniors, the manufacturers need to be placed on notice that this will not be an opportunity for them to raid the Federal treasury in order to pad their bottom line.

This bill is the first step towards meeting a long overdue need. For that reason, despite my stated reservations, I intend to give it my support. It is my hope that my concerns will be addressed in a future House-Senate conference on this issue.

Finally, this legislation provides $40 billion in badly needed adjustments and improvements to the Medicare Part B system. These include, but are not limited to: repeal of the 15% reimbursement cut for home health care providers, which was scheduled to go into effect in October 2002, increased payments to sole community hospitals, which serve rural areas, increased Medicare payment adjustment rates for physicians, reduced paperwork burdens for all providers, and stabilization for the Medicare + Choice system, which has bled out recently.

Mr. Speaker, this issue is too serious for party politics, and, as I stated at the outset, I urge my colleagues to give it their careful and thoughtful consideration. Our seniors and Medicare health care providers have waited long enough for relief. It is past time for the Congress to act.

MEDICARE MODERNIZATION AND PRESCRIPTION DRUG ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. CYNTHIA A. MCKINNEY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 27, 2002

Ms. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of a strong and comprehensive prescription drug benefit for all Americans. As the prices for prescription drugs have risen at twice as the inflation rate, this issue is of the utmost importance to Americans in need of prescription drugs.

Unfortunately, in the House there is only one prescription drug coverage proposal that will truly serve America's seniors and medically dependent populations. The Democrat prescription drug plan is the only proposal that is under Medicare, that gives consumers choice, that has no gap in coverage, that has legitimate drug cost controls, and that will truly assist American's with the exorbitantly rising costs of prescription drugs.

The health of our nation depends on a strong drug proposal such as this.

The Republican's bill would not provide the American people with an assured, reliable or substantive prescription drug benefit.

The Republican bill would cover less than 25 percent of Medicare beneficiaries drug costs, leaving millions of Americans with much of the high drug costs they now face.

The Republican bill includes a "hole" in the middle, where there is no coverage for drug costs between $2000 and $5600. Perhaps the other side didn't do their research, as nearly half of all seniors have drug costs over $2000, and would receive no coverage under the Republican plan for part of the year.

Where is the benefit of this drug plan? Isn't the point of a prescription drug benefit to alleviate costs? Well, the Republican plan will hardly alleviate costs. Nor will it insure that a plan exists for all Americans.

The Republican bill would rely on private insurance companies to provide a yet-to-exist prescription drug-only plan. This proposal includes no guarantee for stable coverage by private insurance companies but merely suggests what plans private firms may offer. Under this plan, costs of the plans may vary, and seniors on fixed incomes will have less opportunity to plan for their drug expenditures and personal budgets.

As for consumer choice, the Republican proposal stops well short of providing any choices. Under the Republican plan, if a drug is not on a formulary, then it is not covered, and even when a drug is on the formulary, this bill permits private insurance not to cover it.

The Republican plan does not let people choose their own pharmacies, and instead creates private networks for drug delivery, increasing the time, trouble and travel seniors, caregivers and the disabled must go through to obtain necessary medication.

Finally, the people that this program should most benefit—America's low-income senior population—are left out in the cold. In the Republican plan, low-income seniors will be required to pay up to $3600 out-of-pocket expenses per year to cover the "hole" in coverage, would have weak protections from high medicine copayments, and worse, could face denial of medicine if they are unable to cover the co-pay.

The Democrat bill is not deficient in these ways.

The Democrat plan has no hole in the coverage, and would not stick seniors with the $3600 potential bill that the Republican plan would.

The Democrat plan limits out-of-pocket costs to just $2000 per year—as much as 47 percent less than the limit under the Republican plan.

The Democrat plan gives consumers choice, allowing them the freedom to use the pharmacy of choice, instead of the restrictive "private network" limitations of the Republican plan.

Nor does the Democrat plan limit the access to specific medicines, and instead pays some coverage for all drugs, regardless if they are on the formulary or not. The Democrat plan would not steer, limit or channel American's to specific drugs as the Republican plan would.

And perhaps most importantly, the Democrat plan has a method for controlling the actual costs for drugs. It is the dramatic increase in prescription drugs that has brought us to this juncture, and the Democrat plan would enable the Health and Human Services Secretary to negotiate prices on behalf of all Americans, thereby saving American consumers, taxpayers, and the government millions in drug costs. Under the Republican plan, there is no collective effort towards cost controls, and realistically, there will be no control of spiraling drug costs.

Mr. Speaker, I am not alone in my opposition to the Republican bill and my support for a strong and true prescription drug benefit. The National Association of Chain Drug Stores, the AFL-CIO, the Medical Group Management Association, the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers, Families USA, the National Council on Aging, and perhaps most importantly, the American Association of Retired Persons all either oppose the Republican plan, or endorse the Democrat prescription drug plan.

America's senior community—what has been called "America's Greatest Generation"—deserves no less than a substantive and strong prescription drug benefit bill. I urge my colleagues not to fall for the smoke and mirrors, and to realize that the Republican plan will not provide the relief and benefit that is needed to combat the rising costs of prescription drugs. Our seniors do not deserve limited choices on drugs and pharmacies, and should not be made to shoulder the high costs of the Republican plan.

Don't be duped America—there is only one bill that works for America, only one bill that will provide Americans affordable access to drugs, and that is the Democrat prescription drug bill.

MEDICARE MODERNIZATION AND
PRESCRIPTION DRUG ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday June 27, 2002

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4954 because it provides prescription drugs for all seniors as an entitlement under Medicare. Equally important, it prepares Medicare to deliver state-of-the-art health care to our seniors in the decades to come. Without passage of this bill, Medicare will continue to deny seniors the care they need and will continue to force the diversion of critical care hours from patients to paper work. Seniors would continue to be held hostage to an antiquated benefit structure while the rest of America benefits from advances in medicine, technology, and best practices.

First, in the area of prescription drugs, this bill captures deep discounts on drug prices, and then further reduces the cost of drugs to seniors through direct subsidies of 50 to 80%—up to $2000 of costs. Two-thirds of seniors use less than $2000 in prescription drugs a year, so this bill will provide them with tremendous relief. For low-income seniors—up to 150% of the federal poverty level (in 2005, $15,065 for individuals and $19,392 for couples)—drug costs will be paid 100 percent up to $2000 a year (this includes premiums, copays, and the deductible). I want to stress that because twice as many women as men have low incomes in their elder years, this is a tremendous boon to women's health and does what Americans want: helps those most who need the most help!

The bill also provides catastrophic protections to all. It assures that no senior need fear that cancer or another dread disease will consume their life savings and leave them destitute.

You've all been hearing from pharmacists. This bill recognizes the expertise of pharmacists more specifically and constructively than any legislation ever has. It requires that drug plans establish medication therapy management programs for patients with chronic health conditions. Pharmacists must be paid adequately to provide their services. Pharmacists must be involved in developing formularies.

And access to local pharmacies is encouraged, not discouraged. To encourage face-to-face visits, all drug plans must provide convenient access to a "bricks and mortar" pharmacy in their network, as defined by Medicare; all drug plans must offer a point-of-service option that allows beneficiaries to go to any pharmacy they desire (for an additional charge); and no mail-order only plans are permitted.

Second, this bill provides better access to preventive health care by offering an annual physical on entry into Medicare, cholesterol screenings, and new choices in Medigap plans that have no co-payment for preventive care. In addition, the bill revitalizes Medicare+Choice plans that have the flexibility to cover far more preventive services than traditional Medicare, from simple, useful annual physicals to disease management programs.

Third, by strengthening the Medicare+Choice plans so that they can once again grow, this bill prepares Medicare to meet the growing challenge of helping seniors manage chronic illness—to dramatically improve their health and quality of life and manage their health care costs. As the majority of our seniors have multiple chronic illnesses and the M+C plans alone have the technology to offer disease management, this alternative must be available to seniors nationwide. Acute care coverage is simply no longer enough.

Fourth, passage of this bill will reduce medication errors that are causing injury and death, because it requires adoption of computerized prescription ordering that will flag drug interactions and provide health care professionals better quality data to improve clinical care.

Fifth, it will enable Medicare to compensate provider more realistically and fairly. Without action, Medicare will continue to follow the path of Medicaid, undermining both the quality of our health care system and access to services by underpaying providers and driving them out of serving our seniors.

Last, this bill will enable Medicare services to be delivered more efficiently and cost-effectively. At long last, in fact for the first time in Medicare's history, this bill will radically reform the bureaucracy that has grown substantially as our laws and payment structures have exploded in number and complexity. In fact, the Medicare bureaucracy is in crisis.

Medicare is governed by over 125,000 pages of regulations—more than the IRS regulations for the entire tax system. The error rate in carriers answering basic questions from physicians was 85%, dwarfing the problems at IRS. This problem is so great that it threatens to force small providers out of Medicare, be they physician practices, small visiting nurse providers, small nursing homes, or small hospitals. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to understand the impact of such a consequence on rural America or our urban neighborhoods.

So while the words "regulatory reform" don't have the power over seniors' attention that "prescription drugs" have, in the long run they are equally important.

This is a good, solid, balanced bill. It modernizes Medicare to meet the future. It provides prescription drugs as an entitlement to all seniors under Medicare. It provides total benefits to those on Medicaid and—with states—will provide such total coverage to seniors under 175% of the poverty level, 44% of the population over 65. And for all others, this bill provides deep discounts, generous subsidies, and the peace of mind of catastrophic protection against high-cost drugs.

CONGRATULATING CORPORAL TOM
PENUEL AND AGENT FIRST CLASS DREW AYDELOTTE FOR HEROISM IN RESCUING THREE BOATERS FROM DROWNING

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise today to congratulate two employees of the Delaware Fish and Wildlife Division for their heroic rescue on Sunday, June 30, 2002 of three boaters whose boat sunk in the Delaware Bay. Corporal Tom Penuel and Agent First Class Drew Aydelotte rescued Richard and Beth Owens and their friend, Beth Mariani, who were stranded in Delaware Bay for an hour after their boat sunk.

Mr. and Mrs. Owens and Ms. Mariani had been returning in a 17-foot Grady White boat from a fishing trip and stopped to check two crab pots a half-mile from Kitts Hummock. At that time, a wave crashed over the bow and filled up a live-bait well. Within 30 seconds, the boat sunk to the bottom of the Delaware Bay. Through quick thinking they were able to radio for help before the boat was lost. The Fish and Wildlife officers were dispatched from Bowers Beach 15 minutes later. This quick action was essential because as the boaters started to paddle toward shore on a boat seat, the seat became waterlogged and also sunk. Corporal Penuel and Agent First Class Aydelotte found them 1 hour later floating in the Delaware Bay a half-mile offshore. These two officers deserve our utmost gratitude and respect for their courageous efforts. Mr. and Mrs. Owens and Ms. Mariani also deserve recognition for their quick thinking and tremendous courage in surviving this tragic event. I wish them a full and speedy recovery.

Corporal Tom Penuel and Agent First Class Drew Aydelotte of the Delaware Fish and Wildlife Division serve as role models of dedication for all officials, not only in Delaware, but throughout the country. I commend them for their immense bravery in executing their lifesaving training.

TRIBUTE TO DR. WILLIAM F.
GUNN, JR.

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my fellow South Carolinian, Dr. William F. Gunn, Jr. Dr. Gunn is a graduate of Morehouse College, where he earned a Bachelors degree in Physical Education. He then continued his educational quest for knowledge at Indiana University receiving a Masters in Physical Education, and later a Doctorate in Education Administration at the University of South Carolina.

Dr. Gunn began his South Carolina teaching experience at Benedict College in Columbia in 1964, where he remained until 1999, when he retired as Professor of Health, Physical Education and Recreation and the Chair of the Health, Physical Education and Recreation Department. While at Benedict his commitment to the school extended out of the classroom onto the athletic field as coach of the tennis, cross-country, and soccer teams throughout the years.

Dr. Gunn is also a member of the American Alliance of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, the American Association of University Professors, Phi Delta Kappa, the Association for the Study of Classical African Civilizations, and the South Carolina Parks Recreation Association. Dr. Gunn is also a member of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. He has also served as Chairman of the Saint Luke's Center Community Council, the Ethnic Minorities Committee for South Carolina Association of Health, Physical Education and dance, and the South Carolina Governor's Council on Physical Fitness from 1984–1987. Additionally, he has served on the United Black Fund of Midlands Board of Directors, and on the Richland County Board of the Tuberculosis Association.

Dr. Gunn's many accomplishments include being recipient of a United Negro College Fund Study Grant, 1972; University Year Academic Grant, 1976, Who's Who in the South and Southwest, 1976–1977, named Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity "Man of the Year" for South Carolina by the Ethnic Minorities Committee, 1985; and the recipient of a ten, fifteen, twenty, and thirty year awards for excellence in teaching from Benedict College.

Throughout his career, Dr. Gunn has also written and published numerous papers and books on community health related projects, the Health profession, and African American Education/Group Leadership. Some of his more notable publications include the Hip-Hop Culture: A Suggested Leisure Counseling Model for Young Clients," 1998; "Leisure and Spiritual Well-Being: Vital for Maximizing Human Potential," 1999; and "Healing the Body and Mind Through Cosmic Rhythms in Music and Dance," 2002.

Mr. Speaker. I ask you and my colleagues to join me today in honoring Dr. William F. Gunn, Jr., a man whose contributions to his community and the educational system will leave lasting impressions on the numerous lives he has touched. I wish him continued success and Godspeed!

IN RECOGNITION OF THE EFFORTS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR IN WEST AFRICA

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform you and our colleagues about the progress that has been made toward ending a shameful practice of child slavery. Just one year ago on June 28th, the House of Representatives voted 291–115 to set aside funding within the Food and Drug Administration to develop a labeling program for products made with cocoa. The label was intended to distinguish between cocoa products made with child slave labor and those that were not.

As you may recall, last summer we all became aware of this problem through media reports, such as those in the Knight-Ridder Newspapers, that told the stories of children being kidnapped from their home countries, such as Mali, and then sold into slavery in the Ivory Coast. The stories were horrifying. Children as young as 9 years of age are being forced to work without pay, live in squalor, and fear for their physical safety.

Last year, the House of Representatives resoundingly said "This is not acceptable." Chocolate is one of our most beloved treats, but it doesn't taste as sweet with the bitterness of child slavery in its mix.

Since that day last year much has happened. I am pleased with and proud of the enormous progress that has been made toward ending this terrible situation. First, let me congratulate the chocolate industry for so quickly deciding to tackle this problem head on. The industry joined a number of non-governmental organizations in signing an agreement, now known as the "Harkin-Engel Protocol," which set up a framework for dealing with the problem of child slavery in the cocoa fields. The protocol is a serious commitment by the stakeholders to create an historic effort to end child slavery in this industry.

This effort is not just the result of the United States Congress though. Our colleagues in the parliament of Great Britain have also been working on this issue. On May 20, 2002 the House of Commons held what we would call a special order on the specific issue of child slavery in the cocoa fields of West Africa. During the debate, the Honorable Tony Colman of Putney quoted his constituent who is an expert on the problems of child trafficking and slavery, Professor Kevin Bales, as saying "The Protocol . . . is a very good thing. It is the first time that an industry has taken social, moral and economic responsibility for their entire product chain. The Anti-Slavery movement has been seeking such an agreement for 160 years."

Throughout the past year, the world's cocoa producers and users have met and signed onto agreements that commit everyone to ending this practice. For example, on November 30, 2001 a wide array of organizations from around the globe signed a joint statement regarding their efforts toward eliminating child slave labor in the cocoa fields. The list of organizations is very impressive: the Association of the Chocolate, Biscuit, and Confectionary Industries of the European Union; the Chocolate Manufacturers Association of the USA; the Confectionary Manufacturers Association of Canada; the Cocoa Association of London and the Federation for Cocoa Commerce; the Cocoa Merchants Association of America; the European Cocoa Association; the International Office of Cocoa, Chocolate, and Confectionary; the World Cocoa Foundation; the Child Labor Coalition; Free The Slaves; the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers Associations; the National Consumers League; and the Government of the Ivory Coast. The joint statement recognized the "urgent need to identify and eliminate child labour in violation of the International Labour Organization (ILO) Convention 182 with respect to the growing and processing of cocoa beans and their derivative products."

Furthermore, in January of this year the Government of the Ivory Coast ratified two important international labor agreements governing child labor—Conventions 138 and 182 of the International Labor Organization. By becoming signatories to these conventions, the Government of the Ivory Coast took a huge step forward toward implementing responsible labor standards for children within its own borders. In part, because of this step, the Bush Administration in May 2002 granted the Ivory Coast eligibility status under the African Growth and Opportunity Act.

Finally, last week the efforts of dozens of organizations and hundreds of people culminated in the creation of an international foundation that will "oversee and sustain efforts to eliminate abusive child labor practices in the growing of cocoa." In future years, the foundation, with assistance from the governments of the world, will put in place "credible standards of public certification that cocoa beans have been grown without any of the worst forms of child labor."

These are not easy problems to remedy. Many of these children do not speak French, the main language of the Ivory Coast. Many parents willingly let them go, believing their children will be learning a trade as part of an apprenticeship. Many children are orphaned. How we deal with these children on an individual basis will be difficult. Repatriating the children, reunifying the families, finding alternatives for orphaned and abandoned children all must happen. It will take hard work. It will not happen overnight. But we must try and we must succeed.

In declaring our own independence and throwing off the shackles of tyranny, our forefathers wrote "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." Never once in the history of our great nation have we ever believed that these rights were reserved to the people of the United States. In fact at the core of our beliefs is that all people everywhere have the unalienable right to liberty. The problem of child slavery in West Africa is as much the responsibility of the governments there as it is our own.

Today, I am pleased and proud to report that we here in Congress are a part of the movement to put an end to one of the most egregious ills in the world today—child slavery.

TRIBUTE TO MR. KONRAD K.
DANNENBERG

HON. ROBERT E. (BUD) CRAMER, JR.

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a great member of the North Alabama community, Mr. Konrad K. Dannenberg.

On August 6th, Mr. Dannenberg will celebrate his 90th birthday. Throughout his ninety years, Mr. Dannenberg has been a leader in our nation's space program, retiring from Marshall Space Flight Center in 1973 as Deputy Director of Program Development's Mission and Payload Planning Office. Today, Mount Hope Elementary School in Decatur, Alabama is honoring Mr. Dannenberg for his service to their school, the North Alabama community, and the nation.

Konrad Dannenberg, born in Weissenfels, Germany, worked with Wernher von Braun in Peenemunde, Germany and came to the United States after World War II under "Project Paperclip." He later helped develop and produce the Redstone and Jupiter missile systems for the Army Ballistic Missile Agency at Redstone Arsenal. In 1960, he joined NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center as Deputy Manager of the Saturn program, where he received the NASA Exceptional Service Medal.

Mr. Dannenberg is a Fellow of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics and was past president of the Alabama/Mississippi Chapter. He was the recipient of the 1960 DURAND Lectureship and the 1995 Hermann Oberth Award. Additionally, the NASA Alumni League, the Hermann Oberth Society of Germany, and the L-5 Society (now the National Space Society) have the benefit of Mr. Dannenberg's membership. In 1992, the Alabama Space and Rocket Center created a scholarship in his name to allow one student to attend a Space Academy session.

Mr. Speaker, as you can tell, during Mr. Dannenberg's career, he was a valuable player in the advancement of our space program and was appreciated by co-workers and important organizations throughout the industry. Following his retirement, he has remained a major influence in the North Alabama community and still serves as a consultant for the Alabama Space and Rocket Center in Huntsville. I want to congratulate Mr. Konrad Dannenberg on his 90th birthday and thank him for the important contributions he has made to our community in North Alabama and the entire United States.

H.R. 4623—CHILD OBSCENITY AND PORNOGRAPHY PREVENTION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 25, 2002

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the bill I cosponsored, H.R. 4623, the Child Obscenity and Pornography Prevention Act. This bill marks a truly important step forward in protecting our Nation's kids from the scourge of pedophiles and child exploitation.

Troubling headlines involving kids around the country are showing that there is a dark side to the Internet. The very technology that has wired the world, allowing information to flow like never before, also presents new dangers for our children, even in our small, safe hometowns. Parents used to worry about their kids talking to strangers. Now it seems commonplace for them to do so everyday online. I know the Internet helps our children with everything from schoolwork to applying to college to keeping in touch with their friends, but I also recognize that this more frequent contact with strangers exposes children to the dangers of pornographers and other exploitation. Worse yet, the prevalence of virtual child pornography—computer generated images that are indistinguishable from real children and only serve to whet the appetites of pedophiles and would-be molesters—has become more difficult to prevent as a result of a recent court decision.

In April, the Supreme Court, in Ashcroft v. The Free Speech Coalition, struck down as unconstitutional portions of the Child Pornography Prevention Act (Pub. L. 104-208) that made it illegal to create, distribute or possess "virtual" child pornography. In its opinion striking down the provisions of the law, however, the court ruled that extending the reach of child pornography laws to computer-generated and other images involving no real children was "overbroad and unconstitutional" and that the law would prohibit visual depictions, such as movies, art or medical manuals, that have redeeming social value.

The Court's decision left our children vulnerable, so I am pleased to support this legislation to strengthen the laws to go after those who would bring harm to our children. By carefully crafting this bill to narrowly define the terms and scope of the law, we have addressed the concerns raised by the Court and will provide lasting protection for our children against would-be pedophiles and exploiters. Because of the many important freedoms our constitution guarantees, it is a delicate exercise to prohibit even the most vile forms of expression. I believe we have achieved a balance in this bill of clearly defining that which we seek to ban, while protecting the freedom of speech that the constitution intends, and I am confident that this legislation will stand up to challenge.

It is imperative that Congress act swiftly to restore the prohibitions in law that recognize this horrible use of technology for what it is: yet another way for pedophiles and molesters to exploit children. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation.

HONORING THE WETLANDS INSTITUTE ON ITS 30TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the fine work of the Wetlands Institute of Stone Harbor, New Jersey on its 30th Anniversary. As an important haven for wildlife habitation and education, the Wetlands Institute deserves to be recognized and applauded.

Opened in 1972 by its founder, Herbert Mills, the Wetlands Institute has a clear mission to promote the appreciation and understanding of the vital role wetlands and coastal ecosystems play in the survival of life on this planet. This not for profit organization reaches out and educates the community by providing a fun learning experience for families, school groups and vacationers of all ages. Each year the Institute works hard to hosts thousands of visitors, supplying them with unforgettable views of countless species of birds, salt water aquaria and beautiful gardens.

The ambitious and honorable goals of the Wetland Institute include teaching the value of wetlands and coastal systems, sponsoring important research of these ecosystems and encouraging the stewardship of these habitats worldwide. Since 1972, this organization has involved students in several of its conservation projects. Many of these projects have garnered national attention, such as the diamond back terrapin research reported by ABC and National Geographic, as well as photographs of a horseshoe crab spawning census published in LIFE magazine in 1999.

Through tirelessly striving to educate the public on the critical need for wetlands conservation, the Wetlands Institute has demonstrated a strong commitment to the community. I wish this valuable organization further success and would like to thank everyone involved for their hard work and dedication.

TRIBUTE TO NATIONAL THERAPEUTIC RECREATION WEEK IN SOUTH CAROLINA

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of "National Therapeutic Recreation Week" in South Carolina as proclaimed by Governor Jim Hodges.

The purpose of this event, which begins today and is celebrated through July 14, is to increase public awareness of therapeutic recreation programs and services, and expand recreational and leisure opportunities for individuals with disabilities. Physical therapists from all over the state met and worked together to eliminate barriers to leisure activities for many with disabilities and educate people in leisure skills and attitudes. These therapists constantly stressed the importance and advantage of having a clear understanding of how involvement in leisure and recreational activities improves physical and psychosocial health, and how recreation can provide individuals with a sense of self-confidence and satisfaction.

The theme for "National Therapeutic Recreation Week" is "Therapeutic Recreation . . . Examine the Possibilities." The theme suited the occasion perfectly, as the aim was to explore a variety of methods used by therapeutic recreation professionals to enhance the quality of life and well being of persons with disabilities.

This year's "National Therapeutic Recreation Week" will hopefully generate more interest and encourage all South Carolinians to recognize the positive benefits of leisure and recreation.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of South Carolinians devoted their time and energy to improve their quality of life, and also the lives of others. Please join me in recognizing the gallant efforts of these individuals, and the wonderful accomplishments they made during "National Therapeutic Recreation Week."

TRIBUTE TO DR. I. MILEY
GONZALEZ

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Dr. I. Miley Gonzalez who has been serving in the capacity of Interim Vice Provost of Research at New Mexico State University. Dr. Gonzalez will be leaving NMSU after an impressive record as an administrator, an academic, and public servant to the community of Las Cruces, the state of New Mexico and our Nation.

Dr. Gonzalez rejoined the university in 2001 after nearly four years as U.S. Under-Secretary of Agriculture for Research, Education and Economics. Before accepting former President Clinton's appointment to the Department of Agriculture in 1997, he served as assistant dean and deputy director of the Cooperative Extension Service from 1994 to 1996, head of the agricultural and extension education department from 1991 to 1994, and director of the college's international programs from 1992 to 1994. He began his professional career as a high school vocational agriculture teacher in 1970.

Prior to Dr. Gonzalez joining the faculty at New Mexico State University he served as a State 4-H Specialist at Pennsylvania State University and participated in Extension Program activities. He taught numerous undergraduate and graduate courses including guest lectures in Spanish. He is a member of several academic and professional organizations, and has published journal articles and instructional materials in Spanish and English. Dr. Gonzalez received a B.S. and an M.S. from the University of Arizona and a Ph.D. from Pennsylvania State University in Agricultural and Extension Education. In 1999 Dr. Gonzalez was one of six people to receive the Outstanding Alumni awards from Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences. The award recognizes outstanding graduates and provides opportunities for interaction among the college's alumni, students and faculty.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Gonzalez has had a prosperous career while at NMSU. During his tenure Dr. Gonzalez was always known for taking time to meet with any student who needed to talk with him. It is often said that if our children are our future, the quality of our schools and their teachers will largely determine the quality of the future that our children will or will not enjoy. Dr. Gonzalez's interest in the well being of his students can be found in the communities throughout New Mexico, the country, as well as in the halls of Congress. Several of those former students, who worked with Dr. Gonzalez in either the academic or extra-curricular environment, have worked or are currently working in my office or in the offices of Representative SKEEN, Senator BINGAMAN, Senator DOMINICI, or members of the President's Cabinet. He has also been named as one of the top 100 Hispanic Leaders in the country.

While serving as Under Secretary of Agriculture, Dr. Gonzalez was known for his strong efforts to forging a closer, more personal link between land-grant and research institutions and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, an agency that we all know provides funding for innovative research into the production of food and fiber, and the preservation of the environment. The Under Secretary of Agriculture for Research, Education, and Economics provides centralized organization and management of the research, education, and economic programs administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. In his role Dr. Gonzalez oversaw the Agricultural Research Service, the Cooperative State Research, Education, and Extension Service, the Economic Research Service and the National Statistics Service.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my best wishes to Dr. I. Miley Gonzalez in his future endeavors. The community of Las Cruces and New Mexico State University will greatly miss Dr. Gonzalez's presence—but the product of his work can be found in the faces of our current and future leaders. I ask that my colleagues in the House join me in honoring the achievements and contributions of this outstanding educator, administrator, public servant and New Mexican.

FEDERAL BILL TO MAKE SUR-VIVOR BENEFITS TO ALL BENEFICIARIES OF SLAIN LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS TAX FREE

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to make benefits received by the beneficiaries (who are not a spouse or child) of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty tax-free. My bill amends the Officer Brian Gibson Tax Free Pension Equity Act that I introduced in 1997 after a District of Columbia police officer was killed in Ward 4, to relieve the spouses and children of law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty from taxation on death benefits. The law now applies to all law enforcement officers in the United States. I wrote the bill after I discovered that officers received disability benefits tax-free while the death benefits of survivors were taxed. I decided to amend my bill after the Mychal Judge Police and Fire Chaplains Public Safety Officers' Benefit Act of 2002, allowing domestic partners to receive Federal death benefits, was enacted and signed by the President last month. That bill was stimulated by September 11th and the discovery that the domestic partners of police and fire officers killed in the Twin Towers tragedy were being denied death benefits.

The bill I introduce today is the logical companion bill to the 9-11 public safety officers bill that is now law because it simply allows the same exemption from taxation that other beneficiaries will now receive. Without this new bill, the very inequity Congress clearly intended to eliminate between the spouses and relatives of slain officers on the one hand and other beneficiaries on the other would be reintroduced. If the death benefits of these beneficiaries of slain officers are tax exempt, it follows that the same benefits to other congressionally recognized beneficiaries should be similarly exempt. I believe that this remaining difference was not deliberate, but resulted from the fact that my earlier bill amended the tax code and was not immediately apparent to the authors of the recent bill.

I ask all of my colleagues to support this corrective measure.

CELEBRATING THE GRUNION
GAZETTE'S 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to the Grunion Gazette for providing Long Beach with an outstanding weekly newspaper for 25 years.

The Grunion, named after Long Beach's famous grunion runs, was founded by Tedi and Pat Cantalupo who began publishing the Grunion out of their home in the Belmont Shore area of Long Beach in 1977. In 1981, the Cantalupos sold the Grunion to Fran and John Blowitz who have built the paper into what it is today—one of the finest weekly newspapers in Southern California.

The Grunion Gazette has provided its readers with a sense of community and cohesiveness through its in-depth reporting on a variety of local topics. It keeps its readers well informed with news and information from city government, business, education, and the community, and provides a calendar of events, wedding announcements, obituaries, health and fitness advice, and a dining guide. Its opinion columns are based on local insights, along with a lively letters to the editor section and the witty commentary of Charlie the dog (aka Jacques Warshauer) in "Charlie's Corner," one of the Gazette's longest running features. All of this is combined with wonderful photos that capture the personality of the area and a website that opens the Gazette to readers around the world.

Fran and John Blowitz can take great pride in all that they have accomplished as owners of the Grunion Gazette, and as owners of the Downtown Gazette edition that they began 17 years ago. But that is not the whole story. Fran and John and their colleagues have also provided exceptional volunteer service to our community. They have served on numerous boards and committees and have helped to start such traditions as the Belmont Shore Christmas Parade. They also created the Gazette's Valentines' Date Night that draws thousands of people to the Queen Mary and raises more than $50,000 a year for heart programs at Long Beach hospitals.

I salute Fran and John Blowitz, Associate Publisher and Executive Editor Harry Saltzgaver, Editor Kurt Helin, and all the fine staff and contributors for their commitment to the Grunion Gazette. Congratulations for 25 years of setting the highest standard for what a community newspaper can and should be.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JUNE RENFRO

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to bring to the attention of this House the inspiring accomplishments of June Renfro. June was recently awarded the Rifle (Colorado) Chamber of Commerce's 'Person of the Year' award for her dedication to her community. The selfless love with which she has promoted the betterment of the Rifle area has been a moving reminder of the affection many in my state have for their communities.

June Renfro was born on a ranch just north-east of Nunn, Colorado. She spent 18 years in the upholstery business in Greeley while actively pursuing a career with Home Interiors and Gifts, an at-home interior decorating service. However, when Mrs. Renfro's husband tragically passed away, June decided it was time to escape the cold winters in that area and moved to Rifle in 1997 to spend more time with her daughter Judy.

The joy with which June has embraced her new community later in life has been an inspiration to her new neighbors. At the age of 68 June threw herself wholeheartedly into the Rifle community, utilizing her love of people and inquisitive nature to become Rifle's biggest cheerleader. She became involved with the Chamber of Commerce ambassadors and began taping local business profiles for Rifle's Community Access Channel 13. June did everything in her power to share her talents and infectious spirit with her new neighbors in Rifle.

Mr. Speaker it is my privilege to pay tribute to June Renfro for her contributions to the rifle community. I applaud her receipt of the Rifle Chamber of Commerce's 'Person of the Year' award recognizing her significant achievements for the good of the community. At the age of 73, June's commitment to her neighborhood should be a lesson to all of us that we can continue to affect our communities for the public. For this unwavering dedication, as well as her infectious love of her newfound home, I bring June Renfro's example to the attention of this body of Congress.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO GENE TAYLOR

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor today to pay tribute to a model citizen of the Grand Junction, Colorado community. Gene Taylor has gained the respect and admiration of the community through his company, Gene Taylor's Sporting Goods, and has provided professional and quality service to the city for over forty years. Gene's secret to success is simple; he values the customer and is dedicated to providing quality products in his establishments. He is a pillar of the Grand Junction community and I am honored to bring forth his accomplishments before this body of Congress, and this nation.

As the market for sporting goods and competition for the community's business increased, Gene has managed to stay successful through his hard work and dedication to his community. As an active business and civic member and provider of financial assistance to worthy causes, Gene's stores are covered with banners from local schools thanking him for his help and support to their causes. His latest contribution to the city was the donation of five and one half acres for a new skating rink in Grand Junction, the Charlene Glebler Community Ice Arena. This donation, along with Gene's life-long belief in community service, is one of the many admirable qualities of this man and I am grateful for his service to the area.

As a family friend and admirer of Gene, let me point out that the entire family is involved in the operation and all carry Gene's commitment to excellence in their daily lives. Gene is well known as a loving husband to his wife Beverly, and a devoted father to his six children Roseanne, Duke, Marshall, Amy, Tony, and Jenny.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and satisfaction that I bring the life and accomplishments of Gene Taylor to the attention of this nation today. Gene's success story serves as a model example of hard work and perseverance for a member of the business and civic community and I am honored to represent Gene and his family before this body of Congress. Gene and his family have been well-respected members of the Grand Junction community for many years and I am grateful for their service.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO HENRY H.
CAIRNS, SR.

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 8, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the life and memory of Henry H. Cairns Sr. of San Diego, California. Henry Cairns, known as Hank, honorably devoted his life to defending the freedoms of our nation. He upheld America's liberty and has earned a place amongst our country's leaders. Today we mourn the loss of a courageous father, grandfather, husband, brother, son, and soldier.

Hank moved to Colorado when he was six weeks old, and he spent most of his adolescent and young adult years in Montrose. When he graduated from high school, Hank with the help of his brother opened his own candy store. Hank found his place, honorably serving in our Air Force, and as the Captain of the 852nd Bombardier, 8th Air Force Squadron, Hank upheld liberty and freedom by bravely fighting and living through his detainment at a prisoner of war camp during World War II. Hank served our nation proudly, and after the war he respectfully returned to the United States. Hank has contributed greatly to our country by helping build roads, and runways around neighborhoods, military bases, and cities in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to honor an individual who contributed selflessly to the betterment of our nation, and although we will grieve the loss, we will rejoice over a man of great character and conduct. I express my sincerest condolences to his family and friends, and I salute Aaron Romero before this body of Congress and this nation.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, July 9, 2002 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, July 9, 2002

The House met at 10:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

Washington, DC, July 9, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN BOOZMAN to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to not to exceed 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) for 5 minutes.

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to briefly address the House on an issue, I believe, of importance to 36 million married working couples. This past year the House of Representatives and President Bush had a great accomplishment, that was, that we cut taxes across the board, benefiting every taxpaying American. In fact, over 100 million households have seen their Federal taxes lowered as a result of what we call the Bush tax cut; 3.9 million American families with children no longer pay Federal income taxes as a result of the Bush tax cut. We eliminate the marriage tax penalty; we wipe out the death tax; we make it easier to save for retirement as well as for education. Unfortunately, because of a quirk or an arcane rule over in the other body, the Bush tax cut ended up being a temporary measure. That means if we fail to make permanent the Bush tax cut, taxes will go back up for over 100 million American taxpaying households.

I want to draw attention to one of the provisions, a provision which many of us have worked on over the last several years that is a fundamental issue of fairness and something we call the marriage tax penalty. Unfortunately, prior to the Bush tax cut being signed into law, 36 million married working couples paid higher taxes just because they are married. They paid higher taxes because when both husband and wife are in the workforce and you combine your income and you file jointly, it pushes you into a higher tax bracket and that creates the marriage tax penalty. If we allow the Bush tax cut to expire, 36 million married couples will pay about $1,700 more in higher taxes as a result of the marriage penalty being restored. That is a $42 billion tax increase.

Let me introduce a couple from the district that I represent in the south suburbs of Chicago, from Joliet, Illinois, Jose and Magdalena Castillo, their son Eduardo, their daughter Carolina. They live in Joliet, Illinois, they are hard-working Americans, and they suffered the marriage tax penalty prior to the Bush tax cut being signed into law. The marriage tax penalty for Jose and Magdalena Castillo was about $1,150. There are some people here in Washington who think that we should allow the marriage tax penalty provision to expire because they want to spend that money here in Washington. For the, $1,150 is chump change here in Washington; but for a couple such as Jose and Magdalena Castillo of Joliet, Illinois, a hard-working couple that benefits from the marriage tax relief in the Bush tax cut, $1,150, that is several months' worth of child care for Eduardo and Carolina while they are at work. That is several months' worth of car payments. It is a significant amount of money they could set aside in their IRA or their education savings account for retirement or for their children's education.

We need to make permanent the marriage tax penalty relief that this House passed this past year and was signed into law by President Bush. I am proud to say that just a few weeks ago the House of Representatives passed overwhelmingly, every House Republican voted "yes" and I also want to note that 60 Democrats broke with their leadership and joined with the Republicans in voting to make permanent the marriage tax relief provisions that we passed and were signed into law this past year. As a result of making it permanent, we will see protection for Jose and Magdalena Castillo. We will also see that Jose and Magdalena Castillo and 36 million couples like them will no longer pay the marriage tax penalty ever. That is why we need to make it permanent.

Again, during this year as we debate whether or not to make permanent the elimination of the marriage tax penalty, there will be those on the other side who argue they need to spend the money here in Washington, that $1,150 for Jose and Magdalena Castillo does not really matter because it is really not a lot of money. The bottom line is it is a fairness issue. Is it right or is it wrong that under our Tax Code that a couple who choose to get married should suffer higher taxes? I think it is wrong that we would want to punish society's most basic institution.

The bottom line is, this House of Representatives has voted overwhelmingly to make permanent the elimination of the marriage tax penalty. My hope is that the Senate and the House will join together, that we will have bipartisan support in both the House and Senate, and that we will send to the President this year legislation to permanently eliminate the marriage tax penalty. Because if we do not, couples such as Jose and Magdalena Castillo of Joliet, Illinois, will see a $1,150 tax increase just because they are married if we fail to make permanent the elimination of the marriage tax penalty. And if you add up all the couples across America who benefit from the elimination of the marriage tax penalty, 36 million married working couples, it would be a $42 billion tax increase overall.

Let us protect Jose and Magdalena Castillo. Let us permanently eliminate the marriage tax penalty. Let us work together and let us get it done this year.

CORPORATE FRAUD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, later today President Bush is scheduled to give a major speech, it is billed, on corporate responsibility. His advisers have told us he is going to get tough on corporate wrongdoers. He is even calling for jail time for those who defraud shareholders and who violate Federal law. In addition, the President's advisers let slip recently he is reading a biography of Theodore Roosevelt who had a well-deserved reputation for battling corporate greed. All of this must mean that the President is very serious about ending this season of executive greed and corporate misgovernance in America.

But to use the bully pulpit like Teddy Roosevelt did, you have got to have credibility on the issues at hand. For many of us, the President's credibility on corporate issues has been a problem since his vast, but inexplicable, success as a businessman was revealed a number of years ago. As recently as yesterday, the President and the White House have sought to offer new explanations for why he did not report in a timely manner his 1990 sale of $850,000 worth of stock in a Texas-based energy company just weeks before its value plummeted.

It sounds a lot like Enron. It sounds a lot like WorldCom. It sounds a lot like Adelphia. It sounds a lot like these corporate scams that we have all been so critical of. Previously, the President said he thought regulators lost the documents. He pointed at the regulators. Then last week the White House said it was a mix-up by the lawyers, the son of the President's lawyers; and then yesterday he gave the most plausible explanation. He said, "I still haven't figured it out completely how I made the $850,000." He has not figured it out.

While there are many decent and honest corporate executives and accountants in this country, those who lack integrity have only been emboldened by the permissive environment created by this administration and by those on the other side of the aisle in congressional leadership who never met a regulation that they liked. Companies like Enron and WorldCom and Arthur Andersen obviously believed they could mislead investors with impunity as long as this President, this friend of corporate America, was in office.

And why would they not? In the middle of the Enron scandal, President Bush, on behalf of his corporate friends, proposed a zero-growth budget for the Securities and Exchange Commission even though the SEC itself complained it was too short-staffed to go after these corporate abuses. President Bush supported a weak pension reform bill in the House even though thousands of employees in Texas and around the country lost their retirements because of fraud and mismanagement by the President's friends and his single major contributor and fundraiser at Enron. And the President endorsed an accounting reform bill in the House that had no teeth since it was strongly supported by his friends in the accounting industry.

Does it sound familiar? President Bush has refused to ask for reauthorization of the Superfund tax which would require corporate polluters, again friends of the President, which would require corporate polluters to pay for cleanup of the messes that they make. Instead, he wants to saddle taxpayers with those cleanup costs. The President joined the prescription drug industry, for whom they had a fundraiser raising literally $3 million from the drug industry itself 2 weeks ago, in supporting and pushing through the House a Medicare prescription drug plan that, first of all, privatizes Medicare, and second undercuts seniors' purchasing power and enables the drug industry, the most profitable industry in America, to continue to sustain its outrageous drug prices.

The President has openly supported the idea of turning the Medicare program over to the health insurance industry, again friends and major contributors of the President, and the Social Security program over to Wall Street, again major friends and political supporters and contributors of the President.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, the list goes on and on and on and on and on. So later today as the country listens with rapt attention to the President's plan for reversing the trend of corporate greed and misdeeds, you will understand if I view this speech with a healthy degree of skepticism.

Civil rights leaders said years ago, "Don't tell me what you believe, tell me what you do and I'll tell you what you believe."

JUVENILE DIABETES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the Chamber's attention to the serious issue of juvenile diabetes which is usually but not always diagnosed in children and remains with them for life. It has stricken over 16 million Americans, and it kills one American every 3 minutes. By the time that my brief remarks are over, two children will be diagnosed with the disease, kids like my constituent Victor Suarez. Diagnosed at age 14, Victor has to administer daily shots of insulin to keep him from falling into a diabetic coma from which there may be no recovery. Victor's friends must keep constant watch of his condition. This is no way for Victor or any child to live, but unfortunately this scene is repeated millions of times every day across our country.

Mr. Speaker, let us work toward finding more funding for research to ensure that Victor and other children will not be forced to suffer with juvenile diabetes. I congratulate the South Florida chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation International as well as its president, Sheldon Anderson, for their sincere commitment to finding a cure for diabetes and its serious complications. Founded in 1991 by a group of dedicated individuals, this south Florida chapter has already contributed over $8 million to diabetes research. Mr. Speaker, I join 274 Members of Congress and 67 Senators who recently signed a letter requesting support for increased juvenile diabetes research funding.

I believe, as do my colleagues, that a cure for juvenile diabetes is just around the bend and that by working together, we can make it a reality.

HONORING THE LIFE OF PETE C. JARAMILLO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor and personal privilege to stand before you to pay tribute to one of our bravest and finest Americans, Pete C. Jaramillo, a loving father and grandfather, devoted son and brother, courageous soldier, loyal civil servant and great human being.

Pete C. Jaramillo of Belen, New Mexico, passed away on April 26, 2002, after a long illness. He will be remembered for his quiet strength, gentle manner, humility, deep compassion, kindness, and his dignity. He will be deeply missed by his family and friends. Mr. Jaramillo was born in Arroyo Colorado (Red Canyon), New Mexico, a small community in the Manzano Mountains. He was the first son and one of nine children born to Aurelia Chavez and Andres Jaramillo. Like many children reared in the 1920s and early 1930s, the Great Depression forced Mr. Jaramillo to grow up quickly. Economic hardships were abundant, and there was always someone's situation that was worse than his. The Depression taught Jaramillo the importance of helping others, and throughout his life he was known to lend a helping hand to those in need.

In 1941, at the age of 17, Mr. Jaramillo joined President Franklin Roosevelt's Civilian Conservation Corps Camp, a New Deal program designed to create jobs and rebuild America's roads and infrastructure. He and his troop of Company 2867, Camp SCS-27-N, maintained New Mexico's treasured forests and streams. As a devoted son and brother, he shared his meager wages with his family.

During World War II, Mr. Jaramillo was called to serve his country. After completing his basic and advanced infantry training at Fort Bliss, Texas, he was deployed to Europe where the Germans had invaded the Allies. On D-Day, June 6, 1944, U.S. servicemen landed on Omaha Beach in France. Jaramillo was among the first wave of servicemen who landed on Omaha Beach. Unlike countless troops, Jaramillo survived the Normandy invasion only to be severely wounded by a hand grenade 6 weeks later. He was hospitalized for 4 months before returning to the U.S.

His near fatal wounds affected him all the days of his life. By the age of 20, Mr. Jaramillo's decorations and citations included the Combat Infantry Badge, the European-African-Middle Eastern Service Badge, the Good Conduct Badge, the Victory Medal, and the Purple Heart, which he received when he was wounded on July 12, 1944. On August 19, 2000, Mr. Jaramillo received the Jubilee Medal of Liberty issued by the Governor of Normandy, publicly recognizing the sacrifice and service of veterans who served in the Normandy invasion between June 6 and August 31, 1944.

"I am very proud to receive this recognition and I am thinking about the men who went to France and never returned," said Jaramillo in his acceptance remarks. Upon his honorable discharge in 1946, Jaramillo returned to his home in New Mexico. In 1947 he married Jennie Vallejos, a friend of his two sisters, Sally and Aurora, and together they raised four daughters and two sons: Ida May, Pete Jr., Maria Rita, Maria Leonella (Nellie), David, and Lynda. He also had four grandchildren: Eddie Jaramillo, Jason Griego, and Billy and Selena Manzanares.

He was a good provider, devoted father, grandfather and son-in-law. Jaramillo served as a surrogate father to numerous nieces and nephews, providing guidance and support. In 1980, Mr. Jaramillo retired after completing 30 years of Federal service. He received many commendations for his outstanding performance and rarely missed a day of work. His last assignment was with Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Mr. Jaramillo enjoyed the simple things in life, his family, the sun upon his face, grape juice, chocolate, a country breakfast and, yes, Sunday drives. An avid reader, he liked to keep up with current events. Above everything, Pete exemplified a life of doing unto others as you would have them do unto you.

May he rest in peace.

SLAVE MEMORIAL IN OCALA, FLORIDA, AND OUR NATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, as many Members did this weekend, I am sure, I spent the Fourth of July back home with the people of the Sixth Congressional District. I had the privilege of joining others in my hometown community at the unveiling of a slave memorial in Ocala, Florida. The local community leaders believed that "Florida could not have existed and grown as it did without the hard work, courage, sacrifice and sometimes genius of black men and women."

For this reason, a monument was erected to honor the lives of the slaves who bear great responsibility for the prosperity we enjoy in the State of Florida. However, this is not only true in Florida; but, Mr. Speaker, I think it is true across this country. Lest this connection continue to go unrecognized, I along with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) introduced the Slave Memorial Act. Both of us and many of our colleagues have long been involved in efforts to heal the legacy of slavery. This is the latest incarnation of our desire to contribute to the healing of our Nation. This bill would authorize the process for establishing a national slave memorial to honor the nameless and forgotten men, women and children who were slaves. It will hopefully enjoy a position of prominence in the shadow of the Lincoln Memorial.

Papa Stewart, a former slave, once said, "I want you to promise me that you're going to tell all the children my story." This is a conjecture, but I believe that what Papa Stewart is asking for is not that the children be told just so that the horrors of slavery could be avoided in the future, but I also believe he was earnestly asking for the recognition of the humanity of these individuals. We need to believe that there is something more meaningful than just our physical being. He is asking that this story, their humanity, be valued and told. In the telling of his story, we communicate our respect, our compassion and sensitivity to it. Papa Stewart's is a story that we are indeed in need of telling and hearing in this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, in this new world that we have entered since September 11, it is becoming easier to remember that evil is an ever present reality. It is now easier to remember that hatred and bigotry are always and everywhere wrong. We gather to remember that the commission of monstrous sin requires not our consent but only our indifference. Of these things many of our ancestors are guilty. We can certainly say of slavery that it was "one more wrong to man and one more insult to God." And as a means of ensuring that we never see the same, we propose a memorial in the shadow of the Lincoln Memorial. We do this as a testament to slavery's "many thousand gone."

Each slave was an individual and a child of God. Not only do they deserve our remembrance, we owe them our respect. The legacy of our Nation includes many people, including those who were victims but chose not to be victimized. As Americans, we naturally understand this universal story of resilience and strength; and with this memorial we have the opportunity to thank the people who so greatly contributed to an American cultural understanding of perseverance and, of course, independence.

Mr. Speaker, it is my earnest desire that a slave memorial will play a part in healing the legacy of slavery. It is said that symbols are the natural speech of the soul, a language older and more universal than the words that we use every day. Hopefully, this memorial will speak in a language more easily understood than simple words. We stand here today to honor the slaves themselves and the men who fought to end their slavery. This discussion cannot stop with the troubles of those who were enslaved, but must continue on to celebrate their deliverance.

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. UDALL) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, it seems like every day we hear a new story of executives who misled their investors and their workers and stole millions of dollars. These executives are called irresponsible. They are accused of mismanagement or unorthodox business practices. But these corporate leaders are not unorthodox. They are criminals, plain and simple. They have stolen more money than any thieves I have ever heard of, and their crimes have real victims. The victims of these corporate crimes are workers like the workers at Enron who just wanted an honest job with a fair expectation of job security. For all their hard work, these workers got 10 minutes to clear out their desks. In some cases they were even denied their severance packages if they refused to sign documents giving up the right to sue Enron for defrauding them.

Defrauding workers and forcing them to give up their legal rights is not irresponsibility; it is a crime. Even workers who never had anything to do with Enron were hurt by the collapse of that company. As Enron declared bankruptcy, public employees in 30 States lost anywhere from $1.5 billion to $10 billion from their pension plans. Stealing money from public employee pension plans is not irresponsibility; it is a crime.

Even those of us who had absolutely nothing to do with the Enrons or WorldComs of the world are hurt by corporate crime. The unethical behavior of executives at WorldCom, which was recently forced to admit it had invented $3.8 billion in earnings, has had a devastating effect on the company's stock price. But the stock market as a whole has also suffered from the lack of confidence created by widespread corporate abuse. Less than 3 percent of all publicly traded companies misstate their earnings, but this small group casts doubt on the statements of other more ethical businesses.

A free market system cannot function if investors do not trust executives; and, therefore, the crimes of WorldCom and Enron are crimes not only against stockholders but against the very system that allowed these companies to flourish. Ask not for whom the bell tolls, corporate America, it tolls for thee. But this talk of corporate crime obscures the real crime that has taken place in this country.

The crime of Enron, like so many other corrupt corporations, is not that they broke the rules; it is that they wrote the rules. On everything from energy regulation to tax policy, Enron and its fellow energy companies got the best laws money can buy. Enron received a $254 million check, courtesy of the American taxpayer, when the Bush administration changed the rules governing the corporate alternative minimum tax. Because with this deficit-laden budget, corporate tax cuts come directly from the Social Security trust fund, this was the legal equivalent to picking the pockets of senior citizens in order to pad the pockets of corporate executives. Enron also was allowed to vet candidates for the chairmanship of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the Nation's number one energy watchdog.

Furthermore, companies like Enron and Haliburton are the intended beneficiaries of policies from the opening of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to the annihilation of the Superfund trust fund, which was supposed to ensure that corporate polluters paid some share of the cost of cleaning up their mess. The Superfund example gives us an especially revealing look at how corporate campaign contributors are treated by their friends in government. If I poisoned hundreds of thousands of my fellow citizens in order to enrich myself and my friends, I would probably go to jail for the rest of my life. If, however, Haliburton spills oil all over a pristine area, ruining the land and making local residents sick, they do not even have to pay to clean it up. The taxpayer gets the bill.

Even after the collapse of Enron and the exposure of billions in fake earnings at WorldCom, this administration and many in Congress are working to protect their corporate patrons from any real accountability. The Oxley accounting bill, which the House passed on April 24, does nothing to protect against corporate abuse and bring back public confidence in corporate governance. In some cases, the bill even makes it more difficult to enforce auditing regulations. In its most glaring failure, this bill leaves the wolf in charge of the henhouse by ensuring that no independent agency has any power to effectively police.

I have full confidence this Congress and this administration can work together to prevent future Enrons and future WorldComs, and I look forward to working with Members on both sides of the aisle to make sure that we have corporate ethical governance in this country.

MEDICARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago a constituent of mine approached me to complain about her Medicare bill. I assumed this would be a typical complaint about either how much she was paying for premiums or how much she paid for services. Boy, was I wrong. Her complaint was worse. She was concerned not about her cost but about how much Medicare was paying for a particular product she uses. As a diabetic, she is required to wear special shoes that need shoe inserts. At one time, the only type of insert available was custom made. However, with the wide use of these products, coupled with advancements in technology, many of these inserts are now available off the shelf which are the ones that she gets for herself.

Looking at her bill, I found that Medicare was paying, on average, $50 a pair for these inserts. This is the insert, a simple Styrofoam insert. The shoes she is required to wear are $134. The inserts for the shoe, over $50 apiece. She is required to pay a portion of that and Medicare reimburses, for three sets of diabetic shoe density inserts, $190. $190 for these inserts. In total, the provider was getting over $50 per pair for simple inserts. If you go to the local pharmacy or grocery store, you will discover that these off-the-shelf orthodontics cost only about $10. Even these inserts, which I purchased at CVS, a local pharmacy, not to do a plug for the pharmacy, but you can get them anywhere you want, they are Dr. Scholl's, these were $16. They look state of the art. They have all kinds of descriptions on them, a strong heel pad.

I am not an orthopedic surgeon; I am not a podiatrist. I am a simple average person who had my own business in Florida, and I know how to comparative shop. I think we all do. But this is outrageous. If Medicare paid that amount for the $16, we would have saved substantially. She would have been thrilled and delighted. That is why she brought it to my attention, because she felt as a senior citizen, talking about Medicare and the need for prescription drugs, that we will never be able to solve the problems inherent in Medicare if we do not get our acts together and start finding ways to prevent these kinds of horrific over-expenditures of the Federal Government.

But why do they do it? Let us ask the basic question. Why did people charge such an outrageous sum of money for these, what I will call, rather inadequate inserts? Because Congress told them to. We wrote into the statute what price should be paid for these products, assuming at the time that the only available insert was custom made. Now that off-the-shelves are available, Medicare is stuck.

In today's Washington Post, there is an article talking about the rising cost of health care and the choices many employers, including the government, will have to make if these skyrocketing costs are not placed under some control. Two weeks ago, Congress began to address this problem when we passed H.R. 4954, the Medicare Modernization and Prescription Drug Act of 2002. However, we need to do more. We need to look at the entire Medicare program from top to bottom and allow the marketplace, not Congress, to determine prices. The only way we can save both the Medicare program and our health care system in general is to stay out of the business of setting prices and establishing controls.

I look forward to working with Chairman THOMAS and others as we continue to debate this very important issue. The Republicans, when we proposed prescription drug coverage, we recognized that within Medicare, for its solvency, we needed to do more and should be able to do more to provide for these benefits for our constituents, our seniors, and do so without robbing and causing taxes to have to be increased on existing working Americans. If we continue down this path and allow this kind of ripoff to take place, if we allow an insert to be over $60 a pair paid for by the Federal Government, then we will be walking away from our responsibilities to our seniors, we will bankrupt Medicare, and we will cause significant disparity for seniors.

We believe we have an answer, but we believe we have to act now. There is no way anyone can explain to me and give me comfort about these charges and make me believe this is a legitimate expense of the Federal Government. Yes, she needs insoles; but at $16 versus about $50-plus, I think we can find a way to not only make her walk comfortably but save the Federal Government a ton of money. Therein lies the opportunity to provide a prescription drug coverage for our seniors who need it.

CORPORATE GOVERNANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I sat in with the Financial Services Committee at our WorldCom hearing yesterday; and if you heard a sense of outrage from the Members on both sides of the aisle, it mirrored the outrage of the American public who have seen their savings go down the drain while there has been so much malfeasance in the accounting and auditing practices in our corporate boardrooms. It is very disturbing because this has created a substantial lack of confidence in our capital markets system. It is clear that we have a very systemic problem we have got to fix. It seems to me that this is a time for action that Teddy Roosevelt would have taken. Teddy Roosevelt did not say, Speak loudly and carry a small twig. He put it a different way. So today when the President addresses the Nation and Wall Street about how we are going to work ourselves out of this terrible situation, I hope that he will be guided much more by Teddy Roosevelt and much less by Calvin Coolidge. What I mean by that is we need him not just to speak loudly, which I am very confident he will do, we need him to act with great fervor. We need action, not just language.

Today I would suggest that a Teddy Roosevelt approach to this problem would involve six separate actions, not just speeches. We hope that the President will join us in the Democratic Party who propose these actions.

First, I think Teddy Roosevelt would be getting America a new director of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The present director of that organization, Mr. Harvey Pitt, is a man of great intelligence; but America needs more than that. America needs an agent of change at the helm of the Securities and Exchange Commission. We cannot have a leader of the Securities and Exchange Commission that we have to drag kicking and screaming every time that we need to do some modest, commonsense regulation of the industries that Mr. Pitt used to represent and work for. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pitt has drug his feet time and time again to take even the most modest efforts to deal with these systemic problems. We hope that we have new leadership at that helm.

Second, I am convinced Teddy Roosevelt would impose the sternest criminal sanctions on the corporate people and accountants who failed to abide by their responsibilities, who consciously, intentionally defraud investors. I am confident the President will call for jail time for these scofflaws. But we need more than simply maximum times in jail. We need minimum times in jail. Here is the reason I say that. We need mandatory jail times for these flimflam artists. The reason is that all too often in white collar crime, these white collar criminals go up to the judge and says, he was a good man, he belonged to a great country club, he gave money to charity and they do not see the inside of a penitentiary. If you sell 50 grams of crack cocaine, you get 10 years mandatory, no ifs, ands, or buts. It ought to be the same rule for these people who have destroyed the retirement incomes of thousands of Americans. The President should do no less than mandatory minimum jail times.

Third, it is not just that we have people breaking the rules; we do not have the right rules in our accountancy and auditing system. We need new rules. So the third thing we should do is we need to divorce the consulting aspects of accounting from the auditing aspects of accounting.

Mr. Speaker, I have sat through, I think now, 12 hearings about these disasters. The one thing they almost all have in common is the people who are supposed to be auditing these corporations were also making millions of dollars providing the same corporations they are supposed to be riding herd on, providing them consulting advice. We found that this creates just too many disincentives for rigorous auditing. At a minimum, at an absolute minimum, we should require the auditing committee to agree to those multiple contracts before they allow people to provide those two services. This is a systemic problem, and it is something we have got to fix.

Fourth, we need an independent public accountancy board. It is important that it be independent. It needs to be independent of the organizations that it regulates. We need that quickly.

Five, we need CEOs to have to certify their financial records so that they are personally responsible.

And, sixth, and this is very important, Mr. Speaker, we need stock analyst independence, independent from the investment banking side.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident Teddy Roosevelt would take all six of these steps today. I hope the President will do so. America deserves no less.

PRESIDENT TO ADDRESS NATION ON CORPORATE GOVERNANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 23, 2002, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, we are waiting now and in about 15 minutes the President will give a speech where he is expected to address the corporate meltdown, where millions of Americans have been defrauded of their stock holdings and their 401(k)s, thousands have lost their jobs and a few have profited mightily. The President says he wants to get tough. We are going to hear a lot of talk about watchdogs and teeth and enforcement and maybe putting some people in jail. Maybe. Probably not.

But the real question is, is he serious? Until recently, of course, the President and Vice President CHENEY had been touting their corporate experience and ties. Mr. Lay of Enron fame was called Ken Boy and was given unlimited access to the White House and the Oval Office. He is persona non grata now, perhaps. But are they serious? Unfortunately, the early indications are the President is not serious, but he is covering his political butt. That is because he is saying the SEC, which of course until recently he had stiffed in his budget, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the official watchdog of the United States of America over corporate malfeasance, which has been dramatically underfunded, yet the President proposed in his budget to not increase their funding, in fact give them a zero budget increase. Now he is going to propose a budget increase. That is good; so maybe he is serious.

But then he goes on to say the head of the SEC is doing a great job. This guy's name is Harvey Pitt. Harvey Pitt represented most of the firms and the individuals who are now taking the fifth amendment before Congress. In fact, in a recent action before the Securities and Exchange Commission, the toothless watchdog that we have on guard, headed by Mr. Pitt, appointed by Mr. Bush, who Mr. Bush says he has utmost confidence in, found, this is amazing, actually found that a firm, Ernst & Young, had violated its duty to remain independent from companies it audits. That is good.

But guess what? The finding which would ultimately in fact have involved a substantial fine was thrown out by an administrative law judge. Why? Because the facts were not right? No. Because they had not committed the malfeasance? No. Because Mr. Pitt is so conflicted that he could not vote and also Cynthia Glassman, the other SEC commissioner, was not allowed to vote, either, because they both had intimate ties with this firm. They had represented them, worked with them; and when they leave their so-called public service, they will represent them again as $500- or $1,000-an-hour lawyers.

So this company got off the hook because only one commissioner, the one appointed by President Clinton, could vote. The judge said, There were three of you there and only one of you voted. I'm throwing out the judgment against Ernst & Young. This is the watchdog that the President has ultimate confidence in, a man who is so conflicted from his previous work, who represented many of these same securities firms, many of these same accounting firms, many of these same corporations and CEOs, he is so conflicted that when he was asked recently was it not a conflict of interest for him to meet with some officials from Xerox while there was an ongoing investigation, this is Harvey Pitt, our watchdog, our public servant. He said, If I recuse myself from meeting with everybody who I had represented or had personal relationships with, I wouldn't be able to meet with anybody. That is the man in whom President Bush is supposedly going to invest more authority to investigate and prosecute, a man who just came from representing these people and as soon as he is done with his public service will return to representing these same miscreants.

This certainly does not give me a great deal of confidence in the independent role and the aggressive role of the Securities and Exchange Commission; and it does not give me a great deal of confidence that the President is really serious about what he is doing here. Certainly there is a lot of political butt to be covered. Yes, he is doing a good job of that. But will he get serious? If he does not announce that he is removing Mr. Pitt, that he is going to have people who do not have conflicts of interest in charge of investigating and prosecuting these companies, people who could actually vote to prosecute, who would not have to recuse themselves because of those conflicts, then we will know he is serious. In 10 minutes we will hear.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until noon today.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 18 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess until noon.

□ 1200

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON) at noon.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Lord our God, protect us and guide us as a free people who turn to You in faith and prayer and who strive to grow in virtue and integrity. At this time of cultural, economic and social change, be with the Members of the House of Representatives in all their undertakings today. May the recent celebration of the birth of this Nation 226 years ago renew all hearts in the same spirit that guided the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the Framers of this country's Constitution. May their goals and purposes still serve and guide every informed decision here today and across this Nation.

"Let us, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity." Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Nevada (Mr. GIBBONS) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. GIBBONS led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure; which was read and, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION AND INFRASTRUCTURE,

Washington, DC, June 27, 2002.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House, Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Enclosed are copies of resolutions adopted on June 26, 2002 by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. Copies of the resolutions are being transmitted to the Department of the Army.

Sincerely,

DON YOUNG,
Chairman.

Enclosures.

House Document 669, 76th Congress, 3rd Session, and other pertinent reports, to determine whether modifications of the recommendations contained therein are advisable in the interest of environmental restoration and protection, aquatic habitat restoration, regional trails and greenways, public access, water quality, recreation and related purposes along the Mississippi River and its tributaries and particular reference to that area in Madison and St. Clair Counties, Illinois, and St. Louis City, St. Louis County, and St. Charles County, Missouri.

Adopted: June 26, 2002.

Attest: Don Young, Chairman.

There was no objection.

RECOGNIZING AMERICAN GOLD STAR MOTHERS

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the American Gold Star Mothers and congratulate them for their 65th national convention. I want to send special thanks to my constituent, Georgianna Carter-Krell, the former national president, and Barbara Calfee, the national treasurer, whose tireless efforts made this convention a great success.

The American Gold Star Mothers is an organization of women who have lost a son or daughter while in the service of our country. They are compassionate, loyal women who channel their grief and sorrow into healing others through their many hours of volunteer service for veterans and their families.

I commend them for their hard work and dedication in helping those who were injured in the service of our country and also for their sincere efforts to instill and inspire the ideals of patriotism and love throughout our Nation.

PATRIOTIC PRAYERS IN SANTA ANA

(Ms. SANCHEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commend Pastor Bob Orr and the congregation of the First Baptist Church in Santa Ana for their proud display of patriotism on July 7, this past Sunday. During their second annual picnic and barbecue to honor those who served in the military, those in attendance could be seen clutching their Bibles as they sang patriotic songs like the Battle Hymn of the Republic under eight United States flags that once had lain on the coffins of veterans of war.

What a wonderful display of national pride, Americans from different races and different cultures coming together at a church to celebrate the lives of those who fought to defend our country's freedom. The congregation of First Baptist has demonstrated to all Americans that regardless of religious beliefs, we are all united under one flag, representing one Nation under God, indivisible.

U.S. FORCES BOMB IRAQ AGAIN

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, since the Gulf War, our pilots have been patrolling the skies over Iraq, trying to keep Saddam Hussein contained and in check. On June 26 of this year, Iraqi forces fired an antiaircraft missile at our aircraft. We responded, of course, by shooting back and defending ourselves against this aggression.

Yet Saddam Hussein is much more than an enemy that regularly tries to kill or capture American pilots. The country Iraq is currently a significant part of the American economy by providing us with oil.

In the first quarter of this year, we bought $1.2 billion of Iraqi oil, according to the Energy Information Administration. Where do my colleagues think this money goes? Mr. Speaker, it goes straight to Saddam Hussein's government, straight to the $25,000 reward checks he gives to families of each Palestinian suicide bomber.

We import nearly a million barrels a day from this madman. More than 10 percent of our oil imports come from Iraq, and yet Saddam Hussein still would like nothing more than a downed American pilot to show the world.

It is time our energy policy got in line with our foreign policy. It is time to reduce our dependency on foreign oil. Mr. Speaker, if it is worth fighting for over there, it is worth exploring for here at home.

HONESTY AND INTEGRITY IN AMERICAN CORPORATIONS

(Mr. MENENDEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, people who rob and steal other people's money while sitting behind a desk in a corner office, wearing an expensive business suit, are no better than the common thief, burglar or pickpocket on the street, and they may be worse because those who committed fraud at Enron, WorldCom and Arthur Andersen have had every advantage and every opportunity our great Nation has to offer.

Instead of giving something back to the Nation that has given them so much, they stole, they robbed, they cheated, they defrauded. They hurt workers and families who depend on every paycheck and every investment they made. They hurt seniors whose retirement savings were devalued.

Mr. Speaker, free enterprise is part of our genius but so is honesty and integrity. So is honesty and integrity. It is time we start demanding those qualities from those who run and manage our businesses and from those who are supposed to enforce our laws, and for those who break that trust, the penalty should be equal to the enormous damage they cause.

GIVE PILOTS A FIGHTING CHANCE

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on September 11 terrorists took over commercial flights by using only box cutters. No one would have known their evil intent, but now we have an opportunity to stop and deter future hijackings and acts of terror by arming our pilots.

The gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure chairman, and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA), the Subcommittee on Aviation chairman, offered a common sense solution for preventing the passengers and crews of commercial flights from becoming sitting ducks. Their bill, H.R. 4635, Arming Pilots Against Terrorism, would begin a 2-year test program allowing a percentage of the current pilot workforce to be armed and trained for proper use.

At least half of the Nation's commercial airline pilots have military or law enforcement backgrounds and are highly skilled and trained in self-defense. We trust pilots daily with our lives operating high-tech aircraft. I know we can depend on their competence as armed protection.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on H.R. 4635 and give our pilots a fighting chance to protect innocent civilians from murderous terrorists.

NOT MUCH SOLACE IN PRESIDENT'S WORDS

(Mr. DEFAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the President has spoken and I do not take, unfortunately, much solace in what he had to say. He talked about a lot of voluntary reforms on Wall Street. He talked about the fact he has been waiting for months for a little bit of money from Congress for the SEC. Yet he denied his own toothless watchdog, Harvey Pitt, the head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, $91 million just 3 months ago.

The President is born again into wanting to do something politically about the problem we have, but not really deal with the problems on Wall Street because that will offend some very powerful and very wealthy people, no matter how ill-gotten their gains.

The fox is still guarding the hen-house and the President did not offer us anything today except political rhetoric.

HONORING CORPORAL KENNETH JOHNSON

(Mr. BROWN of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a heavy heart to honor Corporal Kenneth Johnson of the South Carolina Highway Patrol. Last Sunday morning, around 2:15 a.m., Corporal Johnson was murdered in cold blood at a traffic checkpoint at College Park Road near Goose Creek.

Mr. Johnson, a 12-year veteran of the highway patrol, leaves behind a wife, a 13-year-old son and a 7-year-old daughter.

Kenneth Johnson was one of our Nation's best, risking his life day in and day out to preserve the peace and freedom that we often take for granted. He was a true American hero who gave his life for his country.

Our prayers go out to his wife and children. They have lost a strong husband and father. In the last few days, the citizens of Moncks Corner have come together to take care of them in their time of greatest need, but they will need our help for longer than a few weeks.

We all need to reach out to Kenneth Johnson's fellow law enforcement officers. It has been a tough week for them as well. I hope we come away from this tragedy with a renewed sense of the debt we owe to our law enforcement officers and with a renewed intolerance for the cruelty of someone who would end a life for one of South Carolina's best citizens.

APPOINT WATCHDOG INSTEAD OF LAPDOG

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, every day the people we represent receive devastating news from the results of the action of the Enrons, the Tycos, the Arthur Andersens, the WorldComs and the Merck Pharmaceuticals.

They receive devastating news as employees when they are laid off, as pensioners when they see that their retirement is no longer secure, and as shareholders as they see that their net worth has gone down. It has gone down because of slipshod accounting, illegal activities, bias portfolio management, hundreds of millions of dollars in insider unsecured loans and tens of millions of dollars in golden parachutes for the economic elite in the corner offices. Nothing for the employees, nothing for the pensioners, and nothing for the shareholders.

□ 1215

Mr. President, this is not going to be solved by having the markets voluntarily clean themselves up. You appointed Harvey Pitt. You appointed Harvey Pitt as the lapdog of the industry, as a defender of the industry. What America needs is a watchdog. You are not going to be able to take a lapdog and turn him into a watchdog.

Mr. Pitt should leave this office. You should appoint somebody who can get to the bottom of these scandals and protect America's shareholders, America's pensioners, and America's employees in the future from these kinds of scandals.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). The Chair would remind the Members that remarks in debate should be directed to the Chair and not to other individuals in the second person.

DO NOT TURN DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE INTO THE WAR DEPARTMENT

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, national defense is one of the most important and one of the most legitimate functions of our national government. Serving in our Nation's Armed Forces is certainly one of the most honorable ways a person can serve this country. And because of our pride in being considered a peace-loving Nation, we changed the name of the War Department many years ago to the Department of Defense.

Now, however, most of our leaders in both parties, people for whom I have great respect, seem to be eager to go to war against Iraq. We should not be eager to go to war against any country, and especially against one that has not attacked us or even threatened to attack us. We cannot use the terrible tragedies of September 11 to justify it, because Saudi Arabia had much more to do with those events than Iraq did, and we still consider Saudi Arabia to be one of our allies.

We are already spending mega billions to increase our security. We do not need to go against our military traditions and spend billions more on an unnecessary war unless Iraq threatens to, or does, take some type of action against us. We do not need to turn the Department of Defense into the War Department once again.

SEC NEEDS FULL-TIME, NOT PART-TIME CHAIRMAN

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the President's talking about this devastating loss to Americans' retirement incomes, but if he really wants to be a reformer with results, he has to get a new sheriff in town. He has to get a new chair of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

We know Mr. Pitt is a man of intelligence, but we cannot put up with an SEC Chair we have to drag kicking and screaming every time we want to have some modest, common-sense regulation of his former clients.

We need action and we need it now. The only way we are going to have it is if the President asks for Harvey Pitt's resignation so we can get someone unfettered by previous work for this industry that he attempts to regulate. Mr. Pitt has had to recuse himself, I think about 25 times, because people before him have been his former clients.

We need a full-time, not a part-time SEC director. We urge the President to take action rather than just give speeches and to get us a new sheriff in town at the SEC.

PRESIDENT SOUNDS CLARION, MORAL CALL FOR CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, President Calvin Coolidge said the business of America is business. But Coolidge was a moralist, and he meant not that America is dependent on the almighty dollar but that the business of America is dependent on the integrity and the character of the people who lead our enterprise.

Today, our President sounded a clarion, moral call for corporate responsibility. Corporate and accounting malfeasance at companies like Enron, WorldCom, Merck, and Arthur Andersen all argue that this need for reform is urgent. As the President said, business leaders who defraud shareholders should go to jail. As the President said, business leaders must accept personal responsibility for financial statements and be barred from serving on corporate boards when they, even unintentionally, fail in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, the reality is, the 1990s was not a decade where people in power were held accountable for their self-serving decisions. Let us follow President George W. Bush's clarion call and make this decade a time again when we recognize in the law and in reform and in regulation that righteousness exalts a nation.

CORPORATE FRAUD

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today, President Bush gave a major speech on corporate responsibility. He tells us he is going to get tough on those who have misled and defrauded shareholders in violation of Federal law.

This could be a tough sell, considering the President's own record as a businessman. Yesterday, the President was still trying to explain why, in violation of Federal law, he failed to report his 1990 sale of $850,000 worth of stock in a Texas-based energy company just weeks before its value plummeted. Earlier he said he thought the regulators lost the documents. Last week, the White House owned up and blamed it on Mr. Bush's lawyers. Yesterday, President Bush gave maybe the most plausible explanation. He said, I still haven't figured it out completely. He hasn't figured out how he made $850,000 in a probably illegal stock sale.

As the President spoke in New York today, I thought of the words of a civil rights leader who said, "Don't tell me what you believe. Show me what you do; I will tell you what you believe."

CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

(Mr. UDALL of Colorado asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, it seems that every week we hear another story of a corporation cooking the books, too often with the help of accountants who are supposed to be protecting investors and the public. And while they cook the books, they burn the American people and the economy suffers.

Some of those involved say, these are just technical details, or they act like the piano player in the bordello, saying they did not know what was going on upstairs. But it is becoming clear that many knew all about it and it is nothing but plain, old-fashioned fraud.

Congress needs to clean up this mess by passing stronger corporate accounting and pension protection legislation than the version the House passed this spring. Talk is cheap, but the cost to the public has been high, and will be higher yet if we do not act.

Corporate CEOs need to be accountable with criminal and financial penalties when they falsify financial reports or mislead the public about company stock. CEOs should not be allowed to sell company stock in an executive plan during a lockdown period when the employees are prohibited from doing so.

We need to set up a strong, independent watchdog over the accounting industry. For markets to work fairly, the American public needs the truth. Strong legislation is crucial to restoring the truth and trust in corporate America and faith in our markets.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER
PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken at the end of legislative business today.

AIRPORT STREAMLINING
APPROVAL PROCESS ACT OF 2002

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4481) to amend title 49, United States Code, relating to airport project streamlining, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4481

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) airports play a major role in interstate and foreign commerce;

(2) congestion and delays at our Nation's major airports have a significant negative impact on our Nation's economy;

(3) airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports are a national priority and should be constructed on an expedited basis;

(4) airport capacity enhancement projects must include an environmental review process that provides local citizenry an opportunity for consideration of and appropriate action to address environmental concerns; and

(5) the Federal Aviation Administration, airport authorities, communities, and other Federal, State, and local government agencies must work together to develop a plan, set and honor milestones and deadlines, and work to protect the environment while sustaining the economic vitality that will result from the continued growth of aviation.

SEC. 3. PROMOTION OF NEW RUNWAYS.

Section 40104 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(c) AIRPORT CAPACITY ENHANCEMENT PROJECTS AT CONGESTED AIRPORTS.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Administrator shall take action to encourage the construction of airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports as those terms are defined in section 47179."

SEC. 4. AIRPORT PROJECT STREAMLINING.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 47153 the following:

"SUBCHAPTER III—AIRPORT PROJECT
STREAMLINING

"§ 47171. DOT as lead agency

"(a) AIRPORT PROJECT REVIEW PROCESS.—The Secretary of Transportation shall develop and implement a coordinated review process for airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports.

"(b) COORDINATED REVIEWS.—The coordinated review process under this section shall provide that all environmental reviews, analyses, opinions, permits, licenses, and approvals that must be issued or made by a Federal agency or airport sponsor for an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport will be conducted concurrently, to the maximum extent practicable, and completed within a time period established by the Secretary, in cooperation with the agencies identified under subsection (c) with respect to the project.

"(c) IDENTIFICATION OF JURISDICTIONAL AGENCIES.—With respect to each airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport, the Secretary shall identify, as soon as practicable, all Federal and State agencies that may have jurisdiction over environmental-related matters that may be affected by the project or may be required by law to conduct an environmental-related review or analysis of the project or determine whether to issue an environmental-related permit, license, or approval for the project.

"(d) STATE AUTHORITY.—If a coordinated review process is being implemented under this section by the Secretary with respect to a project at an airport within the boundaries of a State, the State, consistent with State law, may choose to participate in such process and provide that all State agencies that have jurisdiction over environmental-related matters that may be affected by the project or may be required by law to conduct an environmental-related review or analysis of the project or determine whether to issue an environmental-related permit, license, or approval for the project, be subject to the process.

"(e) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—The coordinated review process developed under this section may be incorporated into a memorandum of understanding for a project between the Secretary and the heads of other Federal and State agencies identified under subsection (c) with respect to the project and the airport sponsor.

"(f) EFFECT OF FAILURE TO MEET DEADLINE.—

"(1) NOTIFICATION OF CONGRESS AND CEQ.—If the Secretary determines that a Federal agency, State agency, or airport sponsor that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to a project has not met a deadline established under subsection (b) for the project, the Secretary shall notify, within 30 days of the date of such determination, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, the Council on Environmental Quality, and the agency or sponsor involved about the failure to meet the deadline.

"(2) AGENCY REPORT.—Not later than 30 days after date of receipt of a notice under paragraph (1), the agency or sponsor involved shall submit a report to the Secretary, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and the Council on Environmental Quality explaining why the agency or sponsor did not meet the deadline and what actions it intends to take to complete or issue the required review, analysis, opinion, license, or approval.

“(g) PURPOSE AND NEED.—For any environmental review, analysis, opinion, permit, license, or approval that must be issued or made by a Federal or State agency that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport and that requires an analysis of purpose and need for the project, the agency, notwithstanding any other provision of law, shall be bound by the project purpose and need as defined by the Secretary.

“(h) ALTERNATIVES ANALYSIS.—The Secretary shall determine the reasonable alternatives to an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport. Any other Federal or State agency that is participating in a coordinated review process under this section with respect to the project shall consider only those alternatives to the project that the Secretary has determined are reasonable.

“(i) SOLICITATION AND CONSIDERATION OF COMMENTS.—In applying subsections (g) and (h), the Secretary shall solicit and consider comments from interested persons and governmental entities.

“§ 47172. Categorical exclusions

“Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary of Transportation shall develop and publish a list of categorical exclusions from the requirement that an environmental assessment or an environmental impact statement be prepared under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) for projects at airports.

“§ 47173. Access restrictions to ease construction

“At the request of an airport sponsor for a congested airport, the Secretary of Transportation may approve a restriction on use of a runway to be constructed at the airport to minimize potentially significant adverse noise impacts from the runway only if the Secretary determines that imposition of the restriction—

“(1) is necessary to mitigate those impacts and expedite construction of the runway;

“(2) is the most appropriate and a cost-effective measure to mitigate those impacts, taking into consideration any environmental tradeoffs associated with the restriction; and

“(3) would not adversely affect service to small communities, adversely affect safety or efficiency of the national airspace system, unjustly discriminate against any class of user of the airport, or impose an undue burden on interstate or foreign commerce.

“§ 47174. Airport revenue to pay for mitigation

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 47107(b), section 47133, or any other provision of this title, the Secretary of Transportation may allow an airport sponsor carrying out an airport capacity enhancement project at a congested airport to make payments, out of revenues generated at the airport (including local taxes on aviation fuel), for measures to mitigate the environmental impacts of the project if the Secretary finds that—

“(1) the mitigation measures are included as part of, or are consistent with, the preferred alternative for the project in the documentation prepared pursuant to the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.);

“(2) the use of such revenues will provide a significant incentive for, or remove an impediment to, approval of the project by a State or local government; and

“(3) the cost of the mitigation measures is reasonable in relation to the mitigation that will be achieved.

“(b) MITIGATION OF AIRCRAFT NOISE.—Mitigation measures described in subsection (a) may include the insulation of residential buildings and buildings used primarily for educational or medical purposes to mitigate the effects of aircraft noise and the improvement of such buildings as required for the insulation of the buildings under local building codes.

“§ 47175. Airport funding of FAA staff

“(a) ACCEPTANCE OF SPONSOR-PROVIDED FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration may accept funds from an airport sponsor, including funds provided to the sponsor under section 47114(c), to hire additional staff or obtain the services of consultants in order to facilitate the timely processing, review, and completion of environmental activities associated with an airport development project.

“(b) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISION.—Instead of payment from an airport sponsor from funds apportioned to the sponsor under section 47114, the Administrator, with agreement of the sponsor, may transfer funds that would otherwise be apportioned to the sponsor under section 47114 to the account used by the Administrator for activities described in subsection (a).

“(c) RECEIPTS CREDITED AS OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS.—Notwithstanding section 3302 of title 31, any funds accepted under this section, except funds transferred pursuant to subsection (b)—

“(1) shall be credited as offsetting collections to the account that finances the activities and services for which the funds are accepted;

“(2) shall be available for expenditure only to pay the costs of activities and services for which the funds are accepted; and

“(3) shall remain available until expended.

“(d) MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT.—No funds may be accepted pursuant to subsection (a), or transferred pursuant to subsection (b), in any fiscal year in which the Federal Aviation Administration does not allocate at least the amount it expended in fiscal year 2002, excluding amounts accepted pursuant to section 337 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (115 Stat. 862), for the activities described in subsection (a).

“§ 47176. Authorization of appropriations

“In addition to the amounts authorized to be appropriated under section 106(k), there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation, out of the Airport and Airway Trust Fund established under section 9502 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 9502), $2,100,000 for fiscal year 2003 and $4,200,000 for each fiscal year thereafter to facilitate the timely processing, review, and completion of environmental activities associated with airport capacity enhancement projects at congested airports.

“§ 47177. Judicial review

“(a) FILING AND VENUE.—A person disclosing a substantial interest in an order issued by the Secretary of Transportation or the head of any other Federal agency under this part or a person or agency relying on any determination made under this part may apply for review of the order by filing a petition for review in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit or in the court of appeals of the United States for the circuit in which the person resides or has its principal place of business.

The petition must be filed not later than 60 days after the order is issued. The court may allow the petition to be filed after the 60th day only if there are reasonable grounds for not filing by the 60th day.

“(b) JUDICIAL PROCEDURES.—When a petition is filed under subsection (a) of this section, the clerk of the court immediately shall send a copy of the petition to the Secretary or the head of any other Federal agency involved. The Secretary or the head of such other agency shall file with the court a record of any proceeding in which the order was issued.

“(c) AUTHORITY OF COURT.—When the petition is sent to the Secretary or the head of any other Federal agency involved, the court has exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, amend, modify, or set aside any part of the order and may order the Secretary or the head of such other agency to conduct further proceedings. After reasonable notice to the Secretary or the head of such other agency, the court may grant interim relief by staying the order or taking other appropriate action when good cause for its action exists. Findings of fact by the Secretary or the head of such other agency are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

“(d) REQUIREMENT FOR PRIOR OBJECTION.—In reviewing an order of the Secretary or the head of any other Federal agency under this section, the court may consider an objection to the action of the Secretary or the head of such other agency only if the objection was made in the proceeding conducted by the Secretary or the head of such other agency or if there was a reasonable ground for not making the objection in the proceeding.

“(e) SUPREME COURT REVIEW.—A decision by a court under this section may be reviewed only by the Supreme Court under section 1254 of title 28.

“(f) ORDER DEFINED.—In this section, the term ‘order’ includes a record of decision or a finding of no significant impact.

“§ 47178. Definitions

“In this subchapter, the following definitions apply:

“(1) AIRPORT SPONSOR.—The term ‘airport sponsor’ has the meaning given the term ‘sponsor’ under section 47102.

“(2) CONGESTED AIRPORT.—The term ‘congested airport’ means an airport that accounted for at least 1 percent of all delayed aircraft operations in the United States in the most recent year for which such data is available and an airport listed in table 1 of the Federal Aviation Administration’s Airport Capacity Benchmark Report 2001.

“(3) AIRPORT CAPACITY ENHANCEMENT PROJECT.—The term ‘airport capacity enhancement project’ means—

“(A) a project for construction or extension of a runway, including any land acquisition, taxiway, or safety area associated with the runway or runway extension; and

“(B) such other airport development projects as the Secretary may designate as facilitating a reduction in air traffic congestion and delays.”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 471 of such title is amended by adding at the end the following:

“SUBCHAPTER III.—AIRPORT PROJECT STREAMLINING

“47171. DOT as lead agency.

“47172. Categorical exclusions.

“47173. Access restrictions to ease construction.

“47174. Airport revenue to pay for mitigation.

“47175. Airport funding of FAA staff.

"47176. Authorization of appropriations.
 "47177. Judicial review.

SEC. 5. GOVERNOR'S CERTIFICATE.

Section 47106(c) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

- (1) in paragraph (1)—
- (A) by inserting "and" after the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (A)(ii);
- (B) by striking subparagraph (B); and
- (C) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B);
- (2) in paragraph (2)(A) by striking "stage 2" and inserting "stage 3";
- (3) by striking paragraph (4); and
- (4) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

SEC. 6. CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AIRPORT CAPACITY PROJECTS.

Section 47504(c)(2) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

- (1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (C);
- (2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting "; and"; and
- (3) by adding at the end the following:

"(E) to an airport operator of a congested airport (as defined in section 47178) and a unit of local government referred to in paragraph (1)(A) or (1)(B) of this subsection to carry out a project to mitigate noise in the area surrounding the airport if the project is included as a commitment in a record of decision of the Federal Aviation Administration for an airport capacity enhancement project (as defined in section 47178) even if that airport has not met the requirements of part 150 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations."

SEC. 7. LIMITATIONS.

Nothing in this Act, including any amendment made by this Act, shall preempt or interfere with—

- (1) any practice of seeking public comment; and
- (2) any power, jurisdiction, or authority of a State agency or an airport sponsor has with respect to carrying out an airport capacity enhancement project.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA).

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, over the past 20 years, air travel in the United States has grown faster than any other mode of transportation. More and more, our citizens rely on the speed and the convenience of flights in aviation to improve our daily lives. Unfortunately, we, as a nation, have failed to provide the airport capacity necessary to keep pace with the great demand that we have seen grow over the past decades.

Last year, the Federal Aviation Administration released a report which revealed for the first time how very far we have fallen behind in meeting our aviation infrastructure needs. According to the report, our Nation's 31 busiest airports are now at or above capacity for some portion of the day.

Insufficient airport runway capacity has led to chronic and worsening congestion. Last summer, and before the events of September 11, one out of every four commercial flights experienced a significant delay or cancellation. As air travelers begin to regain confidence in our system, we have already seen the return of traffic in aviation commercial passenger service to pre-September 11 levels.

It is not a question of when, Mr. Speaker, or even if; it is a question of how soon gridlock will return to our busiest airports, and we are already seeing that occur. Airports around the Nation must now begin to address the capacity needs that we have seen in the past immediately. We have a little bit of a break here again in regaining our passenger service that we had pre-September 11, so it gives us an opportunity to plan, to prepare, and to meet the aviation infrastructure needs of the future.

Unfortunately, standing in the way of moving forward with building our Nation's aviation infrastructure is a very cumbersome Federal review process. That process is full of duplication, it is full of conflicting mandates, and one that, in fact, lacks coordination, lacks accountability, and sometimes wastes years and years of precious time when communities and States are trying to work with the Federal Government to build the aviation infrastructure that our economy and our areas need so desperately.

The legislation before us today, H.R. 4481, I believe, will significantly improve the Federal review process for critical airport capacity projects that are under consideration at 31 of our Nation's busiest airports. While this legislation will cut through red tape, it will not in any way diminish existing environmental laws or in any way limit local input or control over these critical projects.

I know some Members have expressed concern that when we streamline, we do not want to streamline over local authority and we do not want to streamline over environmental laws that protect the beautiful landscape that we live in and enjoy. So those two features in this legislation that people are concerned about do not exist. We do not harm the environment, nor do we run over local authority.

The way this legislation is drafted, it will ensure that once a community has reached a consensus on a critical capacity project, the review process will not unnecessarily delay construction. This bill, in fact, creates a coordinated review process for our major airport capacity projects across the country. It also gives the Secretary of Transportation the responsibility to ensure that all environmental reviews by all government agencies will be conducted at the same time whenever possible, and completed within the deadlines established by the Department of Transportation.

H.R. 4481 also binds all Federal and State agencies taking part in a review to the project's "purpose and need" as determined by the Department of Transportation under this legislation. It also limits Federal or State agency reviews to the project alternatives that the Secretary of the Department determines are reasonable.

□ 1230

Finally, this bill also expedites judicial reviews of Department of Transportation determinations. It moves all claims to the U.S. Court of Appeals and requires all petitions to be filed not later than 60 days after an order is issued with allowances, of course, for special circumstances.

I would like to reiterate that nothing in this bill is intended to cut off debate or limit input on the local level in any way. It does not usurp the rights or responsibilities of a State or airport sponsor to carry out an airport project.

Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent piece of legislation. We have worked together closely with the minority. Both sides of the aisle have been consulted, and we have worked with local and State governments and other stakeholders in this important process; and I think we have a good consensus on an excellent piece of legislation. I urge Members to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation pending before us, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) has just described has as its purpose to speed up construction of runways, taxiways, airside improvements at airports that have dragged on far too long in the past.

Perhaps the most egregious example or comparison would be that of the Chek Lap Kok Airport in Hong Kong, an airport built in the ocean in 300 meters of ocean depth, 12,500 foot runways, a 23-mile rail-truck highway link to downtown Kowloon, a terminal to handle 90,000 passengers, started at the same time as the third runway at Seattle.

Chek Lap Kok has been completed at a cost of over $25 billion, is now handling 15 to 20 million passengers a year; and I was out in Seattle a year ago for the bulldozing of the first load of dirt to start work on the third Seattle runway. Now, that is an egregious example, as I said; but it is one that underscores the frustration that airport authorities, airlines, and air traveling passengers have with our airport expansion program.

If we are going to accommodate the more than 1 billion passengers to use the U.S. airways in the next 5 to 10 years, then we have to do a better job of moving airport projects along to enhance and expand capacity.

But it is misleading to say that environmental issues alone are the factors causing 10- to 15-year delays in building runways. The FAA reviewed the runway construction process, studied a number of major construction projects which have been described as taking 10 to 15 years to complete, and found generally that the Federal environmental impact process took 3 to 4 years. Now, that certainly is in the view of many people too long, but it is not 15 years. The major cause when we look at the facts more closely as reported by FAA, the major cause of delay is the time needed to complete the local political process mandated by State law and local ordinance.

Under our system, as distinguished from many other places and most other countries in the world, it is not the Federal Government that decides to build an airport, except in the case of Dulles or Reagan National Airport, which are the only two owned by the Federal Government. It is the local government that makes that decision. Once they have, the Federal process comes into play.

I think that we should speed up the environmental process by doing a great deal of the work concurrently, and coordinate State and Federal approvals; but each proposal has to be evaluated on its own and on itself. We have to be careful that we are only streamlining environmental processes, not superseding them.

There are many positive provisions in this bill that will move the process along without undermining the National Environmental Policy Act. There is a procedure for DOT to take the lead in a cooperative initiative where all the State and Federal agencies that have environmental responsibilities agree to deadlines, agree to coordinate their review, and to do those reviews concurrently rather than sequentially. That would be a very big improvement on the existing process. I think that is a strong and constructive initiative that we have brought forward.

There is also more flexibility in this legislation to address local community concerns by allowing restrictions on use of new runways, use of Federal airport funds for environmental mitigation, and allow FAA to accept money from airports to hire additional staff to process the environmental reviews more expeditiously. I think that is constructive.

If these reasonable, responsible, thoughtfully constructed steps are followed, the environmental process will not be preempted. It will be speeded up, and the environmental will not take a bad rap in the name of efficiency or expeditious movement of airport construction process.

On the whole we have a good bill, a reasonable one that properly managed will move our airport expansion needs ahead in a responsible manner. I think it will go a long way toward accelerating the environmental process without sacrificing environmental processes. I commend the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) for the extensive cooperation that we have had on this legislation, and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA), for his thoughtful consideration of the views that we have offered on our side; and I also commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI) for his dedicated work over many hours on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), the chairman of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I can only echo the words that have been said by the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA).

This legislation will not change everything overnight, but it will expedite the process of building airports, we think, in a more expeditious time period. As the gentleman mentioned, the airports built in the Asian market were built in a short period of time, and Seattle has had 19 years and has not even flown an airplane off the new runway that is going to be built.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is needed at this time. Prior to 9-11, the biggest complaint was congestion and delays in our airports. I believe although air traffic is down now, it will return in the near future; and we need these new airports as our population grows. We need these new airports as commerce grows, and this is a way to get these airports built on time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4481, the Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act of 2002.

I am pleased to be moving forward with this legislation. Last year, airport gridlock dominated the aviation debate. Passengers were bitterly complaining about the intolerable delays they were forced to endure. We examined those issues and found that one of the main reasons for the congestion was the lack of airport capacity.

There was a crying need for new runways and improved airport infrastructure. Air-21 provided the funding for these improvements, but bureaucratic red tape often held up needed construction. Now attention has shifted to airport security, and rightly so. Air traffic is down and the need for airport capacity improvements is less compelling. But, I am confident that air traffic will pick up again. And when it does, congestion and delays will return with a vengeance unless we do something about it now. That is why I introduced this bill. This legislation directs the Department of Transportation to take a lead role in the environmental review process.

DOT will coordinate the actions of other agencies and will be responsible for determining the "purpose and need" and reasonable alternative to the project. I do not claim that this bill will build new runways overnight, but it will streamline the process and help airports meet the demands of air travelers more quickly. And, it should be noted, it will do this without undermining the environmental laws or the ability of citizens to have their voices heard in the process.

I would like to thank chairman MICA, as well as Mr. OBERSTAR and Mr. LIPINSKI, for their help and cooperation on this legislation. There were some difficult issues in this bill and I very much appreciate the bipartisan approach to resolving them.

I urge a yes vote on H.R. 4481.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Aviation.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for yielding me this time and express my sincere appreciation to the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) for the outstanding cooperation that we have on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. It is a pleasure to work with these gentlemen because they always strive to do what is best for the American flying public.

Mr. Speaker, I lend my support to H.R. 4481, the Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act. In the true fashion of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, this is a bipartisan measure that will expedite the environmental review and approval process for key airport capacity projects.

In the last decade, only six of our Nation's largest airports have managed to complete new runway projects, as it currently takes about 10 years or more to simply plan and approve such a project. And as we are about to reach pre-September 11 traffic, and will eventually pass these levels, we need to streamline and speed up the environmental review process in order to lessen the aviation congestion that plagues our Nation and the world. H.R. 4481 will eliminate duplication without cutting corners that might harm the environment. Simply put, once a community reaches consensus on an airport capacity project and the environmental review has been finished, construction can begin in a timely fashion.

In closing, I urge Members to support this measure that will help lessen the worsening aviation capacity crunch that we are facing in this Nation.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN), the previous chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation, one of the current Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure chairmen.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I first want to salute and commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and the ranking members, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), for bringing this bill to the floor today.

The lack of publicity about this legislation should not be any reflection on its importance because I consider this to be very, very important legislation. In previous Congresses, we held a couple of hearings about this problem, and we heard testimony that the average time of completion of a runway project in this country was approximately 10 years. In fact, we heard one witness tell us that the main runway at the Atlanta airport took 14 years from conception to completion, but only 33 days, those were 24-hour workdays, so we could say 99 working days of actual construction. That is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

We also heard testimony that these delays are primarily due to environmental rules and regulations and red tape, and it was driving the cost of these projects up so they were costing three or four times what they should. Those costs had to be passed on to the flying public. What this has done over the years, it has driven up the cost of air travel. It has forced many lower-income people back onto the highways, or made sure that they stayed on the highways instead of having the much safer and quicker and more comfortable alternative of flying.

This is very important legislation. We passed in the last Congress the AIR-21 bill, which was the largest aviation bill in the history of the Congress; but we certainly will not be able to gain the full benefits of the AIR-21 legislation unless we pass this legislation to complement and improve that earlier bill. This will help taxpayers receive the greatest bang for their buck on these aviation projects and will greatly improve and hold down the cost of air travel in the future. I think it is a very good bill, and I commend the authors and urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed a number of documents in the form of letters or memos issued just on the eve of the consideration of this legislation, and I want to make four points to reassure those who have expressed concerns about the effects of this bill on environmental procedures.

One, the bill specifically provides there is no preemption or interference with any practice of seeking public comment or the authority of States or the authority of airport operators to decide on which projects they wish to undertake.

Two, the bill does not give any new authority to the FAA to create exemptions from the environmental requirements.

Three, States have a choice of whether they want to participate in a coordinated process.

Four, if another agency does not comply with the coordinated schedule developed by DOT, the other agency does not lose its authority. It does have a remedy, a report to Congress.

I think on balance we have taken into consideration the concerns expressed in the course of the hearing and subsequently about the effects of this legislation on environmental processes, and I urge the adoption of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, first, again, I want to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for his cooperation and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Aviation, for his kind assistance.

This legislation is authored by the chair of our full committee, the distinguished gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), and it is cooperation of this nature that allows us to move important legislation forward. Although again not very newsworthy or legislation which brings on a great deal of debate and controversy in the House, today we are passing a significant measure which will allow airport streamlining for the approval process that is so important.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, this bill saves time and this legislation saves money. This legislation maintains our protections, important protections over the environment, and this legislation maintains important local and State control and authority.

I believe it is important to move this legislation forward because it does move our aviation infrastructure projects which are so necessary across the country and particularly in our congested regions of the Nation, and also this is important because it will move our economy forward, which we know is so dependent on aviation and aviation infrastructure.

So, with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of this legislation and support for H.R. 4481.

Mr. CONDIT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to put on record my concerns regarding the Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act of 2002 currently under discussion in the House.

No one can quarrel with the concept of coordinating the extensive environmental review process required for major infrastructure projects such as the airport construction. Major transportation, education, energy, and other essential infrastructure projects warrant expedited environmental review, as long as the review is thorough and complete. However, it is critical that the same standards of review be used for all such projects. In Northern California there is a very controversial and disputed proposal to expand the runways at San Francisco International Airport by filling in approximately one square mile of San Francisco Bay. For the last several years, I have impressed upon federal and state officials the importance of analyzing this proposal from the perspective of meeting the long-term challenges facing commercial aviation throughout Northern California.

The runway expansion and Bay fill proposal is seen as a solution to the problem of too much air traffic and air traffic delays at SFO. But, this solution will only compound the problem of traffic gridlock on our existing freeway and highway system to and from the airport. The permanent damage to San Francisco Bay caused by the Bay fill would only relieve aviation congestion problems on a temporary basis, it does nothing to address the larger issue of moving people and goods throughout California in the most reasonable, efficient, and environmentally prudent manner. In fact, it makes this challenge more difficult.

As we discuss expedited review by the Federal Government of major projects such as the San Francisco Bay fill/airport expansion proposal, we must be mindful of thoroughly reviewing all alternatives. In the case of San Francisco, have we considered the use of existing, under-utilized or abandoned aviation facilities in the San Francisco/Northern California region as an alternative to filling the Bay? Do the increased security concerns resulting from September 11 support such an expansion or would it be more prudent to improve other regional facilities? Has consideration been given to segregating SFO in terms of limiting or eliminating air cargo operations at that facility in order to maximize passenger aviation opportunities?

I have long suggested the Federal Government coordinate its review of all major projects in order to have a timely resolution and avoid endless litigation and delay. Our policies in this area, however, must be consistent and exercised with fairness, and the review must be thorough.

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition of the Airport Streamlining Approval Process Act of 2002, which continues this Congress' focus toward the expansion of airports and ignores the quality of life issue forced on many of our constituents who live near airports—aircraft noise.

I fully recognize the vital role the aviation industry plays in our nation's economy, but it is time for this congress to stop focusing solely on what's good for the airport industry and to start focusing on what's also good for the countless individuals who live near airports and are constantly subjected to the thunderous roar of giants jets overhead.

While this measure does include provisions that address aircraft noise, I firmly believe that those steps are inadequate and do not properly address the issue of aircraft noise. Instead of addressing legislation seeking solely to expand this nation's airports, this Congress should also focus its attention on legislation that eliminates aircraft noise. One measure I have introduced would ban the two loudest types of airplane engines from all general aviation airports in the 20 largest metropolitan areas in the country. It is time that we shift our attention away from solely the expansion of airports and toward the problem of aircraft noise which hampers the quality of life for countless American citizens.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4481, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4481, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

ARMED FORCES TAX FAIRNESS ACT OF 2002

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5063) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a special rule for members of the uniformed services in determining the exclusion of gain from the sale of a principal residence and to restore the tax exempt status of death gratuity payments to members of the uniformed services.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5063

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Armed Forces Tax Fairness Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. SPECIAL RULE FOR MEMBERS OF UNIFORMED SERVICES IN DETERMINING EXCLUSION OF GAIN FROM SALE OF PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (d) of section 121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to exclusion of gain from sale of principal residence) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(9) MEMBERS OF UNIFORMED SERVICES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—At the election of an individual with respect to a property, the running of the 5-year period described in subsection (a) with respect to such property shall be suspended during any period that such individual or such individual's spouse is serving on qualified official extended duty as a member of the uniformed services.

“(B) MAXIMUM PERIOD OF SUSPENSION.—The 5-year period described in subsection (a) shall not be extended more than 5 years by reason of subparagraph (A).

“(C) QUALIFIED OFFICIAL EXTENDED DUTY.—For purposes of this paragraph—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified official extended duty’ means any extended duty while serving at a duty station which is at least 250 miles from such property or while residing under Government orders in Government quarters.

“(ii) UNIFORMED SERVICES.—The term ‘uniformed services’ has the meaning given such term by section 101(a)(5) of title 10, United States Code, as in effect on the date of the enactment of this paragraph.

“(iii) EXTENDED DUTY.—The term ‘extended duty’ means any period of active duty pursuant to a call or order to such duty for a period in excess of 180 days or for an indefinite period.

“(D) SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO ELECTION.—

“(i) ELECTION LIMITED TO 1 PROPERTY AT A TIME.—An election under subparagraph (A) with respect to any property may not be made if such an election is in effect with respect to any other property.

“(ii) REVOCATION OF ELECTION.—An election under subparagraph (A) may be revoked at any time.”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to elections made after the date of the enactment of this Act for suspended periods under section 121(d)(9) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this section) beginning after such date.

SEC. 3. RESTORATION OF FULL EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME OF DEATH GRATUITY PAYMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (b)(3) of section 134 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to certain military benefits) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(C) EXCEPTION FOR DEATH GRATUITY ADJUSTMENTS MADE BY LAW.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any adjustment to the amount of death gratuity payable under chapter 75 of title 10, United States Code, which is pursuant to a provision of law enacted before December 31, 1991.”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 134(b)(3) of such Code is amended by striking “subparagraph (B)” and inserting “subparagraphs (B) and (C)”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to deaths occurring after September 10, 2001.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. McNULTY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON).

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. It has two features to it. First, it increases the tax-free death benefit payment provided to members of the Armed Services who are on active duty. The present exempt amount is $3,000. The bill increases that to $6,000. In 1991, during Desert Storm, this death benefit paid to the survivors was increased from $3,000 to $6,000, but the tax amount was not changed, so that the extra $3,000 has been subject to tax since that time. What this does, the bill will correct that oversight.

The second feature, Mr. Speaker, is the bill will allow members of the uniformed services who are transferred to take advantage of the present-law capital gains tax relief on the sale of their home, the way all the rest of us can do.

An individual is not subject to the first $250,000, or, for a couple, $500,000 on a joint return on the sale of a home if it has been lived in as a principal residence for 2 out of the last 5 years.

Uniformed members are transferred around this country and overseas at someone else's choosing. This happens so many times that it is impossible for them to meet the 5-year rule. What this bill would do is suspend the running of the 5-year rule for a total of 5 years during the time they are assigned away from home.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, although the provisions in this bill apply only to the military and uniformed service members, there are other citizens who work abroad for the government or foreign service officers, as well as employees of businesses, who have the same problem with the 5-year rule. At some point, not now, but at some point we need to consider their needs so that the rule is uniform.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, during this time of heightened military engagement, the benefits provided under this bill should go to our men and women in uniform without delay. The high price they are willing to pay is often overlooked during peacetime, but war quickly reminds us of their willingness to place their lives on the line for all that we hold dear. The families of these men and women deserve any help we can provide in making their lives a bit easier.

This bill responds, as my colleague from New York pointed out, to two areas of need. It provides much-needed relief to members of our military through favorable tax treatment of death benefits paid on behalf of military personnel who die in the line of duty. In addition, the bill eases the burden currently experienced by certain military personnel with respect to the exclusion of gain on the sale of their principal residence.

We all agree that the current death benefit of $3,000 is inadequate. This position was adopted earlier when the benefit was increased from $3,000 to $6,000 through the appropriations process. We must now ensure that our military men and women receive the full benefits as intended. Thus, under the bill the full amount of the death penalty payable, which is $6,000, would be excluded from income.

The second provision of the bill would ensure that certain military personnel are not denied the benefits of excluding an amount of the gain realized upon the sale of a principal residence simply because of extended military assignments away from home. Current law provides an individual taxpayer an exclusion from tax of up to $250,000, or $500,000 if married and filing a joint return, of gains realized on the sale or exchange of a principal residence. To qualify, the taxpayer must have owned and used the residence as a principal residence for at least 2 of the 5 years prior to the sale or exchange.

Many of our military personnel do not receive this benefit because they are stationed away from home for an extended tour of duty. Thus, they fail to meet the so-called 2 of the 5 preceding years rule. This bill would ensure that this benefit is not lost because of an extended tour of duty. Under the bill, military personnel would be permitted to exclude any time spent on an extended tour of duty for purposes of meeting the 2 of 5 preceding years rule.

This provides the benefits which were intended when the law was enacted. I do not believe anyone in this body would argue that the Congress intended to deny this benefit to the men and women who faithfully serve in our Armed Forces. This provision brings about the fair and intended results.

I join the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) in strongly supporting this bill, H.R. 5063, and I urge all of my colleagues to support it as well.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM JOHNSON).

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honor to be here today in support of improving the quality of life for the men and women of our military and their loved ones with this Armed Forces Tax Fairness Act.

Let me begin by saying how extremely proud I am of the men and women who serve in our military, as well as their families. No matter where I go, I have the absolute rapt attention from everyone when I talk about members of our Armed Services and the great job they are doing today. I hope that our troops know that all across the Nation, citizens are proud of our troops and that Americans are grateful for the sacrifices that they and their families make for the defense of our Nation.

The bill we debate here today will put some muscle behind our statements of appreciation. While one could never, ever, put a price on life, as a very small token of respect and condolences, the military provides a death benefit for survivors called a death gratuity after the loss of a loved one. This money can be used to fly family members to a funeral or pay for memorial service expenses.

Unfortunately, in the last decade a large portion of that money has gone back to the Federal Government. The death gratuity was increased from $3,000 to $6,000 during the Persian Gulf War, but our Tax Code failed to keep up with the military changes. As a result, only half of that $6,000 is tax-free today.

During times of war and times of peace, every military family prays for the safety of their loved ones. A visit by a military chaplain bearing bad news one day is only compounded by the horror of the tax man soon after.

Taxing the loved ones' loss is one of the most inappropriate, irresponsible and immoral forms of taxation. Today's action will change that. This exclusion would be effective for those who died in the Pentagon, have fought for freedom in Afghanistan, and any service member killed while defending this country on September 11 or since that tragic day.

Mr. Speaker, I remember when my wife talked about the chaplain coming up to her front door just when I was missing in action. Those families who have suffered, suffered through the death of a loved one killed in action by terrorism, should not have to give one nickel more to Uncle Sam.

The other important change being made concerns housing of military families. The act would provide a reasonable accommodation to members of the military so they, too, can benefit from the current $500,000 exclusion from capital gains on the sale of a home.

To get this exclusion, a family must live in a home for at least 2 of the previous 5 years. This is generally reasonable, but for those serving in the military, such a requirement is out of their control when their orders ship them to any of the four corners of the earth.

I know firsthand about being transferred. As a 29-year veteran of the Air Force, my wife Shirley and our three kids and I moved 17 times. It is a reality of military life. It is fair for the Tax Code to hold them harmless for the time when they are not living in their own homes because of military orders.

□ 1300

Do not worry. Service members will not be able to become real estate moguls by buying property all over the country and getting this benefit. It is only relevant for one property per family.

Today's action is one more way Congress can say "thank you" to our brave military men and women, as well as their families. I hope the Senate follows suit for the families and for freedom, and sends this bill to the President soon.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas very much for those wonderful and eloquent words.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to first thank the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. McNULTY) for bringing this legislation forward.

I think, after the celebration of our freedom last Thursday, that it is just and appropriate that we should bring this legislation forward. I actually got involved with H.R. 3973 2 or 3 months ago when I learned that the tax was on the death gratuity of our military; and I worked both sides of the political aisle. We had over 110 sponsors for that legislation, because all of us were surprised that there was still that tax on the death gratuity. So I want to compliment the chairman and the ranking member for bringing this legislation forward.

I am pleased to say, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. JOHNSON), who was a former POW, said, that we have so many wonderful men and women in uniform who serve this Nation and are willing to be called to give their life for America at any time; and to eliminate this death tax, death gratuity tax, on the family after they have lost a loved one is absolutely the right thing to do. It should be, as it is to my colleagues, unacceptable that this death gratuity tax is in the law now, but we are going to eliminate that with the passage of this legislation.

In addition, I would like to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), the chairman of the subcommittee, and others, because I have also shared their concern about the fact that our military was left out of the Taxpayers Relief Act of 1997, when we allowed for the first sale of a home that the capital gains tax would not apply. So I am pleased, after 5 years, I say to my colleagues, that they are bringing this forward and bringing this relief to the men and women in uniform.

The last point on that is that I did talk to Chairman Archer at the time, back in 1998, and he said that it was a mistake, that the military should have been included; so I am delighted with the efforts of my colleagues that we are moving this forward.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would just like to say that I give my strong support and appreciation to the leadership for bringing this act to the floor of the House.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PICKERING).

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from New York (Mr. McNULTY), I rise in proud support and sponsorship of the Armed Forces Tax Relief Act of 2002.

As we return from the 4th of July recess, I can think of nothing more appropriate or better to do than to correct the injustice and the wrong code in our tax system that we would take a tax at the very worst time in an armed service member's family's life when they have lost someone in the line of duty, in combat. We, as a government, have said that we will give that family a death benefit. We should not be taxing them on that; we should be helping them.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Texas. This is simply wrong and immoral. We must do something. This act will correct that injustice, and we will say to the family, we are proud of your family member's service to our country. We want to help you in this most difficult time, and we will not increase your burden, but we will stand with you and try to comfort, not tax you.

The other thing that is most important in an armed service member's family's life is when they move or sell their home and the quality of life that is so critical to be able to sell a home and buy a home and improve that home, and to create the comfort and the quality for their children. We should not be taxing them in a way that makes that very important and essential component of their quality of life more difficult. So I am very proud to see that we are adjusting the Tax Code.

In my home State of Mississippi, we have two military bases in Meridian and Columbus, Mississippi. Our Air Guard and our other Guard and Reserve forces are being deployed on an even more frequent basis, and we should not count that time of their serving our country, being deployed in foreign countries, fighting a war on terrorism or conducting humanitarian missions or whatever their mission may be, and then penalizing them as they try to sell their home and create a better place and a better home for their family.

So this is an act that is long overdue. It is something that is done in tribute on this, the week after the 4th of July, as our men and women are fighting a war on terrorism. I can think of nothing more appropriate or right to do as we today pass, later this afternoon, the Armed Services Tax Fairness Act of 2002.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

When I served in the United States Army, I remember very well, I can trace my steps during that time very vividly, I was transferred four times. That is not unusual for any member of the Armed Forces, no matter which branch it might be.

During that time, I did not have any property problems. I owned no property, so some of these provisions which we attack here today would not have applied to me. But some of the people with whom I served would have faced tax consequences if we were in a position not to do something, as we are doing here today.

The point is that transfers being a way of life, it is possible that the capital gains tax relief that is granted to people otherwise would not be granted to a member of the armed services because of the rapid transferability of every single member of the United States Army, Navy, Marines, the entire gamut of the Armed Forces.

What we do here today is to grant members of the Armed Forces the stability in their tax structure that they otherwise would not be able to garner. So when we do this, we honor the members of the Armed Forces and we pay heed to their special tax consequences if we did not have the vision to foresee some of the problems that they might face. This bill foresees it and remedies it.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. FORBES).

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me this time.

I am very proud to rise in support of this important legislation. On September 11, our Nation suffered a great tragedy. The enemies of freedom made a deliberate attack upon our people and our soil and our way of life. But those enemies were mistaken if they believed that such an attack could turn us away from the principles of liberty and freedom that we hold so dear.

Despite the strains of the war on terror, America's military is still the strongest in the world. However, the true power behind America's military might is not the high-tech tanks and planes and guns that we have; it is the fighting American soldier, sailor, airman and Marine that operates those weapons.

People are the true power behind America's military might. People fly planes and drive tanks and ride on horseback through the mountains of Afghanistan. People sail into harm's way and launch from the decks of aircraft carriers. People guard over the very freedom that makes this country the best in the world. There is no warfighting without warfighters, and if we do not protect our people, we will lose them.

Only two things in life they say are certain: death and taxes. But how in the world can we possibly continue to justify penalizing our service members who risk their lives to protect this government by then turning around and taxing them on the benefits their families receive because they gave their lives for us? It makes absolutely no sense for our government to bestow a gratuity upon the American service member only so that we can take it away after he has given the ultimate sacrifice.

Please join me in supporting this important legislation to remove death gratuity payments from members of the armed services.

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I work very hard these days on trying to keep my priorities straight, and part of that is remembering that had it not been for all of the men and women who wore the uniform of the United States military through the years, I would not have the privilege as an American citizen of going around bragging, as I often do, about how we live in the freest and most open democracy on the face of the Earth.

Freedom is not free. We have paid a tremendous price for it. I try not to let a day go by without remembering with deep gratitude all of those who, like my own brother, Bill, made the supreme sacrifice, and all of those who, like many members of this Chamber, served in our Armed Forces, came back home, continued to render outstanding service and raised beautiful families to carry on their fine traditions.

Like many Members, I attended a number of events over the July 4th weekend. One of them was on Sunday, July 7th, with survivors of the Battle of Saipan. They recalled with great sorrow how 80 percent of the people that they served with at the time did not come home alive.

But they survived. This was a very special group, Mr. Speaker, because they had never received the medals that they had earned 58 years before. Thankfully, one of the things that we can do, as Members of Congress, is to try to rectify that.

On that day, I had the honor of pinning on their lapels literally dozens of those medals, including Bronze Stars and Purple Hearts, which they earned 58 years prior—to the day—but had never received. People like Nick Grinaldo and Joe Mariano, Adam Weasack, Ralph Colangione, Frank Pusatere, and Sammy DiNova; and people like the gentleman from Texas (Mr. JOHNSON), who just left this Chamber, who served our country, was a prisoner of war, who endured torture on our behalf.

These are the reasons why, when I get up in the morning, my priorities, Mr. Speaker, are to thank God for my life and veterans for my way of life.

Beyond winning the two great World Wars of this century, think of what their service and their vigilance has meant just in the past decade or so: the democratization of all of Eastern Europe. And I can remember, as those Communist countries were falling in 1989, Erich Honecker, then the leader of East Germany, standing up before the world and making the pronouncement, "This is where it stops. It shall not happen here," meaning the democracy movement. Three weeks later he was no longer the leader of East Germany. He was replaced by Egon Krenz, who decided to adopt what he called, "the moderate hard line," meaning he was going to try to preserve the Communist system and just appease the democratic movement. And he was quickly dispatched, and we know the rest of the story.

What a great thrill it was for me in the spring of 1990, to travel and visit our troops in Germany. They flew me into Berlin and they took me to the Berlin Wall, as the people were out there with their hammers and chisels, tearing down the wall piece by piece. Our soldiers made that happen. I got a hammer and chisel, and I went out there and I banged away at the wall myself, and I brought back some of those pieces of wall and gave them to veterans and thanked them for what they had done for the people of that region and for every citizen of the Free World.

And the year after that, the breakup of the Soviet Union into 15 individual democratic republics. Who would have predicted that even a short time prior?

I thank this body for sending me over to one of those republics when they were having their independence referendum in Armenia. I went over with three of my other colleagues and watched in awe as 95 percent of the people over the age of 18 in that country went out and voted, a privilege none of them had experienced before in their lives. I watched them stand in line for hours for the privilege of the right to vote.

Then it was a beautiful scene, because when they finished voting, they did not go home. They had little banquets in every little polling place to celebrate their independence. What a great thrill it was for me as a Representative of the United States Congress to be there with them the next day in the streets of Yeravan, their capital, as they danced and sang and shouted (Armenian phrase), "Ketse azat ankakh Hayastar," which means, "Long live free and independent Armenia." And then pointed to the United States of America as their example of what they wanted to be as a democracy.

At that moment, I was never more proud to be an American. But I remembered why I had that feeling: the men and women who put on the uniform of the United States military through the years and put their lives on the line for me, for my family, and every citizen of this country.

This bill today, Mr. Speaker, is peanuts; it is small-time stuff; it is a couple of minor tax breaks. But we should enact it and build on it and remember why we have the great privileges we have in this country: the men and women of our Armed Forces.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. McNULTY) for those wonderful words. Many strong words have been uttered by many strong people here, and I will not try to add to those.

Suffice it to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a fair bill, it is the right bill, it is the right bill at the right time; and I would like to, as with the gentleman from New York (Mr. McNULTY), urge Members to support H.R. 5063.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5063, the Armed Services Tax Fairness Act.

Everyday the men and women of the Armed Services risk their lives to defend our country. After September 11th the burden upon the men and women in uniform has grown exponentially. As it is, many in the Armed Forces claim that their pay is low. The least that we could do would be to give those who serve our country some type of financial relief.

Back in 1991, the gratuity death payment was increased from $3,000 to $6,000, however the Tax Code was not adjusted to reflect the change. As a result only the first $3,000 is truly tax-free. House Resolution 5063 would change this so that all of the gratuity death payment money would be exempt from taxes.

Furthermore, this bill would protect armed services personnel who are transferred to take advantage of capital gains tax relief on any home sales. Currently, the law states that a person is not subject to capital gains tax on the first $250,000 when selling a home and $500,000 for a married couple. However, only people who live in their home for at least 2 out of the past 5 years can take advantage of exemption. Armed service men and women often are not able to satisfy the 5-year rule and therefore are not able to take advantage of this tax relief. House Resolution 5063 would address this by providing that even when men and women of the Armed Forces are transferred, it will put them in the same position as if they had been living at home while serving elsewhere.

Accordingly, I urge all of our colleagues to support H.R. 5063, the Armed Services Tax Fairness Act. This is simply the right and fair thing to do for all those in uniform who risk their lives everyday for our Nation.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PETRI). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5063.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 5063.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

UNDERGRADUATE SCIENCE, MATHEMATICS, ENGINEERING, AND TECHNOLOGY EDUCATION IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3130) to provide for increasing the technically trained workforce in the United States, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3130

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Undergraduate Science, Mathematics, Engineering, and Technology Education Improvement Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Studies show that about half of all United States post-World War II economic growth is a direct result of technological innovation, and science, engineering, and technology play a central role in the creation of new goods and services, new jobs, and new capital.

(2) The growth in the number of jobs requiring technical skills is projected to be more than 50 percent over the next decade.

(3) A workforce that is highly trained in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology is crucial to generating the innovation that drives economic growth, yet females, who represent 50 percent of the United States population, make up only 19 percent of the science, engineering, and technology workforce.

(4) Outside of the biomedical sciences, the number of undergraduate degrees awarded in the science, mathematics, engineering, and technology disciplines has been flat or declining since 1987, despite rapid population growth and a significant increase in undergraduate enrollment over the same period.

(5) The demand for H-1B visas has increased over the past several years, suggesting that the United States is not training a sufficient number of scientists and engineers.

(6) International comparisons of 24-year olds have shown that the proportion of natural science and engineering degrees to the total of undergraduate degrees is lower in the United States than in Japan, South Korea, Taiwan, the United Kingdom, and Canada.

(7) Technological and scientific advancements hold significant potential for elevating the quality of life and the standard of living in the United States. The quality and quantity of such advancements are dependent on a technically trained workforce.

(8) Reversing the downward enrollment and graduation trends in a number of science and engineering disciplines is not only imperative to maintaining our Nation's prosperity, it is also important for our national security.

(9) The decline of student majors in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology is reportedly linked to poor teaching quality in these disciplines and lack of institutional commitment to undergraduate education as compared to research.

(10) Undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology faculty generally lack any formal preparation for their role as undergraduate educators. In addition, faculty members are generally not rewarded, and in some cases are penalized, for the time they devote to undergraduate education.

(11) Faculty experienced in working with undergraduate students report that undergraduate research experiences contribute significantly to a student's decision to stay in an undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, or technology major and to continue their education through graduate studies.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act—

(1) the term “academic unit” means a department, division, institute, school, college, or other subcomponent of an institution of higher education;

(2) the term “community college” has the meaning given such term in section 7501(4) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7601(4));

(3) the term “Director” means the Director of the National Science Foundation;

(4) the term “eligible nonprofit organization” means a nonprofit organization with demonstrated experience delivering science, mathematics, engineering, or technology education, as determined by the Director;

(5) the term “institution of higher education” has the meaning given such term in section 101(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001(a)); and

(6) the term “research-grade instrumentation” means a single instrument or a networked system of instruments that enable publication-quality research to be performed by students or faculty.

SEC. 4. TECHNOLOGY TALENT.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the “Technology Talent Act of 2002”.

(b) GRANT PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall award grants, on a competitive, merit-reviewed basis, to institutions of higher education with physical or information science, mathematics, engineering, or technology programs, to consortia thereof, or to nonprofit entities that have established consortia among such institutions of higher education for the purpose of increasing the number and quality of students studying and receiving associate or baccalaureate degrees in the physical and information sciences, mathematics, engineering, and technology. Consortia established by such nonprofit entities may include participation by eligible nonprofit organizations, State or local governments, or private sector companies. An institution of higher education, including those participating in consortia, that is awarded a grant under this section shall be known as a “National Science Foundation Science and Engineering Talent Expansion Center”.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—

(A) NUMBER.—The Director shall award not fewer than 10 grants under this section each year, contingent upon available funds.

(B) DURATION.—Grants under this section shall be awarded for a period of 5 years, with the final 2 years of funding contingent on the Director's determination that satisfactory progress has been made by the grantee during the first 3 years of the grant period toward achieving the increases in the number of students proposed pursuant to subparagraph (E).

(C) PRINCIPAL INVESTIGATOR.—For each grant awarded under this section to an institution of higher education, at least 1 principal investigator must be in a position of administrative leadership at the institution of higher education, and at least 1 principal investigator must be a faculty member from an academic department included in the work of the project. For each grant awarded to a consortium or nonprofit entity, at each institution of higher education participating in the consortium, at least 1 of the individuals responsible for carrying out activities authorized under subsection (c) at that institution must be in a position of administrative leadership at the institution, and at least 1 must be a faculty member from an academic department included in the work of the project at that institution.

(D) SUBSEQUENT GRANTS.—An institution of higher education, a consortium thereof, or a nonprofit entity that has completed a grant awarded under this section may apply for a subsequent grant under this section.

(E) INCREASES.—

(1) INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION WITH BACCALAUREATE DEGREE PROGRAMS.—An applicant for a grant under this section that is or includes an institution of higher education that awards baccalaureate degrees shall propose in its application specific increases in the number of students who are United States citizens or permanent resident aliens obtaining baccalaureate degrees at each such institution within the physical or information sciences, mathematics, engineering, or technology, and shall state the mechanisms by which the success of the grant project at each such institution shall be assessed.

(2) COMMUNITY COLLEGES.—An applicant for a grant under this section that is or includes a community college shall propose in its application specific increases in the number of students at the community college who are United States citizens or permanent resident aliens pursuing degrees, concentrations, or certifications in the physical or information sciences, mathematics, engineering, or technology programs or pursuing credits toward transfer to a baccalaureate degree program in the physical or information sciences, mathematics, engineering, or technology, and shall state the mechanisms by which the success of the grant project at each community college shall be assessed.

(F) RECORDKEEPING.—Each recipient of a grant under this section shall maintain, and transmit annually to the National Science Foundation, in a format indicated by the Director, baseline and subsequent data on undergraduate students in physical and information science, mathematics, engineering, and technology programs. For grants to consortia or nonprofit entities, the data transmitted shall be provided separately for each institution of higher education participating in the consortia. Such data shall include information on—

- (i) the number of students enrolled;
- (ii) student academic achievement, including quantifiable measurements of students' mastery of content and skills;
- (iii) persistence to degree completion, including students who transfer from science, mathematics, engineering, and technology programs to programs in other academic disciplines; and

(iv) placement during the first year after degree completion in post-graduate education or career pathways.

(G) PRIORITY.—The Director may give priority in awarding grants under this section to applicants whose application—

(i) indicates a plan to build on previous and existing efforts with demonstrated success, including efforts involving industry, in improving undergraduate learning and teaching, including efforts funded by Federal grants from the National Science Foundation or other agencies; and

(ii) provides evidence of a commitment by the administration at each institution of higher education to support and reward faculty involvement in carrying out the proposed implementation plan for the project.

(c) USES OF FUNDS.—Activities supported by grants under this section may include—

(1) projects that specifically aim to increase the number of traditionally underrepresented students in the physical or information sciences, mathematics, engineering, or technology, such as mentoring programs;

(2) projects that expand the capacity of institutions of higher education to incorporate current advances in science and technology into the undergraduate learning environment;

(3) bridge projects that enable students at community colleges to matriculate directly into baccalaureate physical or information science, mathematics, engineering, or technology programs, including those targeted at traditionally underrepresented groups in such disciplines;

(4) projects including interdisciplinary approaches to undergraduate physical and information science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education;

(5) projects that focus directly on the quality of student learning, including those that encourage—

(A) high-caliber teaching, including enabling faculty to spend additional time teaching participating students in smaller class settings, particularly in the laboratory environment, by, for example, providing summer salary or other additional salary for faculty members or stipends for students;

(B) opportunities to develop new pedagogical approaches including the development of web-based course strategies, distributed and collaborative digital teaching tools, or interactive course modules; and

(C) screening and training of teaching assistants;

(6) projects that—

(A) facilitate student exposure to potential careers, including cooperative projects with industry or government that place students in internships as early as the summer following their first year of study;

(B) provide part-time employment in industry during the school year; or

(C) provide opportunities for undergraduates to participate in industry or government sponsored research;

(7) projects that assist institutions of higher education in States that participate in the Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research (EPSCoR) to broaden the science, engineering, mathematics, and technology student base or increase retention in these fields;

(8) projects to encourage undergraduate research on-campus or off-campus;

(9) projects that provide scholarships or stipends to students entering and persisting in the study of science, mathematics, engineering, or technology;

(10) projects that leverage the Federal investment by providing matching funds from industry, from State or local government sources, or from private sources; and

(11) other innovative approaches to achieving the purpose described in subsection (b)(1).

(d) ASSESSMENT, EVALUATION, AND DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—

(1) PROJECT ASSESSMENT.—The Director shall require each institution of higher education receiving assistance under this section to implement project-based assessment that facilitates program evaluation under paragraph (2) and that assesses the impact of the project on achieving the purpose stated in subsection (b)(1), as well as on institutional policies and practices.

(2) PROGRAM EVALUATION.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall award at least 1 grant or contract to an independent evaluative organization to—

(A) develop metrics for measuring the impact of the program authorized under this section on—

(i) the number of students enrolled;

(ii) student academic achievement, including quantifiable measurements of students' mastery of content and skills;

(iii) persistence to degree completion, including students who transfer from science, mathematics, engineering, and technology programs to programs in other academic disciplines; and

(iv) placement during the first year after degree completion in post-graduate education or career pathways; and

(B) conduct an evaluation of the impacts of the program described in subparagraph (A), including a comparison of the funded projects to identify best practices with respect to achieving the purpose stated in subsection (b)(1).

(3) DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—The Director, at least once each year, shall disseminate information on the activities and the results of the projects assisted under this section, including best practices identified pursuant to paragraph (2)(B), to participating institutions of higher education and other interested institutions of higher education.

(e) UNDERREPRESENTED GROUPS.—In carrying out the program authorized by this section the Director shall strive to increase the number of students receiving baccalaureate degrees, concentrations, or certifications in the physical or information sciences, mathematics, engineering, or technology who come from groups underrepresented in these fields.

(f) REPORTS.—

(1) LIST.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall develop, and disseminate to institutions of higher education, a list of examples of existing institutional and government efforts relevant to the purpose stated in subsection (b)(1).

(2) INTERIM PROGRESS REPORT.—At the end of the third year of the program authorized under this section, the Director shall transmit to the Congress an interim progress report of the evaluation conducted under subsection (d)(2).

(3) FINAL REPORT.—Not later than 6 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a final report of the evaluation conducted under subsection (d)(2).

(g) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director shall establish an advisory committee, that includes significant representation from industry and academic leaders, for the grant program authorized under this section. The advisory committee shall—

(A) assist the Director in securing active industry, and State and local government, participation in the program;

(B) recommend to the Director innovative approaches to achieving the purpose stated in subsection (b)(1); and

(C) advise the Director regarding program metrics, implementation and performance of the program, and program progress reports.

(2) DURATION.—Section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the advisory committee established under this subsection.

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation to carry out this section—

(1) $25,000,000 for fiscal year 2003; and

(2) such sums as may be necessary thereafter.

(i) RELATED PROGRAMS.—The Director shall give consideration to achieving the purpose stated in subsection (b)(1) by awarding grants to institutions participating in the Louis Stokes Alliances for Minority Participation.

SEC. 5. INSTITUTIONAL REFORM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall award grants, on a merit-reviewed, competitive basis, to institutions of higher education to expand previously implemented reforms of undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, or technology education that have been demonstrated to have been successful in increasing the number and quality of students studying and receiving associate or baccalaureate degrees in science, mathematics, engineering, or technology.

(b) USES OF FUNDS.—Activities supported by grants under this section may include—

(1) expansion of successful reform efforts beyond a single course or group of courses to achieve reform within an entire academic unit;

(2) expansion of successful reform efforts beyond a single academic unit to other science, mathematics, engineering, or technology academic units within an institution;

(3) creation of multidisciplinary courses or programs that formalize collaborations for the purpose of improved student instruction and research in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology;

(4) expansion of undergraduate research opportunities beyond a particular laboratory, course, or academic unit to engage multiple academic units in providing multidisciplinary research opportunities for undergraduate students;

(5) expansion of innovative tutoring or mentoring programs proven to enhance student recruitment or persistence to degree completion in science, mathematics, engineering, or technology;

(6) improvement of undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education for nonmajors, including teacher education majors; and

(7) implementation of technology-driven reform efforts, including the installation of technology to facilitate such reform, that directly impact undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, or technology instruction or research experiences.

(c) SELECTION PROCESS.—

(1) APPLICATIONS.—An institution of higher education seeking a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Director at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Director may require. The application shall include, at a minimum—

(A) a description of the proposed reform effort;

(B) a description of the previously implemented reform effort that will serve as the basis for the proposed reform effort and evidence of success of that previous effort, including data on student recruitment, persistence to degree completion, and academic achievement;

(C) evidence of active participation in the proposed project by individuals who were central to the success of the previously implemented reform effort; and

(D) evidence of institutional support for, and commitment to, the proposed reform effort, including a description of existing or planned institutional policies and practices regarding faculty hiring, promotion, tenure, and teaching assignment that reward faculty contributions to undergraduate education equal to, or greater than, scholarly scientific research.

(2) REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—In evaluating applications submitted under paragraph (1), the Director shall consider at a minimum—

(A) the evidence of past success in implementing undergraduate education reform and the likelihood of success in undertaking the proposed expanded effort;

(B) the extent to which the faculty, staff, and administrators are committed to making the proposed institutional reform a priority of the participating academic unit;

(C) the degree to which the proposed reform will contribute to change in institutional culture and policy such that a greater value is placed on faculty engagement in undergraduate education and that a commensurate reward structure is implemented to recognize faculty for their scholarly work in this area; and

(D) the likelihood that the institution will sustain or expand the reform beyond the period of the grant.

(3) GRANT DISTRIBUTION.—The Director shall ensure, to the extent practicable, that grants awarded under this section are made to a variety of types of institutions of higher education.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation to carry out this section $15,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

SEC. 6. FACULTY DEVELOPMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall award grants, on a merit-reviewed, competitive basis, to—

(1) institutions of higher education;

(2) eligible nonprofit organizations; or

(3) consortia of institutions and organizations described in paragraphs (1) and (2), for professional development of undergraduate faculty in support of improved undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education.

(b) USES OF FUNDS.—Activities supported by grants under this section may include—

(1) support for individuals to participate in scholarly activities aimed at improving undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education including—

(A) sabbatical funding, including partial or full support for salary, benefits, and supplies, for faculty participating in scholarly research in—

(i) science, mathematics, engineering, or technology;

(ii) the science of learning; or

(iii) assessment and evaluation related to undergraduate instruction and student academic achievement;

(B) stipend support for graduate students and post-doctoral fellows to participate in instructional or evaluative activities at primarily undergraduate institutions; and

(C) release time from teaching for faculty engaged in the development, implementation, and assessment of undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education reform activities following participation in a sabbatical opportunity or faculty development program described in this subsection; and

(2) support for institutions to develop, implement, and assess faculty development programs focused on improved instruction, mentoring, evaluation, and support of undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology students, including costs associated with—

(A) stipend support or release time for faculty and staff engaged in the development, delivery, and assessment of the faculty development program;

(B) stipend support or release time for faculty, graduate students, or post-doctoral fellows from the host institution or external institutions who are engaged as participants in such faculty development programs; and

(C) support for materials, supplies, travel expenses, and consulting fees associated with the development, delivery, and assessment of such faculty development programs.

(c) APPLICATIONS.—An entity seeking a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Director at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Director may require. The application shall include, at a minimum—

(1) a description of the activities to be carried out under the proposed project and the projected impact of the project on undergraduate majors and nonmajors enrolled in science, mathematics, engineering, or technology courses or programs;

(2) a plan for assessment of the outcomes of the proposed project;

(3) a plan for dissemination of information regarding the activities and outcomes of the proposed project; and

(4) evidence of institutional support for implementation of the proposed project, including commitment to appropriate faculty sabbaticals and release time from teaching.

(d) ANNUAL MEETING.—The Director shall convene an annual meeting of awardees under this section to foster greater national information dissemination and collaboration in the area of undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are to be authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation to carry out this section $3,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

SEC. 7. ACCESS TO RESEARCH-GRADE INSTRUMENTATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall award grants, on a merit-reviewed, competitive basis, to institutions of higher education to support the acquisition of research-grade instrumentation and to support training related to the use of that instrumentation. Instruments provided through awards under this section shall be used primarily for undergraduate research, undergraduate instruction, or both, in science, mathematics, engineering, or technology.

(b) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Grants may be awarded under this section only to institutions of higher education that award fewer than 10 doctoral degrees per year in disciplines for which the National Science Foundation provides research support.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are to be authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation to carry out this section $10,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

SEC. 8. UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH EXPERIENCES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director shall award grants, on a merit-reviewed, competitive basis, to institutions of higher education, eligible nonprofit organizations, or consortia thereof to establish sites that provide research experiences for 10 or more undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, or technology students. The Director shall ensure that—

(1) at least half of the students participating at each site funded under this section shall be recruited from institutions of higher education where research activities in science, mathematics, engineering, or technology are limited or nonexistent;

(2) the awards provide undergraduate research experiences in a wide range of science, mathematics, engineering, or technology disciplines;

(3) awards support a variety of projects including independent investigator-led projects, multidisciplinary projects, and multiinstitutional projects (including virtual projects);

(4) students participating in the projects have mentors, including during the academic year, to help connect the students' research experiences to the overall academic course of study and to help students achieve success in courses of study leading to a baccalaureate degree in science, mathematics, engineering, or technology;

(5) mentors and students are supported with appropriate summer salary or stipends; and

(6) all student participants are tracked through receipt of the undergraduate degree and for at least 1 year thereafter.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation to carry out this section $10,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

SEC. 9. DISSEMINATION OF PROJECT INFORMATION.

The Director shall ensure that all National Science Foundation-sponsored undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, or technology education projects, including those sponsored by National Science Foundation research directorates, shall disseminate via the Internet, at a minimum, the following information:

(1) Scope, goals, and objectives of each project.

(2) Activities, methodologies, and practices developed and implemented.

(3) Outcomes, both positive and negative, of project assessment activities.

SEC. 10. EVALUATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director, through the Research, Evaluation and Communication Division of the Education and Human Resources Directorate of the National Science Foundation, shall evaluate the effectiveness of all undergraduate science, mathematics, engineering, or technology education activities supported by the National Science Foundation in increasing the number and quality of students, including students from groups underrepresented in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology fields, studying and receiving associate or baccalaureate degrees in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology. In conducting the evaluation, the Director shall consider information on—

(1) the number of students enrolled;

(2) student academic achievement, including quantifiable measurements of students' mastery of content and skills;

(3) persistence to degree completion, including students who transfer from science, mathematics, engineering, and technology programs to programs in other academic disciplines; and

(4) placement during the first year after degree completion in post-graduate education or career pathways.

(b) ASSESSMENT BENCHMARKS AND TOOLS.—The Director, through the Research, Evaluation and Communication Division of the Education and Human Resources Directorate of the National Science Foundation, shall establish a common set of assessment benchmarks and tools, and shall enable every National Science Foundation-sponsored project to incorporate the use of these benchmarks and tools in their project-based assessment activities.

(c) DISSEMINATION OF EVALUATION RESULTS.—The results of the evaluations required under subsection (a) shall be made available to the public.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, and once every 3 years thereafter, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a report containing the results of evaluations under subsection (a).

SEC. 11. NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES STUDY ON UNDERGRADUATE RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION.

(a) STUDY.—Not later than 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall enter into an arrangement with the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences to perform a study on the factors that influence undergraduate students to enter and persist to degree completion in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology programs or to leave such programs and matriculate to other academic programs, as reported by students.

(b) TRANSMITTAL TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall transmit to the Congress a report containing the results of the study under subsection (a).

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation for carrying out this section $700,000 for fiscal year 2003, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 12. MINORITY-SERVING INSTITUTIONS UNDERGRADUATE PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) The Director shall establish a program to award grants to Hispanic-Serving Institutions, Historically Black Colleges and Universities, Alaska Native-Serving Institutions, Native Hawaiian-Serving Institutions, and tribally controlled colleges and universities to enhance the quality of undergraduate science, mathematics, and engineering education at such institutions and to increase the retention and graduation rates of students pursuing baccalaureate degrees in science, mathematics, or engineering.

(2) Grants shall be awarded under this section on a merit-reviewed, competitive basis.

(b) PROGRAM COMPONENTS.—Grants awarded under this section shall support—

(1) activities to improve courses and curriculum in science, mathematics, or engineering disciplines;

(2) faculty development, including support for—

(A) sabbaticals and exchange programs to improve the faculty's research competency and knowledge of technological advances;

(B) professional development workshops on innovative teaching practices and assessment;

(C) visiting faculty, including researchers from industry; and

(D) faculty reassigned time or release time to mentor students or to participate in curriculum reform and academic enhancement activities;

(3) stipends for undergraduate students participating in research activities in science, mathematics, or engineering disciplines on-campus or off-campus at industrial, governmental, or academic research laboratories; and

(4) other activities that are consistent with subsection (a)(1), as determined by the Director.

(c) APPLICATION.—An institution seeking funding under this section shall submit an application to the Director at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Director may require.

SEC. 13. ADVANCED TECHNOLOGICAL EDUCATION PROGRAM.

(a) CORE SCIENCE AND MATHEMATICS COURSES.—Section 3(a) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 1862i(a)) is amended—

(1) by inserting “, and to improve the quality of their core education courses in science and mathematics” after “education in advanced-technology fields”;

(2) in paragraph (1) by inserting “and in core science and mathematics courses” after “advanced-technology fields”; and

(3) in paragraph (2) by striking “in advanced-technology fields” and inserting “who provide instruction in science, mathematics, and advanced-technology fields”.

(b) ARTICULATION PARTNERSHIPS.—Section 3(c)(1)(B) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 1862i(c)(1)(B)) is amended—

(1) by striking “and” at the end of clause (i);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by adding after clause (ii) the following new clauses:

“(iii) provide students with research experiences at bachelor-degree-granting institutions participating in the partnership, including stipend support for students participating in summer programs; and

“(iv) provide faculty mentors for students participating in activities under clause (iii), including summer salary support for faculty mentors.”.

(c) ADVANCED TECHNOLOGICAL EDUCATION ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director shall establish an advisory committee on science, mathematics, and technology education at community colleges consisting of non-Federal members, including representatives from academia and industry. The advisory committee shall review, and provide the Director with an assessment of, activities carried out under the Advanced Technological Education Program (in this section referred to as the “Program”), including—

(A) conformity of the Program to the requirements of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992;

(B) the effectiveness of activities supported under the Program in strengthening the scientific and technical education and training capabilities of community colleges;

(C) the effectiveness of the National Science Foundation and institutions receiving awards under the Program in disseminating information to other community colleges about activities carried out under the Program and about model curricula and teaching methods developed under the Program;

(D) the balance of resources allocated under the Program for support of national centers of excellence, individual institution grants, and articulation partnerships; and

(E) other issues identified by the Director. The advisory committee shall make recommendations to the Director for improvements to the Program based on its reviews and assessments.

(2) ADVISORY COMMITTEE REPORTS.—The advisory committee established under paragraph (1) shall report annually to the Director and to Congress on the findings and recommendations resulting from the reviews and assessments conducted in accordance with paragraph (1).

(3) DURATION.—Section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the advisory committee established under this subsection.

(d) NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION REPORT.—Within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director shall transmit a report to Congress on—

(1) efforts by the National Science Foundation and awardees under the Program to disseminate information about the results of projects;

(2) the effectiveness of national centers of scientific and technical education established under section 3(b) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 in serving as national and regional clearinghouses of information and models for best practices in undergraduate science, mathematics, and technology education; and

(3) efforts to satisfy the requirement of section 3(f)(4) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Science Foundation—

(1) for activities to improve core science and mathematics education in accordance with section 3(a) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 1862i(a)), as amended by subsection (a) of this section, $5,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007;

(2) for acquisition of instrumentation in accordance with section 3(a)(4) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992—

(A) $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2003;

(B) $3,500,000 for fiscal year 2004;

(C) $4,000,000 for fiscal year 2005;

(D) $4,500,000 for fiscal year 2006; and

(E) $5,000,000 for fiscal year 2007; and

(3) for support for research experiences for undergraduate students in accordance with section 3(c)(1)(B) of the Scientific and Advanced-Technology Act of 1992 (42 U.S.C. 1862i(c)(1)(B)), as amended by subsection (b) of this section, $750,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT).

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3130 proposes a simple and direct solution to a clear and urgent problem. The problem is that fewer and fewer American college students are majoring in mathematics, engineering, technology, or science, particularly in the physical sciences. This is a source of growing concern for many reasons.

First and most obviously, the Nation needs to constantly replenish its supply of scientists, mathematicians, and engineers to have a workforce that can compete in this increasingly technological world. The U.S. cannot assume that it can rely forever on immigrants, foreign students, and temporary emergency visa programs to meet its long-term workforce needs. Yet that is exactly what we are doing right now.

But the problem goes beyond filling jobs that explicitly call for someone with a science degree. In today's world, just about every job has a component that is informed by science and technology, from the assembly line to the boardroom. Yet we have fewer and fewer Americans who have the background to understand and analyze technical information.

Indeed, just to be an active citizen today requires more scientific background than was the case just a few years ago. Just think of how often this body turns to institutions like the National Academy of Sciences because so many policy questions today require a firm grounding in science. So we need to have more, not fewer, Americans trained in science and technology fields if we are to be a competitive economy and if we are to have a skilled workforce and an active polity.

Now, reversing the current trends which have long been in the making is not easy. Many of the problems begin as early as elementary school; and this House has passed several major bills to address those problems, including H.R. 1 from the Committee on Education and the Workforce and H.R. 1858 from the Committee on Science.

But not all of our problems reside at the K through 12 level. The statistics show that many students enter college intending to major in science, math, and engineering, but change course before declaring a major. Some of these students, of course, may just not be right for the field, but the attrition rate is far too high for that to be the whole story. The problem is, rather, that our colleges and universities by and large do not do enough to encourage students to remain in science, math, and engineering. Indeed, sometimes students are actually discouraged.

We cannot afford to have that continue. H.R. 3130 takes aim at this problem directly by providing incentives for colleges and universities, including community colleges, to increase the number and quality of science, math, engineering, and technology majors. Under the bill, the National Science Foundation would provide grants to improve undergraduate science, math, and engineering education that are contingent on the grantee increasing the number of graduating majors in those fields by a specific amount without reducing quality. This is a direct and targeted approach that should make a real difference in the culture of our Nation's colleges and universities.

I should note that NSF is already beginning to try this approach. Congress appropriated money for fiscal year 2002 to begin implementing H.R. 3130 on an experimental basis in advance of the bill's enactment, and the President has proposed continuing the program next year; but the program cannot be fully ramped up without this bill.

H.R. 3130 also creates a number of other important programs to improve undergraduate education, including grants to enable colleges and universities to expand successful, innovative undergraduate programs; grants to enable faculty to improve their teaching skills; and grants to help colleges purchase new research equipment for undergraduates. It also expands the National Science Foundation's summer research program for undergraduates.

Finally, the bill establishes a rigorous evaluation program so we can really learn what approaches to improving undergraduate education work and which ones do not. We have been flying by the seat of our pants for too long in this regard, and this bill will finally provide some reliable data and analysis on undergraduate reform.

So H.R. 3130 is a good bill that promotes targeted steps to improve undergraduate education that will make a real difference.

As with all good bills, this one reflects the work of many hands. I want to start by thanking the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) and his staff for working so cooperatively with us on this bill, as they have on all education legislation.

I want to particularly thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), the ranking minority member of the Committee, and the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON), the primary Democrat sponsor of this bill, and all our minority Members for their contributions to this bill which passed in our committee by voice vote because it reflected ideas that originated on both sides of the aisle.

I want to mention two Members of the minority specifically, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. MATHESON) and the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF), as they should have been mentioned as cosponsors of the bill, and I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and other Texans on the committee for making sure that others in their State could compete fairly for grants under this bill, even though some Texas programs are organized differently from those in other States.

I also want to thank many companies and high-tech industry groups such as Tech Net and higher education groups such as the American Council on Education that have actively supported this bill and helped us get it to the floor. This bill is supported, and it deserves everyone's support because it has widespread impact. I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Undergraduate Science, Mathematics, Engineering, and Technology Education Improvement Act, H.R. 3130, as reported from the Committee on Science and as described very adequately by our chairman.

The bill was developed in a very bipartisan way, in keeping with the past practices of the Committee on Science in the area of science education legislation. I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman BOEHLERT) and those with whom he works, his staff, for working with us on this side of the aisle to produce this very excellent legislative product.

Basically, the bill will help increase the number of students who are graduating in science, math, and engineering, and will help improve the quality of undergraduate science education.

Mr. Speaker, this bill builds on existing NSF programs that have proven their effectiveness, such as Research Experiences for Undergraduates. Similarly, the bill will provide support for the expansion of successful small-scale undergraduate education reform activities that some colleges and universities have been engaged in.

H.R. 3130 will also implement programmatic recommendations of the Committee on Science, those that they have received through a long series of science education hearings going back to the last Congress.

I would like also to point out that the bill incorporates provisions advanced by my colleague, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD), as in his bill, H.R. 4680. These provisions are focused on helping community colleges improve their science and technology offerings, which is important because community colleges enroll such a significant proportion of all undergraduate students.

Finally, the bill includes the establishment of an educational program at NSF that will target minority-serving institutions. This program, which was advanced by my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. BACA), will help address the serious problems of underrepresentation by minorities in the science and technology fields. The Nation just cannot afford to lose the talents of any segment of society if we are to produce a workforce with the range of skills and capabilities that are going to be needed in the post-industrial world.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support H.R. 3130 and commend it for favorable consideration by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) who is the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Research of the Committee on Science.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 3130, the Undergraduate Science, Mathematics, Engineering and Technology Education Improvement Act. I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH) for working with me and my colleagues in a very bipartisan manner to develop the legislation now before the House.

This bill focuses on two important issues. The first is to attract and retain more students in associate and baccalaureate degree programs in critical science and technology fields. The second issue is to ensure that all undergraduate students receive a quality education experience in their science and technology courses, regardless of the career path they ultimately choose.

One important component for dealing with the problem of declining numbers of students pursuing careers in science and math and engineering for the long term is to increase participation in these areas by individuals from underrepresented groups. Under the Technology Talent Act, the National Science Foundation is required to ensure that projects are supported that would lead to increases in the numbers of science degrees by individuals from underrepresented groups.

The NSF is also encouraged to make use of existing Louis Stokes Alliance for Minority Participation program, which has a 10-year track record in attracting and maintaining minority students in science-related degree programs. H.R. 3130 also authorizes a new Minority-Serving Institutions undergraduate program to build up the capacity for these institutions.

In other provisions, the bill will help expand undergraduate education reform efforts at institutions of higher education throughout the Nation that have demonstrated successful records of accomplishment. It provides professional development opportunities for undergraduate faculty and expands the availability of research experiences for the undergraduate students, including students at nonresearch institutions. The bill also encourages the inclusion of innovative public-private partnerships by enabling consortia to participate in the grants program which has worked very, very well in the State of Texas and in my area.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that H.R. 3130 will put in place a range of programs and activities that will strengthen undergraduate education in science and technology and will help provide the human resources that this Nation will need for economic strength and security in the postindustrial world.

I strongly support this legislation. I commend it to my colleagues and ask for their support in the passage by this House.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON), a member of the committee.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank our distinguished leader for the opportunity to speak here on the floor this afternoon.

Let me begin by applauding the efforts of the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), who has done an outstanding job. It has been my high honor and pleasure to work with him over the past 3 years, and in the last year specifically, as this legislation has been developed.

It has been a longstanding concern of mine and clearly my constituents and people all around this country who understand intuitively, as the chairman does, the need that exists out there to address this glaring inequity that has existed in terms of making sure that we have a pipeline that is full of students who have expertise in math, science, and engineering. Because of the obvious shortcomings in this area, we risk this Nation's becoming a second-rate economic power if we do not address these concerns forthrightly.

This bill does exactly that. And typical of his manner, the chairman once again has reached out and done this in a bipartisan manner, garnering the best ideas from both sides of the aisle, which in my humble estimation always leads to the best legislation.

I am proud, as well, to join my colleagues on this side of the aisle, especially the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON), the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL) and the gentleman from California (Mr. HONDA), as well, who have fought hard to make sure that issues like granting minorities greater access and greater funding in these specific areas that are much needed in order for us to compete, were attended to.

Again, I would like to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) for his efforts as well.

The defense of this Nation and its continued economic prosperity are inextricably tied and linked to our education system. And by providing an opportunity and incentives that will provide us with the kind of dedicated members of our society entering into the field of math and science and engineering, this bill takes a bold step in terms of accomplishing that specific goal. I am proud to stand here on the floor of the House today and endorse this concept and ask all of my colleagues for their unanimous support of a great bill put forward by a great leader.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BACA), a member of our subcommittee.

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3130.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to commend the minority chairman and the chairman for a bipartisan bill that really addresses the needs of our Nation. And I say the needs of our Nation because when we look at technology, we look at our future and we look at a vision of where we need to be, and that is preparing students in the area of science, technology, engineering and mathematics. We all realize it has declined, but yet the priorities were set there because a vision is there for our Nation, and that is to make sure that we prepare our students to make sure that they can guide us, because they are our future.

This bill addresses the problem by funding a program at the NSF to provide grants to institutions of higher education. These grants will be used to increase the number and quality of graduates from physical science, mathematics, engineering and technology degree and transfer programs.

Just as importantly, this bill recognizes that the institutions that serve unique purposes also have unique needs. Hispanic-serving institutes, historically black colleges and universities, Alaska-native-serving institutions, native-Hawaiian-serving institutions, and tribally controlled colleges and universities serve that special purpose.

These institutions educate and train underserved and often overlooked segments of our population. But this segment of the population will not be overlooked by this bill because this bill addresses those needs. And I want to commend the chairman for doing that, because it is about inclusion of everyone; and this bill includes everybody in this process. Inclusion and making sure that no child, whether it is an adult, is left behind, and this includes that.

Today, we are establishing a program that would accomplish two things. First, the program would award grants to minority-serving institutions to enhance the quality of undergraduate science, mathematics, and engineering education at these institutions. These grants also increase the retention and graduation rates of students pursuing bachelors degrees in science, mathematics or engineering.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that we consider this unique role and this unique need of minority-serving institutions when we consider this important piece of legislation. I ask my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this bipartisan bill that is good for our Nation and good for our country.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude by saying if a forensic expert were brought into the Committee on Science and asked to examine this piece of legislation, he would find on it the fingerprints of just about every single member of the committee, Democrat and Republican alike. The hallmark of this committee, as has been mentioned during this debate, is the inclusion. We want the ideas from everyone on the committee. I am proud to report to my colleagues in the House that this is an engaged committee. People are involved in helping to shape responsible public policy. I am very proud to serve in the capacity of chairman of a committee that is serving with such distinction addressing the needs of the American people.

We have just been through 10 years, from March of 1991 to the end of the first quarter of last year, the longest period of sustained growth in modern history for the economy. That growth was largely driven by science, math, engineering, the technical people who are part of this Information Revolution. We had a slight downturn last year, and then we had 9-11, but we are on the rebound now.

If we are to experience, to realize, the next era of sustained growth in our economy, we are going to have to be dependent on our own people, our people who are well trained, our universities that teach these very important subjects. We cannot rely on just people from abroad to come rescue us, and that is too often the case now. We have got to grow our own, right here.

And so I am proud to present this bill to the House, to my colleagues, and to urge its adoption.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3130, the Technology Talent Act of 2002.

For some time now, we have recognized the need to improve math and science education in America. The Science Committee, and the Research Subcommittee which I chair, has taken one of the lead roles in advancing these reforms. Last year, the House passed legislation generated by our Committee, the Math and Science Partnerships Act, that authorizes a number of programs at the National Science Foundation aimed at improving K-12 education.

More recently, we have turned our attention to an equally important problem: improving math, science and engineering education at the undergraduate level. Our Subcommittee held hearings to identify the problems of our current educational system, and more importantly, to understand how to encourage and support changes that will provide solutions to these problems that benefit all students.

What we learned was that there is no single problem that has resulted in the talent gap and workforce challenges we face today, but rather, an assortment of problems that demand a variety of solutions. Much of the problem is simply a supply and demand issue, the marketplace is increasingly demanding a workforce skilled in the sciences and engineering, while the supply of people capable of filling those positions has remained flat.

This has forced us to look to foreign students to help fill the gap, and we now are in a situation where only half of all engineering doctoral degrees in the U.S. are awarded to American students, and a similar disproportionate number of all high-tech jobs are filled by foreign workers.

One task that doesn't require scientific or engineering expertise and that can even be understood by politicians is that if we don't fill the current talent gap in these fields, we risk damaging America's position the global economic, technological, and scientific leader.

In response to these challenges, the Science Committee has put forth the bipartisan effort that is before us today—the Technology Talent Act. It establishes a performance-based competitive grant program at the National Science Foundation that would provide funding for institutions of higher learning to implement innovative proposals designed to increase the number of undergraduates graduating in math, science, engineering, and technology.

It also addresses other areas such as institutional reform and faculty development, and authorizes NSF to provide awards to universities for improving their research instrumentation and provide undergraduate students valuable research experience.

The bill takes advantage of NSF's competitive, peer-reviewed system, allowing institutions to develop their own proposals to maximize results and promote creativity.

The legislation also emphasizes accountability and regular program evaluation, institutions that fail to meet the goals set forth in their proposals may have their funding terminated or reduced.

It is clear that if we want to maintain our competitive edge in the world—if we want to remain the top economic power, the top military force, and ensure the safety of our citizens from terrorist aggression—it is critical that we do a better job of preparing our students for careers in science, mathematics, engineering, and technology. The Technology Talent Act provides the reforms necessary to meet these challenges.

I would like to thank the Chairman for his leadership on this legislation, and I urge all members to support this bill.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3130, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and submit extraneous material in the RECORD on the bill just passed, H.R. 3130.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS FOR SHARING PERSONNEL TO FIGHT WILDFIRES

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5017) to amend the Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act to facilitate the ability of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries for the sharing of personnel to fight wildfires.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5017

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS FOR SHARING PERSONNEL TO FIGHT WILDFIRES.

The Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act (42 U.S.C. 1856m et seq.), as amended by the Wildfire Suppression Assistance Act, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“SEC. 5. SPECIAL TERMS FOR RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS FOR SHARING PERSONNEL TO FIGHT WILDFIRES.

“(a) TORT LIABILITY.—In entering into a reciprocal agreement with a foreign country under section 3, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior may include as part of the agreement a provision that personnel furnished under the agreement to provide wildfire presuppression or suppression services will be considered, for purposes of tort liability, employees of the country receiving such services when the personnel provide services under the agreement.

“(b) ASSUMPTION OF LIABILITY; REMEDIES.—The Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior shall not enter into any agreement under section 3 containing the provision described in subsection (a) unless the foreign country (either directly or through the fire organization that is a party to the agreement) agrees to assume any and all liability for the acts or omissions of American firefighters engaged in providing wildfire presuppression or suppression services under the agreement in the foreign country. The only remedies for acts or omissions committed while providing services under the agreement shall be those provided under the laws of the host country, and those remedies shall be the exclusive remedies for any claim arising out of providing such services in a foreign country.

“(c) PROTECTIONS.—Neither the firefighter, the sending country, nor any organization associated with the firefighter shall be subject to any action whatsoever pertaining to or arising out of providing wildfire presuppression or suppression services under a reciprocal agreement under section 3.”

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 5017, introduced by my good friend and colleague from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) to facilitate the ability of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries for the sharing of personnel to fight wildfires.

Today, as we debate this issue, large wildfires are burning across the country. Over 3.1 million acres have already been consumed and the worst may be yet to come. This bill provides a safety net for ongoing fire-fighting efforts. During these high levels of fire activity, the wildfire agencies often run out of trained and qualified personnel available to fight these horrific blazes. This legislation would allow the U.S. to bring in skilled firefighters from around the world to aid in the suppression of these overwhelming wildfires.

It is important to point out that foreign nationals can only be used when all domestic sources are fully utilized. As I speak, there are over 12,000 personnel committed to fire-fighting duties. Depending on the number and nature of the fires, that number may reach 20,000 personnel in the next couple of weeks. If this occurs, we will most likely deplete our domestic fire-fighting sources. The next step would be to inquire for help from our international neighbors in battling the wildfires or risk losing more property and life.

Unfortunately, current law exposes foreign fire agencies to unreasonable liability when responding to requests by the U.S. Government during a national emergency. Consequently, exchanges or requests for assistance during the critical part of fire season will not be honored by foreign firefighters. This bill provides foreign agencies and their firefighters coverage from liability during performance of official duties and will not expose the U.S. Government to liability or death or disability for foreign nationals that are covered under the foreign agencies' normal insurance policies.

This bill supplies the protection needed in order for foreign fire management agencies to provide firefighters to the United States. It does not grant special protection to foreign firefighters. It simply provides the same level of protection that we give our own firefighters and the firefighters we use from State, county, volunteer and municipal fire agencies for Federal firefighting efforts.

This legislation strives to ensure that we will have the ability to commit more personnel as fire situations escalate. It ensures our Nation's commitment to combating wildfires and provides assistance and relief to our domestic firefighters.

I urge the Members of this body to join me in taking this important step today. By passing H.R. 5017, we can renew our efforts for wildfire suppression and build strong working relationships with our foreign counterparts. Join me in declaring a strong commitment to firefighting.

I congratulate my colleague from Colorado for this fine legislation and urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5017.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5017, legislation to amend the Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act. As we have heard, this legislation is designed to promote and facilitate the implementation of reciprocal firefighting agreements with foreign countries for the purpose of sharing personnel to fight wildfires.

Specifically, H.R. 5017 will require that personnel furnished under reciprocal firefighting agreements be considered employees of the country receiving the assistance for purposes of tort liability. Mr. Speaker, these agreements with foreign fire organizations are essential to suppress wildfire activities within our national forest system.

At the height of the forest fire season in the United States, we may have up to 12,200 firefighting personnel on the ground executing various fire suppression duties. The conditions that these men and women face often demand speedy alterations to existing firefighting plans if the forest fire takes an unexpected path. In order to minimize the risk of loss of life and property, our firefighting crews need experienced supervision and guidance at all times.

Unfortunately, with 244 significant forest fires burning simultaneously, the supervisory capacity of the U.S. Forest Service and the U.S. Department of the Interior are stretched to the limits. As a remedy to this problem, the United States has sought the assistance of mid-level managers from Australia and New Zealand by entering into reciprocal firefighting agreements.

H.R. 5017 would eliminate the risk of tort liability to foreign firefighters and their governments while foreign personnel are providing assistance to the United States. The foreign firefighters would be considered to be Federal employees for the limited purpose of securing them coverage under the Federal Tort Claims Act.

This legislation would also require that foreign countries or States extend a reciprocal benefit to United States firefighters in the event the United States provides personnel to them, and it would make the laws of the host country the only source of remedies available for acts and omissions in firefighting activities in the host country. Under this legislation, foreign firefighters can readily assist us without the fear of being subjected to lawsuits.

This legislation further provides that the tort liability protection would extend to not only the firefighter but also the individual's home country and any organization associated with the firefighter.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation removes barriers to the effective implementation of reciprocal firefighting agreements with foreign fire organizations. It will increase the effectiveness of our forest fire suppression activities. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

My district in the State of Virginia has been struck by many severe forest fires this season, but thankfully nothing like what has been experienced in the State of Colorado, and I am sure that that accounts for the leadership that the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. McINNIS) has shown in introducing this legislation. He also serves as chairman of the Subcommittee on Forests and Forest Health of the Committee on Resources.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. McINNIS).

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time, and I would like to first of all begin my remarks by saying that I appreciate the gentleman from Virginia's time, his subcommittee, and obviously his attention to this matter and the urgency of getting this bill passed. It is a critical bill.

I appreciate the comments the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) made. They were all exactly on point. I think he has explained very well the crisis we face.

My district is the Third District of the State of Colorado. That district geographically is larger than the State of Florida. It is unique in that it is the highest place on the continent, and we do not usually see the kind of fires because of the elevations that we are at in that district, we do not usually see the intensity of the fire that we are seeing this year.

That intensity, of course, has been brought on through a couple of different factors. One, we are experiencing the worst drought we have seen probably in 100 years in Colorado, and two, unfortunately, we have had a number of national environmental organizations who have, in my opinion, prevented us from thinning the forest in such a way that we can properly manage these forests, but those are issues for another day.

The issue before us here today, as explained by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) and as explained by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE), is the fact that emergency personnel, our firefighters, this is a very difficult task to undertake.

Last year, as my colleagues will recall, we appropriated a dramatic increase in the firefighting budgets back here. We authorized a hiring of thousands of new firefighters. We have actually purchased 10,000 new pieces of fire equipment which range in everything from tankers to bulldozers and so on, but this year, even that is not enough, and we need some assistance.

There is no effort whatsoever nor any actual occurrence of any displacement of any American worker by using foreign assistance. In fact, for many years we have used this foreign assistance primarily with Australia and New Zealand, and that is pretty self-explanatory in that Australia and New Zealand have opposite seasons of the United States. So while we are in our summer, right now they are in their winter, and we actually have an exchange program that is in place.

Unfortunately, the Australians became very concerned, and I think legitimately concerned, about the fact of their firefighters being in the United States, with the kind of litigious society that we have. We have lots of lawsuits filed in this country, many, many, many, many times more than any other country in the world, and Australia and New Zealand are reluctant to send their firefighters up here, then to see their firefighters trying to help our country fight our fires ending up being named in litigation.

So this bill is very, very important for us to pass on an immediate basis. This bill was introduced by me about a week ago. It is very uncommon in the House of Representatives for a bill to go through the House this quickly. The only way we were able to do that, frankly, is through the assistance of not only the chairman and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), the ranking member, but I also want to thank five other members of the body; the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), who is chairman of Committee on Resources; the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), chairman of the Committee on International Relations; the gentleman from Texas (Mr. COMBEST), the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture; and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary; as well as the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), who gave a great deal of effort and who himself has suffered a 450,000-acre fire in Arizona.

Before I finish my comments here, and I do have to read some comments for the RECORD, I do want to point out that the State of Colorado and the State of Arizona are open for business. I wish I would have brought my satellite picture. Despite all the stories my colleagues have heard about Colorado, if we took a look at what actually has burned in Colorado, we would see it is significantly less than 1 percent. Unfortunately, across the country, because of the media coverage of these horrible fires, these fires have people thinking the whole State is on fire, and we have seen a tremendous drop in our tourism, not only in Colorado but Arizona as well, for no reason at all. The majority, like I said, 99 point some percent of Colorado, is open for tourism, and it is a great place to visit, as is Arizona.

That said, I want to point out that in the season that we are facing, here are a couple of unique things. One, we go to what we call a level 5. Across this country, the national fire emergency system, our alert system goes clear to level 5. Level 5 is the highest and we are now currently in a level 5 situation. It is not unique that we go to a level 5 situation. In fact, we have done it several times in the past, but what is unique is we have never gone to a level 5 system prior to July 28. We actually went to level 5 two weeks ago. So we are almost 6 weeks, almost 6 weeks ahead of what we have ever gone to in this emergency status before.

So my colleagues can understand the importance of getting this exchange program back on track. As I said, it was already in place. We are not creating a new wheel here. It is a wheel that got taken off the track, and we are trying to put it back on the track.

I should point out also that the National Interagency Fire Center, in declaring this readiness number 5, also acknowledges the importance of these management personnel that our countries exchange.

I would ask support from my colleagues, and once again, I want to particularly thank my colleagues that helped us get this through on an expedited basis. Any one of those chairmen of any one of those committees could have slowed this bill down, could have insisted that this bill run the regular course that a bill usually runs, but every one of those chairmen, to the person and to the credit of the chairman and ranking member, understood the urgency and the importance of getting assistance out there on the ground fighting these fires.

We expect a very full fire season ahead of us. We expect, as my colleagues know, and I would point out, unfortunately, we have had fatalities so far. We had a fireman killed in Durango, and to his family we wish Godspeed. We lost five firemen not very far from my house on the highway in a vehicle accident as they were going to the scene of a fire, and Godspeed to their families as well, but we are going to get them assistance.

I would ask all of my colleagues to support this. I expect unanimous support of the bill, and I will be back with discussions on this floor to talk about the necessity of thinning forests, to talk about the litigation and the appeal process that has stopped us from thinning and managing these forests as we should. Fire must be managed. We just cannot let it go. We have seen the results of what has happened when it gets out of control, and fortunately, we have a couple of countries willing to help us out.

Again, I want to especially thank the ranking member and the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5017, a bill that would amend the Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act to enhance the ability of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries for the sharing of personnel to fight wildfires. At the outset, I want to thank five Members of this body who have been nothing short of essential in getting this bill to the House floor in very short order—Congressman JIM HANSEN, chairman of the Resources Committee, Congressman HENRY HYDE, chairman of the International Relations Committee, Congressman LARRY COMBEST, chairman of the Agriculture Committee, and Congressman JIM SENSENBRENNER, chairman of the Judiciary Committee and JEFF FLAKE. Each of these Members, and their respective staffs, were instrumental in fast tracking this legislation to the full House today, less than 2 weeks after I first introduced it.

In practical terms, H.R. 5017 would clear the way for scores of firefighters from Australia and other countries to immediately join forces with the thousands of brave Americans on the frontlines of our battle against catastrophic wildfire out West and in other parts of the country. And make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, we need all the reinforcements we can get.

The 2002 fire season is well on its way to becoming among the largest and most destructive in recorded history. It is on pace to eclipse the catastrophic 2000 fire season when 122,000 fires burned 8.5 million acres, destroying over 800 homes and structures. Already this year, we've burned well over 3 million acres, which by itself is nearly three times the average for an entire year. What's most alarming about this statistic is that, historically, wildfire burns the hottest, largest, and most frequent in the latter parts of July and into August and September. The wildfire forecast for the coming months, Mr. Speaker, is ominous indeed.

In response to this growing crisis on the national forests and public lands, the National Interagency Fire Center recently declared a national preparedness level of 5, the highest readiness threshold for our wildland firefighting agencies. This heightened readiness stage allows the Forest Service and Department of Interior agencies to more readily tap the assets of the military and other agencies not typically oriented to fighting wildfires. The Readiness 5 declaration was Uncle Sam's way of saying it's time to deploy all available resources, and pull out all available stops.

But even as we do, we would be remiss not to tap into the formidable human resources of our friends and allies overseas, many of whom have considerable experience fighting wildfire. Countries like Australia and New Zealand have particular appeal in this regard because their fire season occurs during our winter months, making their firefighters open and available during our fiery summer months.

Congress recognized this years ago with the enactment of the Temporary Emergency Wildfire Suppression Act, where it authorized the Secretaries of Interior and Agriculture to enter into reciprocal arrangements that, in essence, amount to a foreign firefighter exchange program. These reciprocal agreements allow us to borrow on the expertise of foreign firefighters when a need arises, and vice-versa.

In 2000, this authority was particularly useful. Firefighters from Australia and New Zealand fought shoulder-to-shoulder with American firefighters at a time when we quite frankly needed the help. By all accounts the exchange program was a huge success.

Which brings us to today. While the Wildfire Suppression Act has been a huge help and major success, new exchange agreements have been stalled because of legitimate liability concerns on the part of Australia and other countries with whom we have historically partnered. Our bill would address those concerns in straightforward fashion by eliminating the risk of tort liability to foreign firefighters and their governments while foreign personnel are providing assistance to the United States. It requires that foreign nations extend a reciprocal tort claims benefit to United States firefighters in the event the United States provides similar assistance to them. The proposed legislation would also deem foreign firefighters to be federal employees for the limited purpose of securing them coverage under the Federal Tort Claims Act. Finally, it would make the laws of the host country the only source of remedies available for acts and omissions in firefighting activities in the host country.

Mr. Speaker, I've been told that there are 100 or so Australian firefighters all but on the tarmac ready to fly out to the United States to join our firefighting forces pending the enactment of this legislation. This highly skilled group will provide support in the place that it's needed the most right now—management caliber firefighters directing and overseeing rank-and-file firefighters on the front lines. This bill will ensure that this area of need is met in a meaningful way for the duration of this and future fire seasons.

Mr. Speaker, this is a commonsense bill that is a real priority for Secretary Norton and Secretary Veneman, just as it is for me. I hope and trust that my colleagues will join with me in supporting it.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The other State that was referenced by the gentleman from Colorado that has been absolutely devastated by wildfires this summer is the State of Arizona, and I thank very much the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE) for his contribution to this legislation and his efforts to make sure that firefighting capabilities in the State of Arizona, as well as the rest of the country, are supplemented with foreign firefighters as we need them, and I thank him for that effort.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I do come from the State of Arizona where we have had 450,000 acres burn already this year. The entire West, as mentioned by the gentleman from Colorado, is a tinderbox at this point. We are at level 5, the first time we have reached level 5 this early in the year.

Arizona, as mentioned, lost about 600 square miles to fire. We still have a lot of Ponderosa pine forest left. We have the largest stand of Ponderosa pine forest in the country. Many of my colleagues, particularly from the East Coast, were surprised to hear that we had forests in Arizona, let alone that they were burning.

We had a horrible fire that was finally contained after 2 weeks, contained fully on Sunday. That fire is contained, but I can tell my colleagues that this season is not done, and this legislation recognizes the need to have firefighters, particularly in a management capacity, come here and to ensure that we have the forces necessary to put out these fires.

When the lightning seasons hit, we had some lightning just a couple of days ago, five new fires started quickly, had to be suppressed, and we are going to see a lot more of that this year. So it is very important that we pass this legislation.

I thank the gentleman from Colorado for introducing it and for the chairmen, as he mentioned, who moved it so quickly to this point.

We have a situation in Arizona and throughout the West where we have far too much fuel that allows these fires to burn far hotter and spread far faster than they would otherwise. These are things that we need to address as we look to the future, but for now, we need to ensure the firefighters are on the ready. That is what this legislation does.

I urge my colleagues to support it when it comes to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, In August of 2000, 68 firefighters from Australia arrived in Montana to help their American counterparts bring wildfires under control. At that time more than 70 fires were burning in 12 U.S. states that prompted the call for assistance.

After devastating wildfires in 2000, long-term agreements were negotiated with Australia and New Zealand. These agreements have not been implemented, however, due to concerns that the foreign firefighting personnel would face liability for alleged torts committed while their personnel were furnishing assistance to the U.S. Over 450,000 acres of land burned in the widely publicized fire of Arizona.

The National Interagency Fire Center has declared a state of "Preparedness Level 5"—indicating the highest level of risk and the need for the greatest degree of preparedness due to the severity of fire season conditions. For safety purposes, for every twenty firefighters on the front line of a fire there must be one management level firefighter to supervise and ensure the safety of the men in the field. Fourteen days ago when this legislation was introduced, the Hayman fire was still burning in Colorado and the Rodeo-Chediski fires were raging in Arizona. Various other fires were also burning; together they were almost expending the resources we have available to fight these blazes.

At that point there was a strong concern that there wouldn't be enough management level personnel to keep all the necessary frontline firefighters fighting the blazes. This legislation prevents that from occurring. The legislation before us makes it possible to ensure sufficient management level firefighters in the event of catastrophic fires by providing protections to firefighters, sending countries and any organization associated with the firefighter from any liability resulting from actions taking place while fighting fires here in the United States.

Also provided within the legislation is a reciprocal agreement providing the same protection to American firefighters who go to other countries to assist in fire suppression or firefighting. With the West experiencing a severe drought and one of the worst fire seasons it has ever seen on record, fire managers are expecting a busy summer.

Remove the constraints that prevent management level firefighters from ensuring we can meet the demands of this season. Support this legislation.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I urge support of the bill, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5017.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 5017, the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

IMPROPER PAYMENTS INFORMATION ACT OF 2002

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4878) to provide for reduction of improper payments by Federal agencies, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4878

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Improper Payments Information Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. ESTIMATES OF IMPROPER PAYMENTS AND REPORTS ON ACTIONS TO REDUCE THEM.

(a) IDENTIFICATION OF SUSCEPTIBLE PROGRAMS AND ACTIVITIES.—The head of each agency shall, in accordance with guidance prescribed by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, annually review all programs and activities that it administers and identify all such programs and activities that may be susceptible to significant improper payments.

(b) ESTIMATION OF IMPROPER PAYMENT.—With respect to each program and activity identified under subsection (a), the head of the agency concerned shall—

(1) estimate the annual amount of improper payments; and

(2) include that estimate in its annual budget submission.

(c) REPORTS ON ACTIONS TO REDUCE IMPROPER PAYMENTS.—With respect to any program or activity of an agency with estimated improper payments under subsection (b) that exceed one percent of the total program or activity budget or $1,000,000 annually (whichever is less), the head of the agency shall provide with the estimate under subsection (b) a report on what actions the agency is taking to reduce the improper payments, including—

(1) a statement of whether the agency has the information systems and other infrastructure it needs in order to reduce improper payments to minimal cost-effective levels;

(2) if the agency does not have such systems and infrastructure, a description of the resources the agency has requested in its budget submission to obtain the necessary information systems and infrastructure; and

(3) a description of the steps the agency has taken to ensure that agency managers (including the agency head) are held accountable for reducing improper payments.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section:

(1) AGENCY.—The term "agency" means an executive agency, as that term is defined in section 102 of title 31, United States Code.

(2) IMPROPER PAYMENT.—The term "improper payment"—

(A) means any payment that should not have been made or that was made in an incorrect amount (including overpayments and underpayments) under statutory, contractual, administrative, or other legally applicable requirements; and

(B) includes any payment to an ineligible recipient, any payment for an ineligible service, any duplicate payment, payments for services not received, and any payment that does not account for credit for applicable discounts.

(3) PAYMENT.—The term “payment” means any payment (including a commitment for future payment, such as a loan guarantee) that is—

(A) made by a Federal agency, a Federal contractor, or a governmental or other organization administering a Federal program or activity; and

(B) derived from Federal funds or other Federal resources or that will be reimbursed from Federal funds or other Federal resources.

(e) APPLICATION.—This section—

(1) applies with respect to the administration of programs, and improper payments under programs, in fiscal years after fiscal year 2002; and

(2) requires the inclusion of estimates under subsection (b)(2) only in annual budget submissions for fiscal years after fiscal year 2003.

(f) GUIDANCE BY THE OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET.—The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall prescribe guidance to implement the requirements of this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) will each control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 4878.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4878, the proposed Improper Payments Information Act of 2002, is intended to get a handle on the vexing problem of improper payments made by Federal agencies. The few agencies that do make estimates for some of their programs report improper payments of about $20 billion.

Each year, the Federal Government wastes countless billions of taxpayer funds on improper payments. Some of these payments result from fraud or abuse. Many others represent simple mistakes. What all of these improper payments have in common is that they should never have been made.

I refer to countless billions of dollars in improper payments because no one really knows the magnitude of the problem. Incredible as it may seem, Federal agencies are not required on any kind of government-wide or systematic basis to estimate how much money they spend improperly. Therefore, most do not even try. The few agencies that do make estimates for some of their programs report improper payments of about $20 billion annually, and I will say that again, $20 billion, not million dollars, billion dollars, every single year in just a handful of Federal programs.

Staggering as that figure is, it represents the tip of a very large iceberg. For example, during fiscal year 2000, the Department of Health and Human Services estimated it made more than $12 billion in improper payments in its Medicare fee-for-service program, but the figure did not include any improper payments that might have been made in the Medicaid. No one, including the General Accounting Office, has estimated that figure.

The obvious starting point toward reducing improper payments made by the Federal Government is to understand the nature and extent of the problem. The agencies and Congress must find out which programs are at risk and what causes those risks. Only then can we find effective remedies.

The President's Management Agenda for fiscal year 2002 has made the reduction of improper payments a real priority. H.R. 4878 builds upon that very first step by the Bush administration by requiring Federal agencies to identify the programs that are vulnerable to significant improper payments.

Currently, only eight agencies report on improper payments made in 13 programs out of hundreds of Federal agencies and programs. This bill would require all agencies to include in their budget submissions an estimate of improper payments for each program that might be susceptible to significant improper payments. If an agency estimates that improper payments in a program exceed $1 million a year, or 1 percent of the total program budget, whichever is lower, the agency would also have to explain what it is doing to reduce them.

Since the 104th Congress, the subcommittees I have chaired have held approximately 100 hearings on wasteful spending within the Federal Government. Time and again witnesses from the General Accounting Office and agency inspectors general have told the subcommittee that poor accounting systems and procedures have contributed to the government's serious and long-term problems involving improper payments. These hearings have clearly demonstrated the need for H.R. 4878.

In fact, at a recent subcommittee hearing, General Accounting Office witnesses stated that this legislation is critically important. Based on these hearings, the subcommittee marked up H.R. 4878 on June 18, 2002.

H.R. 4878 is a bipartisan and common-sense bill. I am pleased that the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mr. SCHAKOWSKY), and our full committee chairman, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) are among those cosponsoring the bill, and I urge all my colleagues to support this important bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am pleased to be on the floor today with the gentleman from California to support passage of this bill. I thank the chairman for his willingness to work with the Democrats on the committee to produce a bill that we can all support.

As the chairman pointed out, this is a bill to make agencies more keenly aware of the problem of improper payments and to get the agencies to address the problem at the front end. We have learned from our work on debt collection that collecting improper payments is more difficult than avoiding the mistakes in the first place. The problem is that there is no incentive for agencies either to collect debt or to avoid improper payments.

Improper payments occur in a number of ways: Agencies pay invoices more than once, some unscrupulous merchants bill agency credit cards when no purchase has been made, and the agency does not adequately monitor the bills.

Medicare is a large source of improper payments because of the conflict between the deadline for making payments and the length of time it takes to determine if the patient has private insurance. Medicaid is also a source of improper payments, in part from unscrupulous providers. However, Medicaid has yet to estimate the extent of the problem.

It is also the case that improper payments are made to individuals. These cases often arise because of difficulties in determining eligibility for a program like food stamps or Social Security disability. Often those problems are not the fault of the recipient, but come from errors in administering the program.

These programs serve the weak and downtrodden. The program rules are such that most tax accountants would have a difficult time figuring them out. It is especially important in these cases that we make sure the agency gets it right the first time. If it does not, then months or years later the agency discovers the error and tries to recapture the mispayments from the individual. This is an extreme hardship on those individuals. We must not let agency mistakes become another burden on the poor.

I hope this bill will help those agencies develop a better understanding of how these mistakes come about and correct the mistakes before they happen.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for working with us to bring this bill to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. SULLIVAN), who is a hard-working member of the subcommittee and who we are delighted to have; and before he begins, I wish to thank the gentlewoman for her kind comments and her work on this particular bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) for all his hard work in making this bill possible and making the government accountable to the people in America.

This bill is extremely important. When we talk about accountability from the Federal Government, this is exactly the kind of bill that America thinks of. An improper payment, as defined by the bill, includes overpayments, underpayments, duplicate payments, payments to ineligible recipients, payments for ineligible services, and payments for services not received.

Countless billions of dollars of taxpayer funds are wasted each year through improper payments. However, the extent of improper payments in the Federal Government is unknown since Federal agencies are not required by law to estimate or report them.

In 1990 and 1994, Congress passed important pieces of legislation to make government more transparent to its stockholders, the American people. Twenty-four agencies are required to prepare audited financial statements, and several agencies voluntarily prepare such statements. H.R. 4878 will require executive agencies to identify all spending programs that may be vulnerable to significant improper payments and to annually estimate the amount of improper payments involving those programs.

This is an extremely important topic, given the tightening of the Federal belt of late and the need to keep our country strong during this time of war and economic concern.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just really want to end with this. H.R. 4878 tightens up the Federal Government's accounting practices. This is a good thing. We need to be sure that the way we do business is on the up-and-up, and we clearly need to do more to require corporate America to do the same.

We are asking government agencies to improve the management and accountability of the agencies. We must ask the same of corporate leaders. They must be accountable for the company's financial health, be honest with the public, and there must be consequences for breaching those trusts. For years, we have asked government to act more like a business. We need to turn that around and ask businesses to be as accountable as the government.

H.R. 4878 is based on the principle that making information publicly available will change the way people and agencies behave. This is underscored by the activities of Enron and WorldCom. They knew that if the public was aware of what they were doing, the company would falter, and so they tried to spin their way out of trouble.

I think the steps that we are taking today in terms of government accountability are important, and that we should seek unanimous support from our colleagues, but also we need to think about ways that we can extend these practices and make sure that corporate America abides by these same government rules.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1415

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the staff that worked very hard, night and day, on this particular bill. That is staff director Russell George; deputy staff director Bonnie Heald; senior counsel Henry Wray; and we are proud to have a very fine young lady from the General Accounting Office, Rosa Harris, who is a detailee to our subcommittee, and she has done a great job on all things related to financial management.

I also thank David McMillian, the professional staff member for the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY). We also are delighted with his ideas. This is a bipartisan bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to thank the chairman for his willingness and openness and cooperation with the Democrats, and I would also like to take a moment of personal privilege to commend the chairman for always thanking the hard-working staff of both parties for the hard work that they do, both in committee and on the floor. I think it is a wonderful thing to acknowledge that work. I would like to join him and associate myself with his appreciation and congratulations for the hard work of our staff.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4878, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for estimates and reports of improper payments by Federal agencies."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONCERNING RISE IN ANTI-SEMITISM IN EUROPE

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 393) concerning the rise in anti-Semitism in Europe, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there can be no justification for violence or intolerance against minorities;

Whereas the 1993 Helsinki Declaration expressed the commitment of its signatories, including all European member states, to the promotion of tolerance toward minorities;

Whereas there has been a significant rise in anti-Semitic verbal incitement and physical attacks on Jewish people and Jewish institutions throughout Europe during the last 18 months with as many as 400 incidents reported in France;

Whereas anti-Semitism is defined as hostility towards Jews;

Whereas certain groups in Europe have exploited the situation in the Middle East as an excuse to carry out violent acts against Jews;

Whereas, although the continued violence in the Middle East is disturbing and must be resolved, exploiting that violence to fuel hostility or violence against Jews and Jewish institutions is reprehensible;

Whereas, according to news reports, the following anti-Semitic attacks are among those which have taken place in Europe in recent weeks—

(1) on March 3, Molotov cocktails were thrown at a synagogue in Antwerp, Belgium,

(2) on March 16, an explosive device was thrown into a Jewish cemetery in Berlin, Germany,

(3) on March 30, two vehicles were smashed at La Duchere synagogue in Lyon, France, and a kosher butcher shop was strafed by gunfire in Toulouse, France,

(4) on April 1, a Jewish school was attacked in Sarcelles, France, a firebomb was thrown at the Anderlecht synagogue in Brussels, Belgium, the Or Aviv synagogue (including its Torah scrolls) in Marseille, France, was destroyed by fire, and two Yeshiva students from New Jersey were brutally beaten in Berlin, Germany,

(5) on April 4, vehicles belonging to a Jewish school were burned in Aubervilliers, France, and a synagogue in Montpellier, France, was firebombed,

(6) on April 6, a Jewish sports association storefront was firebombed in Toulouse, France,

(7) on April 11, in Bondy, France, a Jewish soccer team was attacked with sticks and metal bars after the attackers shouted anti-Semitic remarks,

(8) on April 12, a Jewish cemetery was desecrated in Strasbourg, France,

(9) on April 13, synagogue worshipers were attacked in Kiev, Ukraine, and

(10) on May 1, in the Finsbury Park synagogue in London, England, vandals defaced prayer books and painted swastikas throughout the sanctuary;

Whereas anti-Semitic attacks are not confined to a single European nation;

Whereas President Bush, speaking for the American people, has rejected "the ancient evil of anti-Semitism" making specific reference to anti-Semitism in Europe; and

Whereas Europe, in view of its history, should be particularly sensitive to the scourge of anti-Semitism and anti-Semitic violence: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that—

(1) the governments of Europe should continue to take necessary steps to provide security and to protect the safety and well-being of their Jewish communities;

(2) the governments of Europe should deplore anti-Semitic expressions and should prosecute and punish perpetrators of anti-Semitic violence; and

(3) the governments of Europe should continue to make a concerted effort to cultivate an atmosphere in which all forms of anti-Semitism are rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 393, the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 393, expressing the sense of the House concerning the rise of anti-Semitism in Europe. I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) for introducing this important resolution and for the support of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman of the Committee on International Relations, and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS).

H. Res. 393 discusses many reported anti-Semitic crimes over the past 18 months, including 400 incidents reported in France alone. The resolution recites a number of these anti-Semitic crimes that have occurred over the past few years. It calls upon European governments to take necessary steps to ensure the well-being of their Jewish communities and to speak out against anti-Semitic expressions, to prosecute perpetrators of anti-Semitic violence, and to cultivate an atmosphere in which all forms of anti-Semitism will be rejected.

Since the outbreak of Palestinian violence in Israel almost 2 years ago, the European continent has witnessed an upsurge in violent anti-Semitic attacks directed at both Jewish institutions and individuals. It has been unprecedented in magnitude and brutality since World War II.

Anti-Semitic crimes, including the intentional destruction and desecration of synagogues and other Jewish institutions, as well as violent assaults against individual Jews, are not isolated to any particular neighborhood or to any particular city or to any particular country of Europe. Rather, outbursts of anti-Semitic violence have come to plague the entire continent. Our allies of Europe have not done enough until now either to recognize the seriousness of this problem for its urgency or to take any decisive action against those who fuel hatred and perpetrate criminal acts against Jewish populations.

The results of a recent Anti-Defamation League opinion survey concerning European attitudes toward Jews, towards Israel and the Palestinian-Israeli conflict conducted in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, and the United Kingdom reveal that 30 percent of Europeans surveyed harbored traditional anti-Semitic stereotypes and approximately one-third of French and Belgian respondents said they were unconcerned or fairly concerned about ongoing anti-Jewish violence in Europe. Those results are certainly distressing.

Many European governments have been unwilling to recognize the seriousness of this problem until now many months after the outbreak of a violent campaign targeting Jews without impunity.

The decision of some European leaders to treat this phenomenon as if it were nothing more than an occasion of inter-communal strife between Jews and Muslims, rationalized by some as the product of legitimate, pent-up anger and frustration is certainly troubling.

Such thinking is dangerous. It represents an unwillingness to recognize the uniqueness of anti-Semitism as a form of hatred, especially in light of Europe's troubled history in that regard. What the Jews of Europe are witnessing now is not some broader phenomenon so readily characterized as a problem in community relations or racism. Rather, by attempting to characterize the recent anti-Semitic violence in such terms, European leaders are doing nothing more than obfuscating, or even denying the unique problem at hand, and are thereby, in effect, permitting it to continue.

Decisive action against perpetrators of anti-Semitic crimes in Europe must be taken, including the pursuit and prosecution of suspects, as well as the upgrading of security at Jewish institutions. But even more important, the nature of the problem must be recognized for what it truly is. The problem I am talking about is the intentional, deliberate targeting of Jews simply because they are Jews, as well as the desire to use the crisis in Israeli-Palestinian relations as a pretext for terrorizing Jews simply due to their religious affiliation and not due to any actual harm they may have caused to anyone else. A central tenet of H. Res. 393 is that exploiting the violence in the Middle East to fuel hostility or violence against Jews and Jewish institutions is reprehensible.

I applaud today's U.S.-German public meeting in the city of Berlin on the issue of anti-Semitism, and I urge member and observer states of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe to seize this opportunity of the current annual session of their Parliamentary Assembly to hold a special meeting on anti-Semitism.

Accordingly, I urge Members to vote for H. Res. 393, which sends a strong message that the well-being of the Jews of Europe half a century after the Holocaust remains a serious concern of the United States to this very day, and will remain a priority of ours. President Bush has rejected this problem calling it "this ancient evil."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as the only survivor of the Holocaust ever elected to the Congress of the United States, I want to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), a valued member of our committee, for his outstanding resolution and for his untiring efforts in calling attention to the scourge of anti-Semitism in Europe. I also want to thank the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) for expediting the consideration of this resolution and the gentleman from California (Mr. GALLEGLY), who has been most cooperative in bringing this resolution before us today. But I particularly want to express my personal gratitude to the distinguished chairman emeritus of the Committee on International Relations who during his entire distinguished career in this body has been a powerful champion for human rights and against all forms of discrimination, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. Speaker, anti-Semitism in Europe has resulted in vicious attacks against Jews on an almost daily basis. Our resolution highlights some of these incredibly brutal, medieval incidents.

In France, Jewish organizations recorded more than 300 anti-Semitic attacks in the month of April alone: Desecration of Jewish cemeteries, physical and verbal assaults against Jewish children in playgrounds and on soccer fields, fire bombing and vandalizing of Jewish institutions.

In Belgium, the headquarters of the European Union, rabbis and other Jewish community leaders have been repeatedly assaulted, and worshipers have been attacked on their way to and from synagogues.

In England, dozens of threats and physical assaults against Jews have been reported in recent months. Just a short while ago, a suburban London synagogue was vandalized, religious artifacts were defaced, and crude swastikas were painted throughout the building.

In Germany, some 127 anti-Semitic incidents were reported during the first quarter of this year. In Berlin, a Jewish hospital was ransacked and Jews have been beaten.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot instantaneously change the attitudes of many Europeans who for a long period of time have been holding anti-Semitic views. A survey conducted by the Anti-Defamation League last month in Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany and the United Kingdom found that almost one-third of the residents of those countries harbor traditional anti-Semitic stereotypes.

The problem is clear, and the response must be equally clear. Our strong resolution today calls upon the governments of Europe to take all necessary steps to protect the safety and well-being of their Jewish communities and to cultivate an atmosphere of cooperation and reconciliation among their Jewish and non-Jewish residents.

There are positive and concrete steps that the European governments must take. Government officials cannot stop what people think; but they can set an example of tolerance, and they can act quickly and decisively to punish those who perpetrate racially- and religiously-based violence.

□ 1430

Government leaders can and must publicly and quickly condemn anti-Semitic incidents, and they should condemn them for what they are, unadulterated anti-Semitism, not merely spillover from the Middle East, as some would have it labeled. This merely obfuscates the issue.

Government leaders must insist that these incidents of racism and bigotry are quickly and carefully investigated and that their perpetrators are prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. It is not sufficient or acceptable for government officials to tell Jews to refrain from wearing distinctive religious clothing, as happened in at least one European country. That puts the onus on the victim and not on the perpetrator.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished head of the Anti-Defamation League made reference to a recent disturbing survey of anti-Semitism in Europe that was conducted by the Anti-Defamation League.

My good friend, Abe Foxman, National Director of the ADL, wrote an excellent article discussing the survey results and the very disturbing phenomenon of anti-Semitism in Europe entitled "Europe's Anti-Israel Excuse." Abe Foxman provides excellent insight into how the current Israeli-Palestinian conflict has led to the resurrection of widespread open anti-Semitism in Europe. As a Holocaust survivor, Mr. Foxman brings a unique perspective about the dangers of bigotry and prejudice, since he personally experienced the effects of widespread, unchallenged anti-Semitism in the 1940s.

With European governments turning a blind eye to anti-Semitism and dismissing attacks on Jews as merely a reaction to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, Mr. Foxman correctly observes that the future of Jewish life in Europe is in question.

Mr. Speaker, I will include for the RECORD Mr. Foxman's article in its entirety, and I urge all of my colleagues to give it the serious and thoughtful attention it deserves.

Mr. Speaker, I again commend my good friend and distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), for bringing this resolution to our attention. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I include the Abe Foxman article entitled "Europe's Anti-Israel Excuse" for the RECORD.

EUROPE'S ANTI-ISRAEL EXCUSE

(By Abraham H. Foxman)

Throughout history a constant barometer for judging the level of hate and exclusion vs. the level of freedom and democracy in any society has been anti-Semitism—how a country treats its Jewish citizens. Jews have been persecuted and delegitimized throughout history because of their perceived differences. Any society that can understand and accept Jews is typically more democratic, more open and accepting of "the other." This predictor has held true throughout the ages.

During the Holocaust, Jews and other minorities of Europe were dispatched to the camps and, ultimately, their deaths in an environment rife with anti-Semitism. Nearly 60 years later in a modern, democratic Europe, that presumably had shed itself of the legacy of that era, Jews have again come under attack. During the past year and a half a troubling epidemic of anti-Jewish hatred, not isolated to any one country or community, has produced a climate of intimidation and fear in the Jewish communities of Europe. Never, as a Holocaust survivor, did I believe we would witness another eruption of anti-Semitism of such magnitude, in Europe of all places. But the resiliency of anti-Semitism is unparalleled. It rears its ugly head in far-flung places, like Malaysia and Japan, where there are no Jews.

The Anti-Defamation League has been taking the pulse of anti-Semitism in America for more than 40 years. Never did I expect that we would have to do the same in Europe, given the history and our expectation that European anti-Semitism, while not eradicated, would be so marginal and so rejected that it would not be a major concern.

What we found in the countries we surveyed—Britain, France, Germany, Belgium and Denmark—was shocking and disturbing. Classical anti-Semitism, coupled with a new form fueled by anti-Israel sentiment, has become a potent and dangerous mix in countries with enormous Muslim and Arab populations.

More than 1 million Jews live in these five nations, and their communities are under siege. Who would have believed that we would see the burning of synagogues and attacks of Jewish students, rabbis, Jewish institutions and Jewish owned-property?

While European leaders have attempted to explain away these attacks as a fleeting response to events in the Middle East and not the barginger of a more insidious and deeply ingrained hatred, the attitudes of average Europeans paint a far different picture. Among the 2,500 people polled in late May and early June as part of our survey, 45 percent admitted to their perception that Jews are more loyal to Israel than their own country, while 30 percent agreed with the statement that Jews have too much power in the business world. Perhaps most telling, 62 percent said they believe the outbreak of anti-Semitic violence in Europe is the result of anti-Israel sentiment, not anti-Jewish feeling. The contrariness of their own attitudes suggests that Europeans are loath to admit that hatred of Jews is making a comeback.

This view may make Europeans more comfortable in the face of what is happening in their countries, by suggesting that this time around, Jews are not the innocent victims but are themselves the victimizers in the Middle East. But the incredibly biased reaction against Israel seen in the poll—despite the fact that Israel under former prime minister Ehud Barak offered the Palestinians an independent state, and despite the fact that Palestinians have carried out a sustained campaign of terrorism against Israeli civilians—speaks to a repressed hostility to Jews that may not be socially acceptable in post-Holocaust Europe. Still, even with such constraints, some 30 percent of Europeans are not averse to expressing their anti-Semitic beliefs openly and directly.

Meanwhile, the Europeans have been tepid in their support for the U.S. war on terrorism and especially the Bush administration's efforts to broker an end to Israeli-Palestinian bloodshed. The Europeans seek to appease Saddam Hussein and other threats to the Western world while blaming Israel, not the Palestinian Authority, for the crisis. All while they minimize the extent of anti-Semitism in Europe and fail to immediately condemn horrific acts of harassment and vandalism. The message to Europe's burgeoning immigrant population is that there is a certain level of acceptance for intolerance.

It is time for Europe to assume responsibility for a situation of its own making. The combination of significant, openly expressed anti-Jewish bias together with irrational anti-Israel opinions creates a climate of great concern for the Jews of Europe. It is not surprising that in such an atmosphere Muslim residents feel free to attack Jewish students and religious institutions not because they are Israelis but because they are Jews. And it is not surprising that some European officials have begun telling Jewish leaders to advise their numbers to avoid public displays of Jewishness, instead of promising to protect their Jewish communities.

European leaders and officials must see what is going on for what it is—outright anti-Semitism—and condemn the revival of this ancient hatred that had its greatest manifestations on the same continent.

They must acknowledge that the anti-Israel vilification across Western Europe is unacceptable. The recent comparisons of Israelis to Nazis, to Jews as the executors of "massacres" and even as the killers of Christ—these do not fall into the category of legitimate criticism of a sovereign state. They create the very climate that questions the future of Jewish life in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), who is Chairman of the Helsinki Commission and has recently led a delegation to Europe to discuss this very issue.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend for yielding me time, and I rise in very strong support of H. Res. 393. I want to commend its sponsor and all of the Members who are taking part in this very important debate.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday, along with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), who is on the floor and will be speaking momentarily, we returned back from the OSCE, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, Parliamentary Assembly.

Every year, parliamentarians from the 55 nations that comprise the OSCE meet to discuss issues of importance. This year the focus was on terrorism, but we made sure that a number of other issues, because certainly anti-Semitism is inextricably linked to terrorism, were raised in a very profound way.

Yesterday, two very historic and I think very vital things happened in this debate. I had the privilege of cochairing a historic meeting on anti-Semitism with a counterpart, a member of the German Bundestag, Professor Gert Weisskirchen, who is a member of the Parliament there, also a professor of applied sciences at the University of Heidelberg, and we heard from four very serious, very credible and very profound voices in this battle to wage against anti-Semitism.

We heard from Abraham Foxman, the National Director of the Anti-Defamation League, who gave a very impassioned but also very empirical speech, that is to say he backed it up with statistics, with information about this rising tide of anti-Semitism, not just in Europe, but in the United States and Canada as well.

He pointed out, for example, according to their data, 17 percent of Americans are showing real anti-Semitic beliefs, and the ugliness of it. Sadly, among Latinos and African Americans, it is about 35 percent. He pointed out in Europe, in the aggregate, the anti-Semitism was about 30 percent of the population.

Dr. Shimon Samuels also spoke, who is the Director of the Wiesenthal Center in Paris. He too gave a very impassioned and very documented talk. He made the point that the slippery slope from hate speech to hate crime is clear. Seventy-two hours after the close of the Durban hate-fest, its virulence struck at the strategic and financial centers of the United States. He pointed out, "If Durban was Mein Kampf, than 9/11 was Kristalnacht, a warning."

"What starts with the Jews is a measure, an alarm signalling impending danger for global stability. The new anti-Semitic alliance is bound up with anti-Americanism under the cover of so-called anti-globalization."

He also testified and said, "The Holocaust for 30 years acted as a protective Teflon against blatant anti-Semitic expression. That Teflon has eroded, and what was considered distasteful and politically incorrect is becoming simply an opinion. But cocktail chatter at fine English dinners," he said, "can end as Molotov cocktails against synagogues."

"Political correctness is also eroding for others, as tolerance for multiculturalism gives way to populous voices in France, Italy, Austria, Denmark, Portugal and in the Netherlands. These countries' Jewish communities can be caught between the rock of radical Islamic violence and the hard place of a revitalized Holocaust-denying extreme right."

"Common cause," he concluded, "must be sought between the victimized minorities against extremism and fascism."

I would point out to my colleagues one of those who spoke pointed out, it was Professor Julius Schoeps, that he has found that people do not say "I am anti-Semitic;" they just say "I do not like Jews," a distinction without a difference, and, unfortunately, it is rearing itself in one ugly attack after another.

I would point out that in Berlin very recently, two New Jersey yeshiva students, after they left synagogue, they left prayer, there was an anti-American, anti-Israeli demonstration going on, and they were asked repeatedly, are you Jews? Are you Jews? And then the fists started coming their way and they were beaten right there in Berlin.

Let me finally say, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday we also passed a supplementary item at our OSCE Parliamentary Assembly. I was proud to be the principal sponsor. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) offered a couple of strengthening amendments during the course of that debate, and we presented a united force, a U.S. force against anti-Semitism.

I would just point out this resolution now hopefully will act in concert with other expressions to wake up Europe. We cannot sit idly by. If we do not say anything, if we do not speak out, we allow the forces of hate to gain a further foothold. Again, that passed yesterday as well.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to become much more aware that this ugliness is rearing its ugly face, not just in the United States, but Canada, in Europe, and we have to put to an end to it. Hate speech and hate crimes go hand in hand.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of the resolution.

UNITED STATES HELSINKI COMMISSION—ANTI-SEMITISM IN THE OSCE REGION

The Delegations of Germany and the United States will hold a side event to highlight the alarming escalation of anti-Semitic violence occurring throughout the OSCE region.

All Heads of Delegations have been invited to attend, as well as media and NGOs.

The United States delegation has introduced a supplementary item condemning anti-Semitic violence. The Resolution urges Parliamentary Assembly participants to speak out against anti-Semitism.

SUPPLEMENTARY ITEM ON ANTI-SEMITIC VIOLENCE IN THE OSCE REGION FOR THE 11TH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE OSCE PARLIAMENTARY ASSEMBLY, BERLIN, 6-10 JULY 2002

[Principal sponsor: Mr. Christopher H. Smith, USA]

1. Recalling that the OSCE was the first organization to publicly achieve international condemnation of anti-Semitism through the crafting of the 1990 Copenhagen Concluding Document;

2. Noting that all participating States, as stated in the Copenhagen Concluding Document, commit to "unequivocally condemn" anti-Semitism and take effective measures to protect individuals from anti-Semitic violence;

3. Remembering the 1996 Lisbon Concluding Document, which highlights the OSCE's "comprehensive approach" to security, calls for "improvement in the implementation of all commitments in the human dimension, in particular with respect to human rights and fundamental freedoms," and urges participating States to address "acute problems," such as anti-Semitism;

4. Reaffirming the 1999 Charter for European Security, committing participating States to "counter such threats to security as violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief and manifestations of intolerance, aggressive nationalism, racism, chauvinism, xenophobia and anti-Semitism;"

5. Recognizing that the scourge of anti-Semitism is not unique to any one country, and calls for steadfast perseverance by all participating States;

The OSCE Parliamentary Assembly:

6. Unequivocally condemns the alarming escalation of anti-Semitic violence throughout the OSCE region;

7. Voices deep concern over the recent escalation in anti-Semitic violence, as individuals of the Judaic faith and Jewish cultural properties have suffered attacks in many OSCE participating States;

8. Recognizes the danger of anti-Semitic violence to European security, especially in light of the trend of increasing violence and attacks region wide;

9. Declares that violence against Jews and other manifestations of intolerance will never be justified by international developments or political issues, and that it obstructs democracy, pluralism, and peace;

10. Urges all States to make public statements recognizing violence against Jews and Jewish cultural properties as anti-Semitic, as well as to issue strong, public declarations condemning the depredations;

11. Calls upon participating States to ensure aggressive law enforcement by local and national authorities, including thorough investigation of anti-Semitic criminal acts, apprehension of perpetrators, initiation of appropriate criminal prosecutions and judicial proceedings;

12. Urges participating States to bolster the importance of combating anti-Semitism by holding a follow-up seminar or human dimension meeting that explores effective measures to prevent anti-Semitism, and to ensure that their laws, regulations, practices and policies confirm with relevant OSCE commitments on anti-Semitism; and

13. Encourages all delegates to the Parliamentary Assembly to vocally and unconditionally condemn manifestations of anti-Semitic violence in their respective countries and at all regional and international fora.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for his leadership on this issue and for taking the issue to the OSCE. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), my good friend, our distinguished colleague, and the author of this important resolution.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of my resolution, H. Res. 393, which calls on European governments to address the rise of anti-Semitism throughout the continent of Europe. I introduced this bill because I am concerned that Europe is on the verge of another Kristalnacht. Anti-Semitism, accompanied by, in many cases by violence, is at the highest levels since the horrors of World War II. According to the British Daily Telegraph, more than 2,000 anti-Semitic incidents were reported throughout the European Union in the last 10 months, more than 18 every single day.

As I have listened very intently to my good friend from New Jersey who just came back from Europe and talking about the rise of anti-Semitism, not only in Europe, but in the United States and Canada, it is ugly wherever it raises its head.

We must keep in mind, we do not share a similar history when it comes to dealing with the issue of anti-Semitism. We all know what the history of Europe has been.

Among the most recent incidents on March 30, two yeshiva students from New Jersey were brutally beaten on the streets of Berlin in an anti-Semitic attack.

On April 11, 15 hooded attackers assaulted a Jewish teenage soccer team in Bondy, France, with sticks and metal bars while yelling anti-Semitic remarks.

On April 27, a synagogue in a London suburb was desecrated by vandals, who painted swastikas on the walls and destroyed religious articles.

Two synagogues in Belgium were firebombed earlier this year.

Also in Belgium, two Hasidic Jews in Antwerp were attacked ferociously as a chorus of teenage attackers spat on them, chanting "dirty Jew" and praising Hitler. One of the two men had just emerged from the hospital a few days later when his 10-year-old daughter was also attacked by assailants chanting a chorus of anti-Semitic remarks. The girl now walks to and from school with an escort.

Anti-Semitism is clearly on the rise. The French government reported 320 anti-Semitic incidents in 2001, almost one per day. But this year French Jewish organizations reported over 300 incidents in the month of April alone.

Jewish cemeteries have been vandalized, a kosher butcher shop near Toulouse was the target of a drive-by shooting, and the Or Aviv Synagogue in Marseille was burned to the ground by arsonists during the Passover holiday.

Not every European government faces a rash of anti-Semitism. Norway, for example, has experienced few hate crimes directed at Jews, and Prime Minister Bondevik made it clear his government will forcefully prosecute any anti-Semitic attacks.

Other governments have taken only minor steps to address anti-Semitism. France, for example, has increased the police presence at major Jewish sites in the aftermath of several attacks. They just this week established a 24-hour hotline for the Jewish community, and they have also appointed a liaison between the French government and the French Jewish community.

But such steps are few and far between, and, in my opinion, do not go far enough. European governments have done little to punish the perpetrators of such attacks, or, more importantly, they have done little to foster an atmosphere in which Jews and other minority groups can live free from harassment as normal members of their societies.

Indeed, several senior European officials have made their anti-Semitism clear and demonstrated that their bigotry affects government policies. Extremist xenophobes like Haider in Austria and Le Pen in France have made hatred and intolerance the basis of their party's political platforms. Le Pen made it into a runoff race for the presidency of France. While he did not win, his base of support in France remains strong.

France no longer appears to be guided by the 1789 Declaration of the Rights of Man, the foundation for French democracy, which called for equal rights for all. Daniel Bernard, the French ambassador in London, recently referred to Israel with an obscenity when he attributed all the troubles in the Middle East to Israel. When his remarks were reported in the press, Ambassador Bernard refused to apologize and the foreign ministry refused to censure him.

Bernard's remarks, made at a fashionable dinner party in London, demonstrate that the World Jewish Congress was correct when it asserted that anti-Semitism is no longer considered unacceptable in European polite society. European governments must demonstrate that such attitudes are simply not acceptable.

In the years before World War II, the fabric of European society was torn apart by the official anti-Semitism of Nazi Germany and its puppet governments in France, Austria, Poland and elsewhere.

□ 1445

Now, more than 60 years later, European governments are once again doing little to discourage intolerance and hatred directed at Jews and other minority groups. When their rights are trampled upon, European governments must step up and act in order to protect all citizens. The failure to properly condemn and control these attacks makes the governments of Europe complicit in them.

Before I close, I would like to thank a number of groups for their work in support of this resolution, particularly the Orthodox Union, the National Council of Soviet Jewry, NORPAC, and Harriet Mandel and her colleagues in the Jewish Community Relations Council of New York.

I would also like to thank the ranking member and the chairman of the committee, as well as the chair of the subcommittee, who waived the rules to allow this to come to the floor.

I want to thank the Speaker of the House for bringing this important resolution to us today. But most especially, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my fellow colleague from New York (Mr. GILMAN), chairman emeritus of the Committee on International Relations, for all of his hard work throughout the years, especially on issues pertaining to the Middle East and whose Jewish constituents as well as all of the constituents that he represents in New York, and all of New York.

I would say to the gentleman that we are greatly going to miss the gentleman when he retires from the House of Representatives. I know that many people will speak the gentleman's praises in days to come, but I want to tell the gentleman what a great honor it has been to serve with the gentleman on this floor.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New York

(Mr. CROWLEY), not only for his kind words, but for his leadership in bringing this measure to the floor, working out all of the compromises that were needed in order to make this important measure possible. I thank the gentleman for his hard work on this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), who has been a staunch supporter of human rights throughout the world and especially in fighting anti-Semitism.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 393, expressing concern about the rise of anti-Semitism in Europe. I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) for yielding me this time.

I echo and associate myself with the comments of the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) with regard to the wonderful service the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) has provided and the deep commitment he has demonstrated and the deep friendship he has had for us on both sides of the aisle. I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) for introducing this legislation. I also want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), as well as the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and the others who have helped to bring this very important resolution to the floor today.

As Americans, we value our diversity, and we celebrate our unity. I hope that this resolution will remind European leaders that ignoring the practice of hatred is as if condoning it.

Anti-Semitism is one of the oldest forms of hatred and it is, unfortunately, experiencing a resurgence, crossing boundaries of every type, geographical, national, political, religious and cultural. We see it in the proliferation of anti-Jewish media expressing vicious stereotyping, conspiracy theories, and even denial of the Holocaust. Its messages of hate have influenced Muslim immigrants in France to commit daily anti-Jewish acts and have overpowered the Conference on Racism in Durban with anti-Israel, anti-Zionist, anti-Jewish resolutions and statements.

Not even 60 years have passed since the murder of 6 million Jews in the Holocaust, and once again, we see anti-Semitism coming back strongly in Europe. This time it is fueled by anti-Semitic campaigns being spread throughout the Arab world and spilling over through some immigrants and the new media into France, England, Belgium and other countries.

Daily attacks on Jews and their institutions are taking place in France while the government looks the other way. Leading French media are filled with stories slanted against Israel, further heating up a climate in which leadership of the Jewish community is virtually alone, fighting anti-Semitic attacks.

European leaders have continually avoided condemning the tactic of suicide bombing in Israel, which lends support to the acts of hatred against Jews in their own nations. Our message to them is clear: Join the United States in working toward an agreement in the Middle East that will lead to peace with security and independence for Israelis and Palestinians.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for her poignant remarks in support of this resolution, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), my distinguished colleague.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 393, which denounces the rise in anti-Semitism in Europe. This Congress must condemn these and any violent acts that are hurting families and communities, both here and abroad.

According to an annual study by a Tel Aviv university, anti-Semitic acts rose sharply around the world after the September 11 attacks. The study reveals some of the worst anti-Semitic days since the end of World War II. Another recent survey revealed that 30 percent of Europeans harbored traditional anti-Semitic stereotypes. Congress must condemn these acts by passing H. Res. 393.

But, Mr. Speaker, we must also make it a top priority to stop hate in our own country. Anti-Semitism is not limited to Europe. The Anti-Defamation League reported that this year, here in the United States, anti-Jewish incidents have increased 11 percent.

Congress must make it clear that there is no room for personal attacks and bigotry in America. That is why we need to pass H. Res. 393 and the bill of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), H.R. 1343, The Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Prevention Act, to help prosecute and prevent crimes motivated by hate across our own Nation.

The people of the United States must set an example for the world by expressing our differences without resorting to violence against our neighbors. In the United States, freedom of speech is a fundamental right, a right to be used for causes that citizens are passionate over, but not for causes that damage another's right to a different opinion, a different religion, a different lifestyle.

This Congress has the responsibility to combat unnecessary hatred and to lead the charge. Together we can make a statement by passing H. Res. 393, condemning anti-Semitism.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), my good friend and distinguished colleague.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, first, let me thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) for his entire career of fighting prejudice and bias wherever it can be found in our communities.

I also want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN). The gentleman will be deeply missed in this body. We thank him for his leadership on behalf of all of the people of this Nation.

I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), my good friend, for his leadership in the Helsinki process. He took this resolution to Europe and we were able to get unanimous support among our fellow parliamentarians to speak out and develop an action plan against anti-Semitism.

I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) for bringing this resolution forward; I thank him on behalf of all of us for stating what I would hope would be unanimously supported by this body.

There is no question that anti-Semitic activities are on the increase in every state in Europe. We need to do more than just speak out; we need to develop an action plan, and that is what we were successful in getting in our visit on the OSCE Parliamentary Assembly during this past weekend. We have developed an action plan and will continue to monitor it to make it clear that international events cannot be used to justify anti-Semitic activities; that we need to work with the leadership, not just among parliamentarians, but the leadership in our communities from church groups and from educators. We have to work with children in our schools, and we have to deal with property restitution issues to make sure that people are fairly compensated for property that was wrongfully taken.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we need a total plan to make sure the world understands that we will not tolerate anti-Semitic activities, period, the end.

So I very much applaud the efforts on this resolution. It is important that this body speaks out, but it is also important that we follow it with action in all of the areas that we have mentioned.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank the gentleman from Maryland for his kind words, but most important, for his willingness to go to Berlin, along with the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and to bring this resolution to their attention. We thank him for his efforts.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOFFEL), my good friend, an indefatigable fighter for human rights in all of its manifestations.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his kind remarks, and also for his many years of leadership on this issue.

Also, I want to salute the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) for a career that we should all emulate and follow in terms of human rights and for justice around the world.

I want to compliment the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) for bringing this resolution to the floor, denouncing anti-Semitism wherever it is found in Europe or this country.

I certainly want to acknowledge, as others have, the great leadership of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), who led our delegation this past weekend to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

I want to share a little with my colleagues the work led by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and joined by all of the American delegates. We were proud to do so, in bringing this challenge of anti-Semitism and the need to denounce anti-Semitism to the OSCE and, hopefully, to all of the governments of Europe. We made an historic effort, through the leadership of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) leading the American delegation and the leadership of Dr. Gert Weisskirchen, a German parliamentarian and the leader of his delegation, in a joint delegation assembly to talk about the evils of anti-Semitism, to bring forward four experts to talk to all of us about the need to speak out and denounce anti-Semitism. This was the first time that the American delegation and the German delegation had ever met in a separate event, invited the press in, invited experts in to talk to us.

I wish, I say to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), I wish all of our colleagues could have heard what we heard from Abraham Foxman, the executive director of the Anti-Defamation League, in which he talked about the need to speak out to denounce anti-Semitism. He talked about the events in Germany recently, where after a number of events aimed against Jews, just for being Jews, the official advice to the Jewish community in Germany is to stop wearing visible signs of their faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) has expired.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield an additional 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL.)

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) very kindly.

I simply want to say, what kind of advice is that? How can anybody say,

"avoid wearing visible signs of your faith," as if that is the way to deal with the hatred that is being directed against Jews in Germany and across Europe? The way to deal with it, as Mr. Foxman pointed out, is to speak out, to speak out loudly, to denounce it, to make sure that everybody knows how unacceptable that hatred and intolerance is.

We will win this victory if we step forward, and if people around the world step forward and say that anti-Semitism is un-American, that it is un-German, that it is un-French, that it is un-Ukrainian, that it is against the basic principles of a civilized people wherever it happens around the world.

Mr. Speaker, that is the fight we are joining. That is what the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) has done for 20-some years, and that is what the whole career of the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) has been about. That is what my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) is fighting for today, and I am honored to join my colleagues in that fight.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that each side be granted an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from California will control 3 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

It is literally unthinkable that just 50 years after the Holocaust this body should be compelled to take up this issue. It speaks very poorly of the educational process that has unfolded in Europe in the last two generations, that this most ancient hatred, based on prejudice and ignorance, should again be sweeping the continent.

□ 1500

Several strains provide a confluence as to why they are up against this problem today. The first and perhaps most important one is the old church-based anti-Semitism. Churches have been guilty for centuries of fomenting anti-Semitism; and while some voices have spoken for acceptance and tolerance, important segments of the churches have contributed to the continuation of this sickening spectacle of religious hate.

We also see the upsurge of skinhead and neo-Nazi movements of direct followers of what was the dominant theme in Germany in the 1930's and early 40's. The skinhead and neo-Nazi component of this new wave of anti-Semitism must be fought by all European governments.

We have a new element. The extremist Islamic and Arab populations of Europe are contributing powerfully to anti-Semitism, and it is incumbent upon the governments of Europe to fight these forces.

Finally, the perpetually misguided European left must recognize that its values and priorities are all upside down. They view the small State of Israel, a victim of a wave of suicide bombers and terrorist activities, as the aggressive Goliath. The time is long overdue for the misguided European left to wake up and recognize the realities of the Middle East situation.

These are the four strains: church-based anti-Semitism; neo-Nazi skinhead anti-Semitism; the anti-Semitism emanating from the Muslim and Arab population in Europe; and, finally, the misguided European left which mistakes the victim for the aggressor. This is a gigantic task that all men and women in Europe of goodwill and decency must unite to defeat.

I urge all of my colleagues to vote for this resolution as an expression of the conscience of this body and the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to thank my colleagues, especially the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), the sponsor of this important measure, and for his participation in the debate, as well as the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), ranking member of our committee, for his eloquent remarks. And I hope that the European governments to whom this resolution is addressed will review the content of our debate today and draw the appropriate conclusions and, more importantly, take the required actions to stop the flow of anti-Semitism throughout Europe.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 393.

For months, vicious attacks against Jews across Europe have continued almost on a daily basis. It has been an issue of such great concern to me that last month I sent a letter signed by 140 of my colleagues urging EU Secretary-General Javier Solana to take action against this dangerous trend.

In France, Jewish organizations recorded more than 300 anti-Semitic attacks in the month of April alone. Jewish cemeteries have been desecrated, Jewish children have been verbally and physically assaulted on playgrounds and soccer fields, and Jewish institutions have been firebombed and vandalized. In February, yellow stars of David were painted on Jewish shop windows in Paris. In March, there was a drive-by shooting of a kosher butcher shop near Toulouse. And, in the middle of Passover, the Or Aviv Synagogue in Marseilles was burned to the ground.

In Belgium, the seat of the European Union, Rabbis and community leaders have been assaulted, as have synagogue worshipers, on their way to and from services.

In England, dozens of threats and physical assaults on Jews have been reported in recent months, and in April, a vicious attack on a suburban London synagogue left windows smashed, religious artifacts defaced, and crude swastikas painted everywhere.

The situation has only been made worse by the failure of these countries to forcefully condemn these hate crimes and vigorously prosecute their perpetrators.

European leaders, including EU representatives, have dismissed the severity of the problem, blaming the Middle East conflict and Muslim demographics instead of the Arab and European media outlets that have fed their fervor by demonizing Jews and justifying suicide murders by Palestinian terrorists.

The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms espouses the basic rights of all Europeans to liberty, security, freedom of religion, and freedom from discrimination. Yet, no EU institution has made any effort to uphold these rights for Jewish minorities.

It is time for the European nations to take a bold unified stance condemning the re-emergence of anti-Semitism in Europe.

It is time for the United Nations to take action and reverse the virulent wave of anti-Semitic attacks unleashed last year at the U.N. Conference on Racism, where delegates sought to equate Zionism and racism and insisted that the Holocaust be written with a lower case "h" to lessen the magnitude of the tragedy.

Hasn't the horror of World War II taught us the danger of anti-Semitism, which seeks to dehumanize Jews and make them legitimate targets for violence? Hasn't the abomination of suicide murder shown us what happens when hatred devalues human life to create targets for terrorism?

The United States and all civilized nations just not be silent in the face of these threats. We must lead the fight to condemn anti-Semitism in Europe, the former Soviet Union, and everywhere it emerges.

I urge all of my colleagues to support H. Res. 393.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join over 70 of my House colleagues in co-sponsoring H. Res. 393, a resolution condemning the rise of anti-Semitism in Europe. The disturbing trend of hatred, intolerance and cruelty on the continent of Europe demands our immediate attention and action.

We are all aware of the horrors faced by Jewish people in Europe a little more than a half century ago. For this reason, we must keep Europe's troubled history in mind and scrutinize the numerous anti-Semitic attacks on Jews in Europe over the last 18 months before these sentiments are allowed to escalate to more disturbing levels. It is wise not to ignore history for fear of being doomed to repeat it.

Of the many despicable attacks that have occurred over the past 18 months, I would like to single out the brutal beating in Berlin, Germany of two Yeshiva students from my home state of New Jersey. These students traveled to Germany in the youthful pursuit of an education and the desire to exchange ideas with another culture. They did not envision being singled out for their religion and brutally beaten by bigoted thugs. We must not ignore this event and the many that have signaled a rise in anti-Semitism across the European continent.

We are at the birth of a new and uncertain century. Unfortunately, we have already seen a rise in narrow-mined hatred, evidenced by the horrific terror attacks on our Nation on September 11th. As a freethinking and compassionate people, we must insist that our allies follow the American ideals of tolerance and understanding. At the very least, we must speak out to protect the basic human rights of people who face persecution based on their religion. Therefore, I urge our European allies to draw their attention to the rise in anti-Semitism on their continent and take whatever steps necessary to curb this disturbing trend.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 393, and would like first of all to thank my colleague from New York, Mr. CROWLEY for his initiative in bringing this important resolution to the attention of the House. I also want to thank Chairman HYDE and Ranking Member LANTOS for their support of Mr. CROWLEY's resolution.

Mr. Speaker, every year the House considers a great number of resolutions on a vast array of topics. I'd like to suggest that the resolution under consideration right now is the perfect example of what a House resolution ought to be.

H. Res. 393 is concise, timely, and most of all, important. The topic under debate today is the resurgence of a form of hatefulness that we all hoped would never again emerge in Europe. Anti-Semitism has a long and unfortunate history in Europe and its re-emergence in the past few months should serve not only as a warning that hatred and bigotry are always lurking in the margins of society, but also as a call to arms.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, 2001, our Nation and my city of New York especially, were attacked by the forces of ignorance and intolerance, the forces of hatred and exclusion, the forces of irrationality and brutality. The spirit which animated the men who attacked our Nation is the same as that which motivates the anti-Semitism of the past, the present and, we may expect, of the future as well.

Pathological intolerance is nothing new, but it has, unfortunately, through technology, acquired new tools capable of wreaking massive violence and havoc. In the 1940s, the resources of an entire nation were put to the task of annihilating Europe's Jews. Today, unfortunately we see their spiritual descendants using different tools: car bombs, gas cylinders, light boats and even airplanes. But the mission of hate is the same and the results just as ghastly.

Today, Europe is again facing a tide of hatred against Jews. Again we see Europe's synagogues being defiled, burned and vandalized, again we see Europe's Jews being attacked in the streets, and most disconcerting of all, again we see Europe's governments telling us not to worry, that everything will be all right, that this is a passing phase, that this is the work of a disaffected few.

Mr. Speaker, I don't buy that. And more importantly, today, in passing this vital resolution, the entire Congress is refusing to accept Europe's invitation to acquiescence and passivity.

Historically in Europe, Mr. Speaker, Jews have been the proverbial "canary in the coal mine," the group whose welfare, acceptance and safety can be seen as a gauge for the security of all religious and ethnic minorities. And today, Europe's Jews are again in jeopardy. How we confront this awful reality is the test of the pledge our Nation made upon discovery of Hitler's extermination camps in 1945: Never again.

Today, with the adoption of this critical resolution demanding that European nations live up to their responsibilities for the protection of all their citizens, I am proud to say we are living up to that great historical commitment. Again, I want to commend Mr. CROWLEY for authoring this resolution, and strongly urge its passage by the House.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution.

The statue of Alfred Dreyfus that stands in Paris had the words "dirty Jew" painted on it earlier this year.

Dreyfus was a Jewish Captain in the French army before he was sent to jail on trumped-up charges and fabricated evidence. He served eleven years and survived several attempted cover-ups by the French military before his innocence was universally recognized. He was finally released in 1906.

To many people, including the father of Modern Zionism Theodore Herzl, Dreyfus is the symbol of the persecuted Jew and anti-Semitism.

For all those who remember history, the fact that this statue was the target of anti-Semitism in today's France is horribly disturbing. Unfortunately, France is not alone. Belgium, Britain, Italy, Germany, Slovakia, Ukraine, and Greece have all experienced anti-Semitic incidents since the upswing in anti-Semitism began.

In Germany, police have warned Jews that wearing yarmulkas, the traditional Jewish head coverings, could cause them to be targets of attacks.

Last April, the Simon Wiesenthal Center released its first ever travel advisory, urging Jews to exercise caution when traveling to France or Belgium.

It has been only sixty years since the defeat of Hitler and now swastikas have reappeared in Europe. They can be found sprayed on Jewish schools, drawn on gravestones in a desecrated Jewish cemetery, painted on the wall of a synagogue, stitched on the flags of anti-Israel demonstrators, and in the hearts and minds of the people who attack rabbinical students and Jewish athletes.

The governments of Europe must protect their citizens. They must work actively to stop the increase in anti-Semitic incidents, and denounce anti-Semitic remarks thinly veiled as anti-Israel. Only then can progress be made toward the true goal: an atmosphere of co-operation and reconciliation among the Jewish and non-Jewish citizens of Europe.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 393, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 3295, HELP AMERICA VOTE ACT OF 2001

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 3295.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LANGEVIN moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill H.R. 3295 be instructed to recede from disagreement with the provisions contained in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 101(a)(3) of the Senate amendment to the House bill (relating to the accessibility of voting systems for individuals with disabilities).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) will each be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today I offer this motion to instruct on H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act of 2001, in order to raise awareness of a significant shortcoming in our Nation's elections: the disenfranchisement of disabled voters due to inaccessible voting equipment.

I wish to first dedicate this motion to the memory of my good friend, Justin Dart, Jr., one of the strongest voices for the disabled community, who died June 22 at the age of 71. Justin, often called the Father of the Americans with Disabilities Act, leaves a great legacy of activism and inspires us all with his vision of an America in which every person can reach his or her full potential and actively contribute to society. Millions of people's lives have been improved by his good deeds, and it is in his honor that I offer this motion today.

I first want to thank my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), for his inclusive and bipartisan efforts to improve our Nation's elections, and for being so receptive to the needs of disabled voters. We owe him a debt of gratitude.

I also owe a great deal of gratitude to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) for their support of this motion and for their lifelong commitment to civil rights. We would not be where we are today without them.

Finally, I thank my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD), for his advocacy of the rights of the disabled and for joining us today in this effort to ensure that people with disabilities have full access to voting.

Mr. Speaker, the low voting participation rate among the disabled is a pervasive and well-documented problem. Yet the Nation has made little progress in addressing its causes. The inaccessibility of polling places and election equipment is one of the major factors in this unfortunate phenomenon. Shockingly, the General Accounting Office found that 84 percent of our Nation's polling places were inaccessible to the physically disabled in 2000. Blind voters often cannot cast a vote without assistance, the visually impaired may not be able to decipher small print or confusing ballots, and people in wheelchairs may have difficulty maneuvering in older voting booths.

Just as a personal story to lend passion to this argument, it was only just a few short years ago that I myself never knew the privilege of voting independently, in privacy, in a voting booth. Rhode Island had the oldest voting machines in the country, lever machines, in which I would have to go in and could not possibly reach the levers myself; I would always have to take someone in. Though I was grateful for the assistance, it certainly deprived me of the right to a secret and independent vote. Many others know the same story.

As a result of these problems, only 41 percent of people with disabilities voted in November of 2000, in the November of 2000 elections, far below the national average. With nearly one in five Americans having some level of disability, and approximately 35 million Americans over the age of 65, we must act now to ensure that our voting system is accessible to all Americans.

Improving access to voting has been an overarching goal of my work in public service. As Secretary of State of Rhode Island, I was the chief architect of a plan to upgrade the State's voting system and equipment. The replacement of outdated lever machines with electronic equipment and Braille and tactile ballots helped increase voter turnout and significantly reduced chances of error.

The entire upgrade was statewide and cost effective, and Rhode Island is now widely recognized as having one of the most modern and accessible voting systems in the United States.

In Congress, I have continued to emphasize the importance of voting access. In March 2001, I joined former Secretaries of State in Congress in hosting a voting technology demonstration in which we highlighted accessible election equipment. Not only did this event illustrate the many types of affordable and accessible equipment, it also offered several people with disabilities the opportunity to use a voting machine for the very first time in their lives. The technology exists to address the disenfranchisement of disabled voters, and Congress must encourage its use.

For this reason, I am pleased to offer this motion to instruct in support of the Senate's accessible voting equipment provisions. The Senate's version of H.R. 3295 requires voting systems used in Federal elections to be accessible for individuals with disabilities, including the blind and visually impaired, in a manner that provides privacy and independence.

The Senate's language also requires that each polling place have at least one voting system equipped for individuals with disabilities. Guaranteeing voting equipment in all polling places is one of the disability community's top priorities in election reform, and I am pleased to announce that this motion to instruct has been endorsed by 26 disability advocacy groups.

One major component of election reform must be to provide the greatest possible access to voting for all eligible citizens, and the Senate's accessibility language is a major step toward this noble goal.

I urge my colleagues to support this motion to instruct so that all Americans can exercise their fundamental right to participate in our democracy by guaranteeing them the right to vote.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say today that I agree with the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) that we need to take steps to improve access for the disabled to our Nation's election systems. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), our ranking member and a partner on this bill, and I worked closely with our colleague, the gentleman from Rhode Island, during the drafting of this bill, the Help America Vote Act.

I am grateful for his input and support during that process, so I want to thank the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) for all his hard work and efforts on this piece of legislation before us.

The bill we passed in the House by an overwhelming margin last December included a number of provisions to improve access for persons who have a form of disability and authorize funds to help make those improvements happen. I was pleased to receive the endorsement of the National Federation of the Blind for our bill, the bill that the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr.

LANGEVIN) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and many other Members on both sides of the aisle, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT) and others, supported; and we had that endorsement for the bill, and we were very, very appreciative of that.

Just yesterday I was honored to address the National Federation of the Blind's convention in Louisville on precisely this topic. There is no question that no matter what the form of disability, in this case it was a convention of the National Federation of the Blind, people have a right to vote in secrecy and in privacy. In this case, secrecy is not a bad word; secrecy is something people have a right to do with their ballots, and should have the right to do.

As the work on this bill continues in the conference committee, Mr. Speaker, I am confident we are going to produce a final product. It will be a final product that makes great strides in improving access to the voting process for the citizens in this country.

While I will support the gentleman's motion, and I do fully support it, and I appreciate the gentleman's work on this, I want to make just a couple of points.

First, I do say that it is my belief that this Congress should provide funding that will enable States to meet the requirements it imposes. That is not only for this issue. It is for other issues, provisional voting, central database, all the other good provisions that are contained within this bill and many good provisions, frankly, that are also in the Senate bill.

But I always like to mention the monetary side to this, too, because far too often we here in Congress like to enact requirements and pat ourselves on the back for all the good we have done while sending the bill to someone else. Now, I say that because I am a creature of the Ohio legislature and the Ohio House and Senate, so it used to be my course of business to complain about Washington, D.C. sending down mandates or something of that nature and then not providing the money.

Now, the bill we crafted together has minimum requirements; but they are requirements enforced by Justice, and good requirements are going to ensure that an illegal vote does not cancel out a true vote. People have the right to vote, and we back all of those provisions.

I want to make sure that we always stress that if we are going to impose any requirements on the States, we should provide funds to make it possible for those requirements to be met. My support for this motion and all the language, frankly, contained in the House bill and in the Senate bill dealing with any provision, as I mentioned before, provisional voting, central database, is always going to be conditioned on the fact that we have to have the money.

I know that my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), agrees with that. We have to continue through this whole process. As we get the language that makes this bill a great bill to send to the President, we have to continue to push also for the money so locals have some help in implementing. Otherwise, it is not going to be implemented in the way that we need it done.

□ 1515

Second, in keeping with the requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act, I think we should be requiring States to make also reasonable accommodations. One thing we need to talk about down the road here too in the next couple of weeks are certain rural areas where we want to make sure that if provisions are adopted that we in fact do not shut people out of voting. Because sometimes the rural areas, and we have used this in the Committee on Energy and Commerce many times as we have talked, in rural areas there are places where people vote, for example, and if you try to move them to another area you would have to involve buses to take people to other places to vote. In my district, for example, we have very few taxis or public bus systems. So looking at the rural area, still protecting people's rights is going to be something I know that we can talk definitely about.

Again, let me make it clear that I expect when this conference is completed, and I expect this conference to be completed hopefully very soon, the changes that will ensue will improve access for the disabled community and ensure, I will use the word "ensure," that blind voters are able to vote privately and independently.

One other point I want to add about the technology, too. I know there are certain companies that have actually publicly stated that they can equip every machine, and I hope that as this bill progresses and people are buying machines across this country to update and put integrity into the voting process, that the machines are equipped; the hope is the technology comes through and that en masse machines are equipped.

I look forward to working with the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) and my friend from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), who I mentioned earlier, to secure the adequate funding but also to enact a conference report that absolutely improves access for the disabled community across the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, again, I thank the chairman for his help and support on this issue. We would not be here on the election reform without his diligent leadership, and I thank the gentleman.

Earlier in my statement, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledged and expressed my gratitude to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), my distinguished colleague, who is, as many know, the author of the Americans with Disabilities Act and who has been a great champion of people with disabilities and their rights.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN), and I thank him for his leadership on this issue and so many others. He has been extraordinarily helpful in getting the election reform legislation to the place it is now. I think this motion he now makes, and it is supported by both the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and myself, is an important one; and I want to thank him for that.

Mr. Speaker, in the 20 months since our last national election, the American people have seen the very best and very worst that democracy has to offer. The disenfranchisement of millions of Americans who fell prey to unreliable, outdated voting machines as well as the wide bipartisan support in the Congress for the Federal election reform will hopefully change that.

Members on both sides of the aisle have spoken eloquently and sincerely about safeguarding our most cherished democratic right: the right to vote and to have one's vote counted.

Yet our work is not done, for who among us would accept election reform that fails to ensure the privacy and independence of millions of eligible voters at the ballot box? None of us, I would argue, because the right to exercise the franchise under conditions that afford privacy and independence is intimately American and bound up in what it means to be a free and equal citizen in a democratic society. Yet in thousands of polling places across the country, voters who are physically, visually, or mentally challenged enjoy less privacy and independence when they exercise their sacred right to vote than do other voters.

That is why I urge all Members to support this important motion to instruct offered by our colleague, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN). It is fair and it makes sense. It recognizes, as most of us do, that the election reform conference report should combine the best of the House-passed Help America Vote Act with the Senate-passed bill. To that end, the gentleman from Rhode Island's motion instructs the House conferees to agree to section 101(A)(3) of the Senate amendment to the House bill.

This section states that by January 2007 voting systems shall be accessible for individuals with disabilities, including nonvisual accessibility for the blind and visually impaired, in a manner that provides the same opportunity for access and participation, including privacy and independence, as for other voters.

Make no mistake about it, I am proud of the Help America Vote Act. I am proud of the work that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and I and so many others, including the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) and others, helped us achieve. But we have not finished the job yet, Mr. Speaker; and we need to do that.

We need to pass this motion and then hopefully the conference will become even more energized than it has been. We are late, not too late, but we are late in passing a conference report that incorporates, as I said, the best of the House bill and the best of the Senate bill. We need to pass election reform. We need to pass it in the next 3 weeks if at all possible. We need to tell the States the resources they will have available to make their machines not only accessible but accurate as they count every American's vote.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to support this very, very important motion to instruct.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I just rise in very strong support of the motion offered by our colleague from Rhode Island, who is one of four co-chairs with me on the Disabilities Caucus. And it is so important that we do instruct the conferees to accept the Senate version, which would require that we have one voting machine in every polling place, at least, that is accessible to people with disabilities.

As a matter of fact, on July 26 of this year, we will celebrate the 12th anniversary of the Americans with Disabilities Act. I was one of the co-sponsors of that act, as were many of Members who are here serving in this 107th Congress. Certainly, the concept of Americans with Disabilities is one where we would allow them indeed the most precious privilege that we have as Americans, the right to vote and to make it accessible. So I thank the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

I know this body will assuredly unanimously support this motion to instruct the conferees on this election reform bill.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) for the leadership he has shown in bringing us together in terms of true election reforms and the ranking member of his committee, too.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON).

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the leadership of this committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER). I know how diligent they have been in working on this, and most especially to the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) for offering the motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, whether the policy issue is prescription drug coverage, education, or any other matters within the jurisdiction of the Congress, the most fundamental issue facing all of us is restoring the public's faith in democracy. Congress must make electoral reform a top priority, and we hope to see the conclusion of this bill in conference soon.

Constitutionally mandated equal protection of the laws and the Voting Rights Act require an electoral system in which all Americans are able to register as voters, remain on the rolls once registered, and vote free from harassment. Ballots must not be misleading, and every vote must count and be counted.

In the 2000 election, Florida was not the only State where American citizens were denied the full exercise of their fundamental rights and their constitutional franchise. It happened across this Nation. Moreover, most of those excluded from democracy were Americans of color. As such, election reform is the number one legislative priority for the Congressional Black Caucus, and I sincerely hope that it is a top priority for every Member of the 107th Congress. We cannot be silenced until Congress answers the call for electoral reform. This is not a black, white or brown issue. It is an American issue. It is a red, white and blue issue.

It should be of great concern to each of us that if any one of us is improperly denied access to the ballot box or if every ballot cast is not counted, the survival of our democracy depends on the accuracy and integrity of our election system. It is important that conferees make an effective date for election reform in time for the next Presidential election in 2004. Actually, it should have been in time for our congressional elections; but we will go forward, unfortunately with the same system that caused us as much headache as it did in November 2000.

For the second instruction, it is important that the government has the ability as soon as it is feasible to legally check to see if States are, in fact, making the necessary changes that the final election reform bill stimulates. I hope each of my colleagues will do his and her part by voting in favor of this sensible motion to instruct.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct conferees on the election reform bill, H.R. 3295, which has been submitted by my colleague from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN). The motion asks the conferees to agree to the Senate provisions relating to the accessibility of voting systems for individuals with disabilities.

It is essential that at least one voting machine in each polling place be accessible to people with disabilities. This can be done in a manner that provides the same opportunity for access and participation, including privacy and independence, as for other voters.

The language referred to in the gentleman from Rhode Island's motion has been endorsed by a coalition of 17 national organizations representing people with disabilities; and I believe this is the best approach for increasing the participation of all citizens in the electoral process, especially at a time when voter participation has been decreasing.

With the electronic voting technology that exists today, it is possible to enable many individuals with disabilities to record their votes directly and in privacy. This is a fundamental right that all Americans should have. The cost to do this is minimal, and I urge conferees to adopt the language as outlined in the gentleman from Rhode Island's motion.

I also commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for their leadership on this issue and commend the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) for this amendment.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this motion to instruct conferees on election reform offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

Mr. Speaker, this motion to instruct does a very simple, but important, thing. It asks conferees to adopt the language in the Senate bill with respect to voting equipment with persons with disabilities. The Senate language says that there must be at least one accessible voting machine in each polling place, a voting machine that would allow voters with disabilities to vote privately and independently just like everybody else.

Let me share with you the manner in which most blind voters currently cast their ballots at an election. First, they have to bring someone along with them to help them cast their ballot, or they can have a poll worker assist them. Then they have to let the other person read the ballot to them out loud. This is usually done in a voting booth that is adjacent to other voting booths; and in order to vote, the voter with the disability has to announce his or her choice to the person helping him. All of this is likely to be within listening range of other voters at the polling place. Persons with other disabilities also suffer a compromise of their right to cast a secret ballot.

I cannot imagine that this is a manner in which most Americans would be comfortable in voting. Most of us value our privacy and independence in a voting place.

Many of us choose not to reveal our voting choices to others. We view it as our right to keep our choices private, but many voters with disabilities do not currently have this option. Their ballot choices are shared with at least one other person and often more.

This harsh reality was revealed in a recent GAO report. During the 2000 presidential election, the GAO surveyed hundreds of polling places throughout the country to measure access for voters with disabilities. The GAO found that none, not one, of the hundreds of polling places surveyed allowed voters with disabilities to vote privately and independently. Every polling place required voters with disabilities to vote in the somewhat public manner I referred to.

This motion to instruct seeks to remedy this problem by requiring that one voting machine per polling place incorporate assistive technology that allows any voter, including voters with disabilities, to vote privately and independently. Potentially, it could impact millions of voters with disabilities, by allowing them full and equal access to the voting process, and that is the least that they deserve, for that is what most of us expect for ourselves and our constituents when we go to the polling place. It is also likely that for these accessible voting machines to be there, the cost will be borne at least in part by the Federal Government.

I commend the gentleman from Rhode Island for his leadership on this issue. I urge my colleagues to support the motion to instruct.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY).

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) for this excellent legislative initiative, and I want to also thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY), the chairman of the committee, because this is vitally important to our Nation, to our democracy, to the comfort our voters feel when they leave the polls, that the vote is counted, but in this particular instance, we need to ensure that every American is allowed and able to vote. It is not as easy said as done.

We have barriers and we do have roadblocks for people to achieve a normal living in this country. This will go a long way to ensure that those who are disabled are able to make it to the voting polls and cast their ballot for the candidates that they feel are most appropriate for this Nation.

We in Florida, of course, had an interesting election. The gentleman from Ohio's bill speaks to all of the concerns that many Floridians had during that contentious debate. I do want to commend him and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for working so cooperatively on an issue that for a while divided the Nation, but hopefully when this final product makes it to the President's desk, it will unite us as Americans, knowing that when we do, in fact, cast those ballots, those critical ballots, whether it is for city commissioner, county commissioner or President of the United States, they are done accurately, they are done effectively, and they are done without any degree of uncertainty.

The gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) has been the leader on this and a number of other issues, and I commend him and encourage and urge my colleagues to be fully supportive of this motion to instruct. It will not only improve the bill substantially but will improve the lives of millions of Americans who up until now may have found themselves disenfranchised by polling places that were not familiar, not comfortable, not accessible.

So I think this is something overdue, quite frankly, long overdue in the annals of our electoral system, and I commend the gentleman for his great efforts in bringing this to our attention and urge everybody to universally support this motion to instruct.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS).

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to express strong support for the Langevin-Hoyer-Conyers motion to instruct conferees on the election reform bill. Election reform is one of the most important issues that we will face in the 107th Congress.

Last year, we cast historic bipartisan election reform language and legislation that will significantly improve our election system. More importantly, this legislation will protect one of our most cherished democratic rights, the right to vote.

In passing the Help America Vote Act, we understood that this legislation was not perfect. One area that needs to be improved on is the language concerning the right of voters with disabilities and their access to polling places, and I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN), for his leadership on this issue.

One of the greatest challenges voters face are inaccessible buildings and voting machines. According to the GAO, 84 percent of polling places examined in the last election were found to have one or more physical impediments which would limit people's access, people with disabilities. This is appalling. In my view, we need to make polling places and voting machines fully accessible to elderly, to frail, to those with disabilities.

Affording all people the opportunity to cast a secret ballot is of critical importance to our election system. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the Senate language to require States to maintain voting systems that are accessible to disabled and elderly voters.

Finally, I am hopeful that as we move forward on this issue Congress will enact a Federal election reform bill that ensures every single vote is counted and that no American is ever disenfranchised again. We must regain the trust and full participation of voters across this country.

This is a great first step and I commend my colleagues who are leaders in this area, and I urge all of us in this House to support the motion that is before us this afternoon.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD).

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman for yielding me the time.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this important motion which I offered with my good friend, the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN), the cochair of the House Disabilities Caucus, and I want to thank him for his leadership on these issues, as well as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY).

The right to vote, Mr. Speaker, is the most basic and fundamental right we have as Americans, and despite the importance of this constitutionally important and constitutionally protected right, every election there are millions of citizens with disabilities who find it difficult, if not impossible, to cast their ballot.

Across the country, thousands of visually impaired people, voters, are unable to cast a secret vote, a right afforded to every other American, because of their inability to read the ballot visually.

This motion to instruct asks the conferees to include language passed by the Senate that requires every polling place to offer at least one voting machine equipped for individuals with disabilities. That is the least we can do, Mr. Speaker, to provide access to voting for every American, every citizen.

This motion is about fairness, and people with disabilities deserve equal access to voting. Over the years, Congress has worked hard to ensure that every person's voice is heard regardless of race, religion or ethnic background. It is long past time that we provide the same opportunity to individuals with disabilities.

This motion is very timely. We have just returned from celebrating the 4th of July, the birth of our great Nation. We have the opportunity today, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the vision of our Founding Fathers is realized, that every American has an equal opportunity to vote.

I urge Members to vote yes for this important motion, and again, I thank the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN) for his leadership on this important issue.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I again want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD) for his support of this issue. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, again, I support this motion, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

In closing, I just want to reiterate my appreciation to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) for his leadership both on election reform and on disabilities issues and agreeing to support this motion to instruct. We would not be where we are on election reform without his support and I thank him.

Mr. Speaker, as I previously mentioned, I offered this motion in honor of Justin Dart, the father of the Americans with Disabilities Act and an ardent supporter of greater access to voting. Last year during the ADA anniversary celebration Justin said, Let us rise above politics as usual. Let us join together, Republican, Democrats, Independents, Americans. Let us embrace each other in love for individual human life. Let us unite in action to keep the sacred pledge, life, liberty and justice for all.

I ask my colleagues to help empower all Americans by voting for this motion to instruct.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the motion to instruct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The Chair announces that this vote will be followed by two 5-minute votes on motions to suspend the rules considered earlier today.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4635, ARMING PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM ACT

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-557) on the resolution (H. Res. 472) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4635) to amend title 49, United States Code, to establish a program for Federal flight deck officers, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2486, INLAND FLOOD FORECASTING AND WARNING SYSTEM ACT OF 2002

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-558) on the resolution (H. Res. 473) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2486) to authorize the National Weather Service to conduct research and development, training, and outreach activities relating to tropical cyclone inland forecasting improvement, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2733, ENTERPRISE INTEGRATION ACT OF 2002

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-559) on the resolution (H. Res. 474) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2733) to authorize the National Institute of Standards and Technology to work with major manufacturing industries on an initiative of standards development and implementation for electronic enterprise integration, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4687, NATIONAL CONSTRUCTION SAFETY TEAM ACT

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107-560) on the resolution (H. Res. 475) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4687) to provide for the establishment of investigative teams to assess building performance and emergency response and evacuation procedures in the wake of any building failure that has resulted in substantial loss of life or that pose significant potential of substantial loss of life, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was traveling on official House business and missed rollcall votes 283 and 284. Had I been present, I would have voted aye on rollcall 283 and aye on rollcall 284.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION NOT TO RUN FOR REELECTION

(Mrs. MEEK of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, Members of my beloved House, it is no secret that I love this institution and I love my job in Congress. Working with all of you over the years has been one of the great joys of my life.

I told this to my constituents in Miami on Sunday, because they mean a lot to me. And I love all of you, too, both the Republicans and the Democrats, even the independents, so I wanted you to hear it from me directly that I have decided not to run for reelection this fall. So you will have me until December. I have enjoyed this stay. It has been a good run, Mr. Speaker. It has been a good run.

I was elected to Congress in 1992. CORRINE BROWN, ALCEE HASTINGS and I were the first African Americans elected from the State of Florida since right after Reconstruction. I said then that we waited 100 years to get to this body, so we were very anxious to get to work, and so we did. I came here after 13 years as a State representative and a State senator in the Florida legislature.

I have been impressed with the House from the very first. Every time I look at the Capitol dome and look at Lady Liberty I am more and more in awe. It will never get old to me. I am a good American. I love America.

I was elected to Congress during a crisis time in my community. Hurricane Andrew, the costliest hurricane of all time, had just devastated the entire south end of my district. We worked very hard together, both Republicans and Democrats.

I came here with two Republicans, we were together in the Florida legislature, ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN and LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART, and CORRINE BROWN, "Queen CORRINE," from the Florida legislature. We came here together and we have stood hand in hand ever since. And ALCEE HASTINGS came with us. He reached the highest pinnacle of the judiciary in our State as a Federal judge. So we came here in honor, and we love this Congress and we love this country.

So while our constituents were cleaning up all of the devastation by the hurricane, I came to the Congress, and the Congress responded and helped us build back that community. It has been a lot of work, Mr. Speaker, and a lot of it, the people you see here, helped make it happen through the years. They helped us restore our community, helped us restore the dignity and the quality of life of many of the people we represented.

A lot of problems arise in my district many times. I bring them here to your lap and to your feet and to your hands, and many of you, particularly my comrades and colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations, they always do whatever they can to help. Always. That is why I love this body so very much. I was just gifted and blessed to be placed on the Committee on Appropriations so I could bring the direct wishes and concerns of my constituency to this body, and I appreciate it.

I was confirmed just last fall on the evening of September 11 when I joined so many of you on the steps of the Capitol the evening after the terrorist attacks on New York and the Pentagon and we sang God Bless America together, Democrats and Republicans, Northerners and Southerners and Westerners, one Nation under God, indivisible, united and strong.

Do I sound maudlin? Do I sound soft? Do I sound sad? I never asked for forgiveness for standing up for this country. I never asked for forgiveness for standing up for military preparedness. I was around during World War II. I will always want this country to be strong and to be prepared.

Throughout my career I have always tried to think of the little people and to use the power of government to help improve their lives. I know what it is like not to have much and not to have many prospects. I rose from the lowest part of the neighborhood I grew up in Tallahassee. They called it The Bottom. It was "the black bottom." I was thinking of this the other day because just a few weeks ago the adventurer CURT took me to Moscow and Beijing on a CODEL. I met with the Presidents of Russia and China. I have discussed national issues with Presidents Carter, Clinton, and Bush. I have been there, Mr. Speaker. I have talked to all of them, walked with kings as the poet would say, but not lost the common touch.

This one black woman from The Bottom, it was one day in the State capitol in Florida that I was not even able during those days to go into the capitol and I lived two blocks from the capitol in Tallahassee, and I always looked up at the capitol and wondered if some day I would become a part of it. Who would imagine that I would become a part of the Florida senate, of the Florida house? Who would imagine that I would come here to Washington to be in the Halls of Congress? This is a revered body. It is a body that is well respected.

I grew up during the period of intolerance and strict segregation. It was so unfair, and it left a lasting impression on me, and I knew I had to continue to work. I saw good people held down and prevented from rising to their potential simply because of their color. I knew of good men who were killed for the same reason. I saw that power could be used to build or destroy, and I saw how powerlessness could lead to frustration and anger.

I can only state to this Congress, to every last one of you, how much I respect my blackness and my racial identity. I feel very strongly that there is still a debt we owe to the people who came before us.

When I was a child, I heard Roland Hayes sing. I got a chance to hear George Washington Carver speak. I heard W.E.B. DuBois speak. I heard Marian Anderson sing. I read the poems of Countee Cullen. So that great diversity and love that God has given came from my experience as a black person.

I stand before you today as the granddaughter of a slave. How wonderful. When you look at me, you can see that our Nation's legacy of slavery and racism is not so far removed from our lives today. But we have to keep fighting. One of the reasons that I was elected to this office was to remind you of that, and I have tried to do so to the best of my ability.

In my 10 years in the Congress and over three decades of service to my community, I have tried to live by a commitment every day of my life, and that is service is a price you pay for the space that God has let you occupy.

Because of the love of a strong Christian family, loving parents, protective older brothers and sisters, outsiders who took an interest in me, both white and black, and a strong desire to succeed, I was able to move forward.

Education is the springboard, Mr. Speaker. I have stood for it since I have been here. Improving the quality of life in housing and good health care, these are springboards. So I know it is a vehicle, and that is why I think we should continue in the Halls of Congress to do so.

I wanted to say a few things here today because of what I have lived through. We do not have time for me to go through all of it. One of these days I will write a book so each of you can read it. And other than that I will be coming back from time to time. I have six grandchildren and I have three children, and they all know of my legacy. And when I go back home, I am not going to sit still.

My colleagues need to know some of the reasons why I am not retiring. I am not retiring because I am so feeble I cannot come up here every day. I am not retiring because I do not feel I can do the job, and I am not retiring because I feel that if I were to run I would be defeated. Mr. Speaker, I am almost undefeatable. I am almost that way in my mind, so that is no reason why I am leaving. But I want to go now, because I have other things to do and other careers to pursue.

I love this country very much, and serving it has been the greatest honor of my life. We need more respect. We need respect of diversity, we need to embrace it, and we have to listen. I fully appreciate now how progress rarely comes in giant steps, but in small, incremental lurches forward. So I will retire from Congress, fully confident that our great Nation will continue to prosper.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, the former President of Morehouse College said, "It isn't a calamity to die with dreams unfulfilled, but it is a calamity not to dream."

Mr. Speaker, I hope all of my colleagues will remember me as someone who tried as hard as she could to do both.

NEVER CAN SAY GOOD-BYE

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I just want to echo the sentiments on this side of the aisle about our sadness regarding the departure from this wonderful institution of our dear colleague, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

In my 20 years of elective office, I have served every one of those days with my colleague, CARRIE MEEK. The Congresswoman from Florida has been a distinguished member of every institution I have had the pleasure to serve. In the Florida house we served together. We moved together to the Florida senate, and then we served here in the U.S. Congress.

In those many years, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) has distinguished herself as a dedicated public servant, carrying the water on so many items of interest to south Florida and, indeed, our Nation; because I think her legacy extends far beyond her Liberty City district, far beyond our Sunshine State, far beyond our borders. She leaves a legacy of leadership, of dignity, of dedication, and a real sense of community service.

CARRIE, we are going to have you to kick around for a lot of years. You are not retiring; you are going to be in our hearts and you are going to be in our community for many decades to come. I cannot imagine serving here without you. So every day when we are voting, you will be a part of this institution, you will be a part of our body, you will be a part of our legacy. Asi que te va vamos a estranoi, mi amiga. You are my friend. We have traveled many a hard road together, and we will continue that struggle together for many more years. You are not leaving, so we are not going to say good-bye. Adios, mi amiga.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, July 8, 2002, I was unavoidably detained in my district on official business, and I missed rollcall votes, numbers 283 and 284. If I was present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall vote 283 and "aye" on rollcall vote 284.

MANY THANKS TO CARRIE MEEK, A GREAT AMERICAN

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I have had the honor of serving with the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) on the Committee on Appropriations for many years now. We saw the parade of Members from both sides of the aisle, all sorts of ideologies, come and give the gentlewoman a hug. They gave her a hug not for her, although she appreciated it; they gave her a hug for themselves. She is an historic leader of this House, an historic leader of her State, and a great American. She loves this country, and the great news is her country loves her.

The gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) is a person of great depth, of great intellect, of great ability, who is as humble an individual as I know, as effective an individual as I know.

And, CARRIE, all of us will miss you in the day-to-day operations of this body. But as the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) indicated, we know that you are not going. We think you are probably going to be coming here regularly to visit family. Who knows?

But we certainly want to say to the gentlewoman that we thank her. We thank her for being her, for being our friend, for being such a great Member of this House. She has brought honor to this House, she has brought humanity to this House, and she has brought great service to her district.

EXTENDING DEEP LOVE AND APPRECIATION

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my words to that of the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and the Florida delegation in extending our deepest love and appreciation to our treasured colleague from the State of Florida (Mrs. MEEK). Without question, her spirit carries this institution, and she has given hope, not only to her district, but to the people of our entire country. Each of us here in the House knows we are serving with an historic figure, and we thank her family, we thank the people of Florida, of Miami, for sending her here in order that our country be a better place in which to live.

I think every single Member here whose life she has touched is a better person for knowing her. She has strengthened us when we were at our weakest, she has made us laugh when we were taking ourselves too seriously, and even as recently as this afternoon she was fighting for the weakest and the poorest among us in the Committee on Appropriations in a several-year effort that she has fought to get rid of usurious lending and check-cashing facilities across this country that prey on the poorest among us.

I will never meet another person like the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), and I say to the gentlewoman, I hope that you will come back to us as often as you wish, because you have a seat in the office of every single person on both sides of the aisle of this Chamber. You are held in the highest regard, and you truly have fulfilled the oath that you took to represent the interests of our country.

It has been my great privilege to serve with you, and I thank you for your work on behalf of the citizens not just of your district or mine, but our entire country and the world. You are one of a kind. God bless you.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise, too, to let the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) know that, from this side of the aisle, the feelings that have been already expressed about her personally are shared broadly across this body.

I say to the gentlewoman from Florida, we have shared a lot of time together, I have shared time on both sides of the aisle, and we have come through a lot together. We came through Hurricane Andrew. When it got through messing with the gentlewoman's folks, it came down to Louisiana and messed with mine, and we share the horrors of those tragic days with our constituents together, and helped rebuild together.

More importantly, I say to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), she has been a dear friend, a dear friend to so many of us. We have come to love and admire her in so many ways.

I have often said that this House is filled with real people who represent real people. In a real sense, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) has literally represented the best of what the House of Representatives is all about. It is about people coming from the bottoms, the small places of America, and representing them with dignity and honor and respect; and she has done that in a magnificent fashion.

She has honored this body by her presence. She will be remembered a long time by more than those grandchildren who love her so much. She will be remembered with honor and love by all of us in this House for the time we have been privileged to share with her here.

I wish you bon voyage, CARRIE. I hope you have a great time in whatever you do.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am here to speak on behalf of guys with white hair, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), and me. The gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) used to play the game with us all the time; and we knew she knew who we were, but she would play like she did not. But her sense of humor and her ability to reach down into people's souls really makes the difference.

Many Members come here and we all think or we all try not to lose touch with where we came from; but there is no question, when the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) speaks on this floor, there is no question that she has not forgotten where she came from or the people around her, who they were, and what they struggle with.

Her voice has been a consistent and solid voice for the people in this society we try to give a hand up to, but the gentlewoman from Florida would never let us get away with just trying. She insisted that we do it. We are going to miss her, and they are going to miss her. All of us are going to miss her coming up the aisle saying, "the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. MORAN." We are going to miss her a lot.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE
CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CON-
GRESS

(Mr. DIAZ-BALART asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, as one reads history, many times it seems as though the figures that one encounters are larger than life. It is uncommon to be absolutely certain that, during one's life, one has met someone who is like the greatest of the characters that one has met in history.

That one person that I know, and am absolutely certain that she has already come to be known not only as one of the greatest orators in the history of Florida, one of the greatest public servants in the history of Florida, but one of the greatest Floridians, is the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

I have had the honor, the profound honor and privilege, to know her and to be her friend since we served together in the Florida legislature; and her wisdom and her fairness and her compassion and her goodness and her strength and toughness on behalf of those in need are legendary, and will be more legendary each day.

I join all Floridians, all who have known her, in thanking her, in wishing her well, in wishing her and her family and her son, who will be here with us soon, Godspeed. Thank you, CARRIE.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE
CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CON-
GRESS

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I know that I will have an opportunity to pay tribute to the distinguished gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) at a later time, but I simply wanted to not have this RECORD close, after she has made such an eloquent statement to her colleagues, without commenting on what she means to those of us who have had the privilege of serving with her and on what she means to Florida and to the Nation.

The gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) is a renaissance woman. She is one who will come to the floor with passion, but also with knowledge. She is one that is unbeatable in debate because she is not one who memorizes or tries to recapture facts she does not know. She speaks both from the heart, but as well, from an internal, deeply embedded sense of knowledge of humanity and the needs of our people, no matter who they are.

I have heard her quote from those who many of us only read about, and we will miss the eloquence of a stateswoman who can turn heads and minds on issues that they thought they would come to the floor and vote in the opposite way.

It is well known that we expect to be fortunate enough to be able to serve, those of us who may get reelected, with her distinguished son. But what I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I want the RECORD to be able to account for as she gives her remarks this evening, is that she is a great woman, a woman of affection and love, and that we love her; and, as well, she has been someone who has, in the deepest of need, she has gone there and responded to the need, but also she has solved the need. That is for her constituents in Florida, that is for the people of the United States of America, and those who may call upon her, who do not know her but see her as a soldier or sojourner for truth.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE
CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CON-
GRESS

(Mr. DEUTSCH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, this is with both great pride and sadness that I rise today to join what I really think are unprecedented spontaneous words of Members to talk about our friend and our colleague, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

I joined this Chamber with her 10 years ago with several other Members from Florida, and particularly from south Florida. Three of us were elected: myself, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART).

For those of us in south Florida, we literally stepped on the shoulders of giants: Claude Pepper, Dante Fascell, Bill Lehman. I think for all of us those truly were icons in American history. We felt we could fill their shoes, but we knew of their legacy. I think after 10 years it is absolutely clear that at least one of us has attained that legacy, and that is the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), who really in the history of America stands out as a unique leader.

Clearly not just in the history of Florida, in the history of south Florida, but truly in the history of America she is an icon, an icon in terms of integrity, accomplishment, work, and compassion. I think that is something that she will remain for the rest of her life and for all history. Her legacy is not just her good works but her family, as well, who join her in public service and will continue.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE
CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CON-
GRESS

(Mr. PRICE of North Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my words of tribute to the spontaneous demonstration this afternoon on behalf of our colleague, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), who has recently announced her retirement. This is an announcement that caught us by surprise and that we regret; but we welcome this chance to pay tribute to the gentlewoman from Florida for whom we have great admiration and affection.

I have sat next to the gentlewoman from Florida on both of my Appropriations subcommittees for some years now, both the Subcommittee on VA, HUD and Independent Agencies and the Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service and General Government. We have sat through many hearings and many markups together. We have had some good times, and we have had some real challenges. I have developed great affection and respect for the gentlewoman from Florida during this period of service.

The gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) is a fighter. I will never forget the kind of fight she made for the hurricane victims when her district was stricken some years ago. This very day, I have seen her fighting for people without adequate banking services in our Committee on Appropriations.

The gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) does not always win these fights, but she always fights with conviction, with a compelling case, and with the kind of style that makes her a very hard person to oppose. She has a warm and winning way; she wins admiration and friendship on both sides of the aisle. She is a unique Member of this body. I have counted it a real privilege to serve with her and am looking forward to several months more of service as we go through the appropriations cycle.

I wanted to rush over here when I saw this spontaneous tribute arising on the House floor, because I am so fond of Mrs. MEEK and so admiring of her. I am pleased this afternoon to add my words of tribute, to wish her well, and to say that in her months remaining here I anticipate many more good fights and good times as we serve together.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE
CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CON-
GRESS

(Ms. WATSON of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WATSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to give my tribute this afternoon, but we cannot be in these Chambers or in hearing distance and not be compelled to come up and add to this tribute. We are going to say more later.

I have known the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) for almost 30 years now. I remember her as a legislator who rushed up to me one day and said, What is the name of that bill, that bill? What is the number of that bill that you had? We want to do it in Florida. She was always probing, always seeking to make good public law.

We served together in Noble Women many years ago. I just went up to her and I said, I want to take credit for getting you here in 1992. After that very devastating earthquake she called my office. We had had a big uprising in Los Angeles. She said, What can I do? I have two young men running against me. I said, Turn your headquarters into an emergency relief center. She did that. She gave out beds and blankets and food, and she ended up in the place where she needed to be; that was in the House of Representatives.

She has served with distinction, but most of all, she has served with heart, directly under God, and shared that with all of us. For that, we will be eternally grateful to you, CARRIE. We love you.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE CARRIE MEEK, MEMBER OF CON- GRESS

(Mrs. JONES of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it just happens that today I had on the great colors red and white. I am pleased, as a member of the Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., an international woman's sorority, to stand here to salute my soror, the Honorable gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

It has been wonderful to have an opportunity to serve in the House of Representatives with her. We had a wonderful chance to talk about the great Delta days, about Bethune College, about basketball. In fact, recently she and I coached the Congressional Basketball Team called the Hills Angels as we played the Georgetown law faculty.

But more importantly, she is full of history, full of wonder, full of grace; and I am so pleased and blessed to have had the opportunity to serve in the House of Representatives with her, if only for 4 years.

□ 1700

In your lifetime God gives you the opportunity to be touched by a number of people. I am so pleased that I had a chance to be touched by this wonderful, wonderful woman called CARRIE MEEK. And I look forward to your further years of service. We will not let you retire. We may let you leave here, but we have other jobs for you, Mrs. CARRIE MEEK.

On behalf of all the Deltas from across the world, 190,000 strong, we salute our soror, CARRIE MEEK.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

REFORMING THE SEC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, today the President gave a long, rather long speech full of words that really administered a pretty heavy feather duster to the miscreants on Wall Street, the CEOs, the analysts and the others who have been robbing our corporations, our economy, blind. He said he was not going to put up with it anymore. He was going to get tough.

But it is more what he did not say than what he did say that is important. He did not say he would support tough legislation to overhaul the securities firms, the Sarbanes bill. He did go on to say he would support the weaker House version, the one that really would not do anything for pension reform or auditing, the show bills that passed the House here before this thing really imploded, that the Republican majority pushed through. They would still allow corporations to direct their employees to be stuck with stock and would not really fix the problems of auditing and those things.

He did not talk about corporate tax dodges. The phony incorporations of U.S. firms in Bermuda to avoid tens of millions of dollars in taxes. He did not talk about rescinding his order which would allow corporate lawbreakers to get government contracts. He did not say a word about Harvey Pitt, the toothless watchdog of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Now the principal watchdog over America's securities firms and the stock markets and all those financial investments, all of those very complicated, high falooting things which have allowed people to steal hundreds of millions, billions, of dollars, bankrupt companies, put people out of work, steal their pensions and crater the 401(k)s of tens of thousands of American. We have an organization already in place that is supposed to take care of that. The Securities and Exchange Commission.

Earlier this year, just a couple of months ago, the President proposed a zero funding increase for them. Today, he pretended that he had been asking for a long time for more money for the SEC. He has not been, but I am glad that he has been born again in asking for some increase. But the increase he is asking for is a tiny fraction of the money that has been stolen. It will be inadequate to make the SEC the kind of watchdog we want as long as Harvey Pitt is the chairman.

Now, Harvey Pitt is a former securities lawyer. He is so compromised that when he recently met with a firm that was being investigated and he was questioned about it, he said, well, look, you cannot ask me not to meet with firms that are being investigated by the SEC just because I represented them, because then I would not be able to meet with anybody.

This is our watchdog. This is the President's appointee. This is the guy who is going to bring honesty. Come on. If that gentleman is not removed the President is not serious.

Recently the SEC tried to do an enforcement action against Ernst & Young. There were three commissioners present. They heard the evidence and at the end, the evidence was compelling, Ernst & Young should pay a fine. They had committed some improprieties. But guess what? Only one of the three SEC, Securities and Exchange Commission, members could vote because the other two were so compromised that they would have been penalized under law for voting because of their associations with this firm. So the one voted to penalize them, the Clinton appointee. But then an administrative law judge said, you cannot convict these people with one Securities and Exchange commissioner. You have to have more than one.

So here we have a Securities and Exchange Commission which is so compromised with their contacts, with their clients, who have represented all these people robbing America blind that they cannot even vote on enforcement actions. And the President is trying to tell us with his speech today, by God, he is taking care of this problem.

He has not taken care of the problem. He has tried to take care of one problem today and that is the political problem he has, the gathering storm of anger in this country that is beginning to look for someone to blame for the fact that billions of dollars of wealth have evaporated.

Americans are opening their 401(k) statements this month and many of them are shocked, disappointed and, yes, angered. They want to know who is responsible. How could these high-flying companies, how could these CEOs who are paying themselves tens of millions, hundreds of millions of dollars, boards of directors loaning themselves hundreds of millions of dollars, how could they suddenly be worthless? How could their 401(k)s have dropped so much? Because the money was stolen. And because there is no one home to enforce the law.

The Securities and Exchange Commission is the place to enforce the law, and until the President replaces the compromised people on the SEC; he has even got one nominated now, he comes from a securities firm. But as soon as that person gets there, he will not be able to vote on any of these things because they worked on all of these things. These are their buddies, the people they go to the luncheons with, the country club, they go yachting with, they go to their multimillion-dollar homes in Florida with.

We need to clean up this mess. The President had a chance today; he did not take it. Perhaps we can give him another chance again soon. Perhaps the Republican leaders of the House will relent and allow real reforms for pensions, real reforms for securities. Maybe they will undo some of the things they did back in 1995, which essentially exempted these securities firms from prosecution.

We can take some real measures here if there is the will. But there is so much money flooding from these people into politics that I fear we will not get there.

Some of us will continue to speak out. Others will begin to speak out. But will they put their vote where their mouth is? And will the President really put firm steps where his rhetoric is? Not today.

Tomorrow is another day. Americans will be a little madder tomorrow. This will still be going on tomorrow. Let us see what happens then.

DISASTER IN SOUTH DAKOTA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. THUNE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak this afternoon to some issues that are important to my State.

In the last week I have had the opportunity to travel the State of South Dakota and witness some enormous devastation that our State has experienced as a result of drought. It was announced yesterday that the month of June was the driest in the 114-year history of our State. In western South Dakota we have farmers and ranchers who are experiencing tremendous economic impacts, losing, having to sell and liquidate their herds. We need a solution.

I will continue to prevail upon this body, upon my colleagues here, as I have already, to provide assistance to our farmers and ranchers who are so desperately in need of help this year.

In my judgment, the drought we are experiencing in South Dakota is not unlike many of the other natural disasters that affect other parts of this country, and it demands that this Congress and the people of this country step up and support those in my State who are suffering so desperately this year.

I also had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to witness firsthand some of the devastation that resulted as a result of the Grizzly Gulch fire, fire that ravaged about 11,000 acres of South Dakota this last week. Fortunately, it is under control; it is being contained. For that, we owe an incredible debt of gratitude to the extraordinary effort that was made by fire fighters all across South Dakota, volunteers who came and joined the Federal fire fighters who were doing such a great job of controlling, containing that blaze.

It came very, very close, right down to the city's edge, the city of Deadwood and other communities that would be impacted. It burned a number of structures and homes, but it did not come into the community as a result of the extraordinary efforts; and for that, I give the fire fighters of my State, many of them volunteers from across our State, great credit for the tremendous work that they did in controlling that blaze.

The people of my State have pulled together as they do in times of adversity to address this tragedy. We saved the community of Deadwood. And in South Dakota, I will tell my colleagues, we are open and ready for business. Those who like to vacation, we invite them to South Dakota. We have a number of wonderful family vacation attractions. It is very family-friendly. It is affordable. We have lakes and hills and bike trails, Mount Rushmore, Crazy Horse, many of the other great attractions that are unique to South Dakota. We want people of this country to come to our State and experience the wonderful beauty of it and take in many of the attractions that are available to them.

One thing that came out of this also, Mr. Speaker, and was reinforced, is that we need a change in forest policy in this country. Fires are a natural part of a forest system. We know that. But the intensity of those fires is not natural. We need to reduce the fuel loads that exist in places, in the Black Hills National Forest. We have seen fires in other parts of the country this year, but we have experienced firsthand fires in my State, and we have enormous loads of fuel on the ground in places that need to be reduced or we will be dealing with catastrophic fires throughout the course of the summer.

The Forest Service needs the authority to clear the dead trees that are creating the fuel loads that are presenting the risk of catastrophic fire. I have been trying now for several months to get a legislative solution in place that would give the Forest Service the tools they need to prevent catastrophic fires. Those efforts have been resisted to this point in the other body. Last week's fire should be a reminder and force us all to take another look at the policies in this country.

We have in this country, in my opinion, a big fire policy; as a result, we have big fires. We are seeing them burn in Arizona and Colorado and now South Dakota. We need reforms, Mr. Speaker, that will enable the Forest Service to address these incredible risks that exist in our forests today.

The Forest Service, 40 percent litigation and appeals; 40 percent of the dollars that we appropriate for the Forest Service are spent fighting lawsuits and appeals that are brought on by groups who are trying to prevent the Forest Service from doing what they know they need to do and what the public knows needs to be done to keep our forests healthy.

I urge my colleagues to work with those of us that live in areas that are at risk of catastrophic fire to make changes in our policies that will protect the lives and the property of people of my State and others like it.

The Blacks Hills National Forest is South Dakota's treasure, but it is also America's treasure, and we need to treat it that way. Our State is experiencing historic droughts; that is a disaster. With that comes the risk of fire, fires that we know are going to be frequent in years like this. But the intensity of those fires, Mr. Speaker, is something we can address. We have within our control the ability and the power to give the Forest Service the tools that they need, the authority they need to go in there and manage and treat these forests, to clear those dead trees and that dead timber in a way that will prevent these forest fires from happening in the future.

In one part of Beaver Park, which is in the Sturgis area of South Dakota, we have there 70 tons of fuel on the ground in an area where the average is 7 tons of fuel, primarily as a result of the pine beetle infestation which has been killing trees at a rampant pace. In the last couple of years, in 1999, there were 15,000 trees that were affected by the pine beetle. In 2001, that was 100,000 trees. Yet, because of lawsuits, because of litigation, because of appeals and dilatory tactics, the Forest Service is unable to go in and take the steps necessary to keep the lives and property of people safe and to make sure that our forests are healthy.

Mr. Speaker, today I ask my colleagues in this body to work with me to make the necessary changes to give the Forest Service the tools they need and the authority they need to do the job of keeping our forests safe, protecting our lives and property, and our forests healthy.

RAIDING THE SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to continue what has become my weekly clocking of the continuing Republican raid on our Nation's Social Security trust fund.

□ 1715

Four weeks have passed since I first came to this floor, unveiled our debt clock and our debt graphs and started documenting the truth to the American people about the Social Security trust fund.

The truth is that House Republican leaders have turned their back on America's senior citizens and are raiding billions every day from our Social Security trust fund. When President Clinton left office, our Nation had finally moved into an annual balance of accounts, and we were yielding even a small surplus. Though we had a huge accumulated debt that we were beginning to pay off, our Nation's financial house was put in order.

What has happened in just a few years under Republican leadership is that we have begun now to amass huge additional debts nationally, and there is only one place where they are going to get the funds to pay for the war, to pay for the tax breaks that have been given to the wealthiest in this country and the corporate cowboys that we see now being brought before congressional committees, and that is, our Nation's Social Security trust fund.

Do the Republicans have a plan to stop this raid? No, they do not, and in fact, today, the total raid has run now to over $235 billion. That averages out to about $837 for every single American who will qualify for Social Security. When I first came to this floor 4 weeks ago, they dipped into the Social Security trust fund to a raid of $208 billion, and in just 4 weeks, that has gone up an additional $27 billion.

The Republicans in this institution, at least their leadership, are in avoidance, hoping to dodge this issue in the fall's election. They will not even allow a debate on Social Security reform because they know that their risky idea of privatization to try to cover up what is really going on with the accumulated trust funds will be exposed for what it is, and that is, a gamble, not a guarantee.

Just look at what has been happening in the stock market, if my colleagues want to know something about gambles. The American people deserve better. Our working families deserve better and our seniors deserve better.

Working families have earned the right, not the privilege, the right to a secure retirement, and Republican leaders must put Social Security first, not dip further and further into the trust fund, violating the very lock box promise they made seven times not to dip into Social Security reserves in order to pay for other things.

The urgency is real and especially pronounced in the wake of the Enron collapse, WorldCom and other corporate scandals. Thousands have already lost their retirement checks in the private sector across this country, and many have been forced to return to work or to extend their career.

In his own case, President Bush yesterday in a White House press conference commented about confusing accounting procedures that were used to mask nearly three-quarters of a million dollars that he yielded from the early sale of stock in a firm on which he had sat, actually an oil company on which he had sat on the board. When the national press asked him how it was possible that he had sold this stock early and yielded those dollars, he said he still had not figured it out completely. That was reported in three different newspapers today.

Let us reflect on that statement for a moment. President Bush, a former corporate director and member of the auditing committee of that corporation, when pressed about possible corporate bookkeeping practices, replies, I still have not figured it out completely.

Should the American people expect that? We should expect more. We deserve more. America needs tough accounting standards for private sector plans, and it needs tough accounting standards for Social Security because these dollars have to be replaced somehow.

So the time has come for financial and political accountability. Republican leaders should be held responsible and they will be in this coming November's election.

WE NEED SMALLER GOVERNMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, because of the corporate scandals at WorldCom, Enron and Global Crossing, C-SPAN a few days ago asked people call in on the question of whether they had lost their faith in American corporations.

The problem is that bigger and bigger government has led to and resulted in bigger and bigger businesses controlling or dominating almost every industry or business sector. Almost every major problem we have today has been made worse because liberals over the last many years have made our government at the Federal and now even at the State levels far too big.

Big government, in the end, really helps only extremely big businesses and the bureaucrats who work for the government. The big giants in every industry have come to the government and have gotten the government contracts, the favorable regulatory rulings, the tax break, the insider sweetheart deals in trade deals and so forth. So the big keep getting bigger and small businesses and small farms go under or struggle to survive, and now even medium-sized businesses even barely hang on.

Despite the most economic leverage of any Nation in the world and the fact that every nation drools to get into our markets, we have not used this economic leverage to help American small- and medium-sized businesses and workers, and instead have helped only big multinational companies.

Liberals always claim they are for the little guy. Yet their policies have hurt the little man in almost every way. For example, big government has driven medical costs almost out of sight.

Another example, liberals expanded the FDA and made it so big and bureaucratic that it now takes an average of over 10 years and over $850 million to get a drug to market. This is why prescription drugs cost so much. People wonder why and do not realize it is their own government that has done it to them.

Big government liberals and their allies in the environmental movement protest every time anyone wants to cut any trees, dig for any coal, drill for any oil, or produce any natural gas. This has caused many small companies to go out of business and forced them to merge and has driven up prices and destroyed jobs. This has hurt the poor and lower-income and working people most of all.

I am sick and tired of seeing so many American jobs go to other countries. However, when big government taxes and regulates small businesses or small farms out of business, it simply means that the big keep getting bigger. Then the big giants have to go where labor and regulatory costs are the lowest, and they are much more likely to move out of the country, and then our people wonder why we keep losing so many good jobs. Well, it is primarily because of a Federal Government that has grown so big and so bureaucratic that it is simply out of control.

In the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment, we recently learned that some 400 pages of proposed EPA regulations would run 40,000 small farmers out of business. We had farmers in our hearing crying because their own government was about to do them in.

I am told that in 1978 we had 157 small coal companies in east Tennessee. Now there are none. All the small- and medium-sized ones were regulated out of existence by Federal mining regulators under intense pressure from environmental special interest groups which get their contributions mainly from extremely big business.

We have just had some 500 square miles of forests burning in several States out West. Two years ago, the previous administration followed policies that caused 7 million acres to burn and over $10 million in damage.

The head of the Forest Service told the Washington Times that "there might have been 40 to 50 Ponderosa pine trees per acre at one time. Now you've got several hundred per acre."

Yet environmental extremists oppose even any thinning of the trees, no cutting at all, and even oppose removal of dead and dying trees. The Washington Post said the combination of drought and refusal to thin the forests has been deadly and has caused all these fires because there is such a tremendous build-up of fuel on the floors of the forest.

The opposition to cutting the trees has driven many small logging companies out of business and once again has destroyed jobs and caused another industry to be limited primarily to big grants.

When big government liberals make it impossible for small drug companies and small businesses in every industry to survive, it decreases competition and drives up prices. This hurts lower-income people the most.

When big government liberals and wealthy environmental extremists force mom-and-pop mining or logging companies or small farms out of business, it destroys jobs and opportunities not only for loggers and miners and farmers but also their lawyers, accountants, secretaries and salespeople. This is a big part of the reason why so many college graduates cannot find good jobs and have to go to graduate schools and work as waiters and waitresses.

When I was growing up, a poor man could start a gas station. Now, because of all the environmental rules and regulations and red tape, it takes a multi-millionaire or a giant corporation to start one.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up, big government liberalism is killing the little guy. Liberals and environmental extremists are the best friends extremely big business has ever had, and it is no wonder we are seeing the major corporate scandals we are reading and hearing about today. Unless and until we downsize our Federal Government, we will continue to see even more.

OMNIBUS RESTORATION AND REFORM ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in a dilemma, and I would hope that the dilemma would cause us to recognize that all of us who are responsible for governance and are responsible for the leadership that is important in corporate responsibility cannot take on any labels. I will say that the importance of what we are doing should not have a label of Republicans or Democrats, but clearly, the label should be that Congress has not acted.

We simply have not done the job. I am not sure if this has anything to do with big government or little government. I would say that it has a lot to do with congressional abdication of their responsibilities and agencies not doing their jobs and regulations not being strong enough, and that is, of course, the problem of corporate non-responsibility.

It is urgent that this Congress acts now. I happen to represent Enron Corporation who is now at this point trying to rebuild itself and remake itself, and I have always said that I wish them well, because I want a strong business doing the business that it was designed to do and providing jobs for the 18th Congressional District. At the same time, we cannot ignore the fact that we have a circumstance where there is a crumbling of investor integrity and investor confidence in our system.

Whether it is Enron that fired 4,000 employees 24 hours after they filed for bankruptcy, while 2 days before they gave $105 million in retention bonuses to past leadership of that particular corporation, and I recognize that trials and investigations are still going on and that is appropriate, but we do know the facts. That almost 5,000 employees were laid off with no savings, minimal severance pay, left to their own devices and much of that was without any device. Pensioners losing their life savings. A constituent of mine, a small investor, a grandmother, said I lost $150,000, a lot of money for someone who may be new to the marketplace.

WorldCom, and I hold up a certificate of stock ownership, maybe, Mr. Speaker, this is not exactly a certificate of stock ownership, but it reflects that WorldCom sold just a few weeks ago for $64 per share and just recently it sold for 7 cents a share, and it was disenrolled or D-enrolled on the NASDAQ stock exchange.

It is time now, Mr. Speaker, for much action to occur, and this week I will be looking forward to introducing the Omnibus Restoration and Reform Act of 2002, dealing with trying to get the focus of not only the Congress but of the American people on one legislative initiative that includes any number of fixes.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will pass 25 bills dealing with corporate reform. I would hope that this omnibus bill will just signal that the Congress needs to move. It needs to move because insider trading is still going on.

Pharmaceuticals, oil companies, communications companies, we already know that the communications industry has lost more than 165,000 jobs, second only, I understand, to the auto industry.

What has to be done? I agree with the leader of the other body and the leader of this body that we must have an investor bill of rights, and I join them in their announcement today and applaud them for their leadership.

I agree with the announcements being made in Wall Street today that we need a stronger SEC.

□ 1730

But after we do all of this, we must have follow-through. The Investor Bill of Rights must have the opportunity to pass, and the bill, or any bills that the President is talking of, must be able to pass.

Mr. Speaker, let me simply say in closing that we need an omnibus corporate reform restoration act to restore the faith of those who invest in our capitalistic system, oversight of the board of directors, and to make criminal the actions of those CEOs who would do criminal acts at the head of their companies.

I hope we will act soon. Congress needs to act soon and the President needs to sign a bill to strengthen our corporate structure.

PRESIDENT'S PLAN ON CURBING CORPORATE GREED

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, earlier today President Bush gave a major speech on the administration's plan to curb executive greed and corporate misgovernance in our country. This plan could be a tough sell, considering the President's own record as a businessman and his record of regulating industry.

Shortly after taking office, President Bush made clear how he felt about any kind of government regulation. His first budget proposal contained the elimination of 57 staff positions at the Securities and Exchange Commission, the agency charged with reviewing his corporate financial problems of the 1980s and reviewing all corporate financial reports today. His Treasury Secretary moved immediately to shut down intergovernmental efforts undertaken by the previous administration to monitor offshore tax havens at the heart of the financial maneuvering that led to Enron's collapse.

This President let chemical companies write legislation that dealt with arsenic in the drinking water, let insurance companies write legislation about the privatization of Medicare, let the drug companies write legislation that had to do with prescription drug coverage, let Wall Street write legislation to privatize Social Security, and let the banks write legislation relating to bankruptcy. This laissez-faire antigovernment attitude of the Bush administration also created a permissive environment clearly making companies like Enron, WorldCom, Adelphia, and others believe they could mislead investors with impunity as long as President Bush was in office.

Even after the Enron scandal was revealed last year, the President proposed a zero-growth budget for the SEC. He supported publicly and aggressively weak pension and accounting reform bills in the House, even though thousands of employees in this country, turning into tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of employees, are losing their retirements to fraud and mismanagement by the President's friends at Enron and other corporations.

He refused to support legislation that would close the loopholes that allow American companies to go offshore to avoid U.S. taxes. He has declined to support reauthorization for the Superfund tax, requiring corporate polluters to pay for cleanup of the messes they make. Instead, he has chosen to have taxpayers pay to clean that up. To make matters worse, the President's advocated turning Medicare and Social Security over to the private sector.

As evidence of this bias in his political contributions from the insurance industry, the President recently endorsed a Medicare prescription drug plan that would be administered by the health insurance industry. This plan undercuts seniors' purchasing power and enables the drug industry to sustain its outrageous drug prices by permitting the continued abuse and manipulation of drug patent laws.

Why? It just might have had something to do with our committee 2 weeks ago considering the prescription drug bill. The committee chair decided to quit at 5 p.m. so all the Republican members in the committee could troop off to a fund-raiser, a Republican fund-raiser headlined by George Bush, where the chairman of the fund-raiser was the CEO of a prescription drug company in England. That chairman and that company contributed $250,000 to House and Senate Republicans and to President Bush. Other prescription drug companies contributed $50,000, $100,000, and $250,000, while Congress was considering a prescription drug bill.

No surprise that the next day, when our friends returned to our hearing, that on issue after issue after issue the Republicans voted down the line for drug company interests against seniors' interests.

The President and his administration have a long way to go to convince the American people they are serious about cleaning up corporate abuses in large American business or even enforcing current law.

So as the country considers the President's plan for reversing the current trend of corporate greed and misdeeds, I hope my colleagues will understand that I view his conversion from a proponent of laissez-faire economics in letting corporations run roughshod over government regulations and roughshod over the public, his conversion from that to chief regulator and enforcer of these laws with a healthy degree of skepticism.

A famous civil rights leader years ago said, "Don't tell me what you believe. Tell me what you do, and I will tell you what you believe."

CRISIS ON WALL STREET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, today President Bush went to Wall Street, and he went to Wall Street because he believes that Wall Street is now in trouble. It is in trouble with investors, it is in trouble with the American people, it is in trouble with the international capital communities; and therefore, the President went to Wall Street.

The President today recognized that we have a crisis and a scandal in the financial markets in the United States; that, rightfully, professional investors, amateur investors, and people who really do not even know how to invest but have a stake in Wall Street through their pension plans have lost their confidence and are starting to think that somebody ought to go to jail.

This did not happen today, it did not happen yesterday, it did not happen last week when the President made up his mind he was going to Wall Street. This has been a crisis for the average American for more than a year. This has been a crisis since Enron and Tyco and many other companies started to falter as their fraudulent bookkeeping schemes started to come to light.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans have had their pensions evaporate as companies disguised their financial health and then immediately declared bankruptcy. Hundreds of thousands of Americans who thought they might be able to retire in the next couple of years now recognize that they are going to have to work the rest of their lives if they are going to get by. This was a crisis for tens of thousands of employees whose jobs evaporated overnight because of the greed of the corporate executives who, while they told employees they could not provide additional health care dollars, they could not provide extra compensation, they could not give to their pensions, were taking hundreds of millions of dollars off the top of the corporation.

This has been a disaster for millions of shareholders across this country and in the rest of the world as they lost value in their portfolios, some of it for their retirement, some of it for their children, some of it for their families, because of the deception, the greed, the dishonesty that was rampant on Wall Street these last couple of years. Yet it took almost 18 months for George Bush to ask what was going on. It took almost 18 months for George Bush to deliver a major speech on this crisis.

The President did not deliver the speech when it was just the American family that was in trouble. He did not deliver the speech when it was just the workers at Enron or ImClone or Dynegy that were in trouble. When we in California tried to tell him that they were manipulating the energy market, that they were gouging our consumers, that they were gouging the State, that it was all manipulation, they told us there was nothing to talk about, that they were comfortable that the market would work it all out. There was no market. It was manipulation. It was greed. It was dishonesty. It was fraud.

The same was true when he appointed Harvey Pitt as the chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who said that the previous chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Mr. Levitt, had been too hard on American corporations; when he tried to get honesty and transparency in their accounting processes, the industry came to Congress and got them to stall out. So Mr. Pitt said he is coming to be kinder and gentler to these corporations.

That is not what we need. We need a watchdog. We do not need a lapdog. But Mr. Pitt was appointed to be a lapdog. I do not think Mr. Bush can restrain him fast enough to take care of the American investor, the American worker, and the American shareholder. Every week now we get a new revelation. And the interesting thing is that many of the things these corporations were doing may not be against the law.

Merck was taking money that went to the pharmacists and saying it was their revenue. They never saw the money; it never came to them. And they are saying this is generally accepted within accounting principles. Generally accepted to what? To misstate revenues, to misstate earnings? I do not think so. But apparently it is.

That is why we need what Senator SARBANES is presenting to the Senate right now, a strong, independent review board, and not some industry control board that the President has been for, or that Mr. Pitt has been for, controlled by industry, making up the rules for industry for the good of the industry and not for the American people.

An investor today in the American stock market, whom are they to believe? Are they to read the 10K statements? They apparently have been misleading. Are they to read the page that is signed off by the accountant? They have been lying to the public. Are they going to go talk to the attorneys? They have been misleading the public and the boards of directors and others.

Mr. President, we are glad that you finally recognized this is a crisis, but for millions of Americans who have lost their pensions, lost their jobs, and lost their savings, this was a crisis a long time ago.

INTRODUCTION OF MILITARY TRIBUNALS ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, today I will be introducing the Military Tribunals Act of 2002 to provide congressional authorization for tribunals to try unlawful combatants against the United States in the war on terrorism.

Article I, section 8 of the Constitution provides that it is the Congress that has the power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court to define and punish offenses against the law of nations.

Up until now, there has been no congressional authorization for military tribunals. The formation of these tribunals, thus far, has been performed solely by executive order of the President with clarifying regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Defense.

Some would argue, not implausibly, that despite the clear language of article I, section 8, congressional authorization is not necessary; that as President and commander in chief, he has the authority, all the authority he needs, to regulate the affairs of the military, and this power extends to the adjudication of unlawful combatants. Ultimately, if the Congress fails to act, any adjudications of the military tribunals will be challenged in court on the basis that the tribunals, having been improperly constituted, the sentences cannot stand.

Through this bill, we can remove any legal cloud that would overhang these prosecutions. For one thing the Supreme Court has made abundantly clear is that the power of the executive when it acts in concert with the Congress is at its greatest ebb. But there is another reason, an even more compelling reason, for Congress to act, and that is the separation of powers.

No single branch should have the authority on its own to establish jurisdiction for a tribunal, to determine the charges, to determine indeed what defendants should be brought before that tribunal, to determine process, and to serve as judge, jury and potential executioner. As a former prosecutor, I would not have wanted such unbridled authority, nor do I believe it is appropriate here.

The Military Tribunals Act of 2002 establishes the jurisdiction of these new courts over noncitizens, non-U.S. residents, unlawful combatants, al-Qaeda members, and those working in concert with them to attack the United States. It preserves the right of habeas corpus, and appeal, and the basic rights of due process. It also protects the confidentiality of sources of information and classified information. And it also protects ordinary citizens from being exposed to the dangers of trying these suspects.

Perhaps most important, in the context of a war without clear end, against an enemy without uniform or nation, the bill requires the President to report to Congress on who is detained for how long and on what basis.

□ 1745

Mr. Speaker, in sum, the Military Tribunal Act of 2002 gives the Commander in Chief the power to try unlawful combatants, provides the confidence these judgments will be upheld, establishes clear rules of due process, maintains our checks and balances, and permits Congress to effectively oversee the war powers as the Constitution and the preservation of liberty requires.

Separation of powers: Our great nation was founded on the basic principles of liberty and justice for all. And one of the founding principles of our government is a separation of powers, and a system of checks and balances.

We set up our government this way for a reason. The delegates to the Constitutional Convention faced a difficult challenge—to create a strong, cohesive central government, while also ensuring that no individual or small group in the government would become too powerful. They formed a government with three separate branches, each with its own distinct powers.

Without this separation of powers, any one branch of government could have the power to establish a tribunal, decide what charges would be covered and what due process would be afforded, and also serve as judge and jury. The intent of the framers was to avoid these kinds of imbalances of power—to provide checks and balances.

That is why Congress must have a role in setting up military tribunals.

The role of military tribunals: As the United States and its allies continue to engage in armed conflict with al Qaeda and the Taliban, military tribunals provide an appropriate forum to adjudicate the international law of armed conflict. While it may sound incongruous to have a justice system to deal with crimes of war, this process ensures adherence to certain international standards of wartime conduct. In order to garner the support of the community of nations, military trials must provide basic procedural guarantees of fairness, consistent with the international law of armed conflict and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Constitutional justification: Congressional authorization is necessary for the establishment of extraordinary tribunals to adjudicate and punish offenses arising from the September 11, 2001 attacks, or future al Qaeda terrorist attacks against the United States, and to provide a clear and unambiguous legal foundation for such trials.

This power is granted by the U.S. Constitution, which gives congress the authority to constitute tribunals, define and punish offenses against the Law of Nations, and make rules concerning captures.

While Congress has authorized the President to use all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons that he determines to have planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks or harbored such organizations or persons, Congress has yet to expressly authorize the use of military tribunals.

Crafting the bill: In November, 2001, the President issued a military order which said non-U.S. citizens arrested at home or abroad could be tried by military tribunals. In March, 2002, the Department of Defense announced rules for military trials for accused terrorists.

Believing that Congress should play a critical role in authorizing military tribunals, I began discussing this issue with legal organizations, military law experts, and legal scholars. The result of these discussions is the Military Tribunals Act of 2002, which I am introducing today.

Who is covered: My bill will give the President the authority to carry out military tribunals to try individuals who are members of al Qaeda or members of other terrorist organizations knowingly cooperating with or aiding or abetting persons who attack the United States.

Unlawful combatants: The Geneva Conventions limit the ways regular soldiers who surrender or are captured may be treated, but there is a very clear distinction made between lawful enemy combatants (a member of a standing/recognized army), who would not be subject to a tribunal, and unlawful enemy combatants (civilians who take up arms) who would.

Currently, there are more than 500 persons who are being detained at Guantanamo Bay. They have been classified by the Department of Defense as unlawful enemy combatants, and each one could potentially be subject to a military tribunal. But without legislative backing, any military tribunal adjudication of guilt may later be challenged on the basis that the tribunals were not authorized by Congress. Congressional action would make it abundantly clear that military tribunals are an appropriate venue for trying unlawful enemy combatants. Spelling out the requirements for a military tribunal would ensure that sentences, when they are handed down, could be defended from judicial invalidation.

Due process: My bill would ensure that the basic tenets of due process are adhered to by a military tribunal. The tribunal would be independent and impartial. The accused would be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and would only be found guilty if there was proof beyond a reasonable doubt. The accused would be promptly notified of alleged offenses. The proceedings would be made available to relevant parties in other languages as necessary. The accused would have the opportunity to be present at trial. The accused have the opportunity to confront, cross-examine, and offer witnesses. The proceedings would be expeditious. The accused would be afforded all necessary means of defense. A conviction would be based on proof that the individual was responsible for the offense. A conviction could not be upheld on an act that was not an unlawful offense when it was committed. The penalty for an offense would not be greater than it was when the offense was committed. The accused would not be compelled to confess guilt or testify against himself. A convicted person would be informed of remedies and appeals processes. A preliminary proceeding would be held within 30 days of detention to determine whether a trial may be appropriate. The tribunal would be comprised of a military judge and not less than five members. The death penalty would be applied only by unanimous decision. The accused would have access to evidence supporting each alleged offense, except where disclosure of the evidence would cause identifiable harm to the prosecution of military objectives, and would have the opportunity to both obtain and present exculpatory evidence, and to respond to such evidence.

Habeas corpus: Finally, the writ of habeas corpus would not be infringed, as it is a critical tenet of our justice system. Every person should be entitled to a court determination of whether he is imprisoned lawfully and whether or not he should be released from custody. This basic tenet dates back to 1215 when it stood in the Magna Carta as a critical individual right against arbitrary arrest and imprisonment.

Courts have referred to habeas corpus as "the fundamental instrument for safeguarding individual freedom against arbitrary and lawless state action." Without judicial review, the police can arrest people without warrants and jail people without trials. U.S. Senator Arlen Specter has noted, "Simply declaring that applying traditional principles of law or rules of evidence is not practical is hardly sufficient. The usual test is whether our national security interests outweigh our due process rights, and the administration has not made the case."

A careful reading of the President's military order reveals that "military tribunals shall have exclusive jurisdiction, and the individual shall not be privileged to seek any remedy or maintain any proceeding, directly or indirectly . . . in any court of the United States, or any state thereof, any court of any foreign nation, or any international tribunal."

Appeals process: Another critical protection we must retain in these trials is that of an appeals process. My bill calls for the Secretary of Defense to promptly review convictions by such tribunals to ensure that the procedural requirements of a full and fair hearing have been met. It also calls for the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces established under the Uniform Code of Military Justice to review the proceedings, convictions, and sentences of such tribunals. Finally, the Supreme Court would review the decisions of the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. This is the most appropriate system of judicial review, especially since the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces would not have to appoint special masters or magistrates to do the necessary fact finding.

Public proceedings: We gain the confidence of our citizenry by ensuring that trial proceedings are open to the public. My bill would require trial and appeal proceedings to be accessible to the public, while securing the safety of observers, witnesses, tribunal judges, counsel, and others. Evidence available from an agency of the Federal Government, however, may be kept secret from the public if such evidence would harm the prosecution of military objectives or intelligence sources or methods.

Detention: The bill allows for the Secretary of Defense to detain a person who is subject to a tribunal consistent with the international law of armed conflict. However these detentions would only be authorized while a state of armed conflict continues, or which a prosecution or a post-trial proceeding is ongoing. Under the Military Tribunals Act of 2002, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia would have exclusive jurisdiction to ensure that the requirements for detaining an accused are satisfied.

And while an accused is held, the detainee shall be treated humanely, without any adverse distinction based on race, color, religion, gender, birth, wealth, or any similar criteria. Adequate food, drinking water, shelter, clothing, and medical treatment shall be provided. Finally, a detainee's right to the free exercise of religion would not be infringed.

Reports to congress: Without protection and reporting requirements in place, persons detained for an indefinite amount of time would have no recourse. Currently in America, the total number of persons detained by both the Department of Justice and the Department of Defense is unknown. In many cases, there is little information, if any, available about who has been detained and why. My bill requires the President to report annually to Congress on the use of the military tribunal authority. Each such report would include information regarding each person subject to, or detained pursuant to, a military tribunal, and each person detained pursuant to any actual or planned act of terrorism, who has not been referred for trial in connection with that act of terrorism to a criminal court or to a military tribunal. With this provision, we can significantly reduce the danger that due process might be evaded by simply failing to bring detainees before a tribunal for trial.

Conclusion: There is some debate about the necessity of Congressional input in the establishment of military tribunals. But there is no doubt that legislative branch input can provide indispensable safeguards, such as an appeal to an independent entity, that the executive branch simply cannot provide on its own. By exercising Congress' role in the process, we will ensure that our justice system remains a beacon for the rest of the world, where due process is protected, and the accused are afforded basic protections.

We are living in an extraordinary time, a difficult time. But we are defined as a nation by how we handle these difficult times. Our government's words and deeds are important, not only for the legal precedents we set, but also for the message we send to our global neighbors. During this, the most significant international crisis of our day, we have an opportunity to show the world the true meaning of justice, liberty, and the freedoms upon which America was founded.

PRESIDENT'S FORTUNE BUILT ON INSIDER TRADING

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHUSTER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD an article from yesterday's New York Times by Paul Krugman called "Succeeding in Business."

The reason I do this, we have a lot of Members coming here and talking about what is happening with business and the President, and this article told us what was going to happen today. As we watch the news about what President Bush said, remember this: "George Bush is scheduled to give a speech intended to put him in front of the growing national outrage over corporate malfeasance. He will sternly lecture Wall Street executives about ethics and will doubtless portray himself as a believer in old-fashioned business probity."

"Yet this pose is surreal, given the way top officials like Secretary of the Army Thomas White, DICK CHENEY and Mr. Bush himself acquired their wealth. As Joshua Green says in The Washington Monthly, in a must-read article written just before the administration suddenly became such an exponent of corporate ethics: 'The new tone that George W. Bush brought to Washington isn't one of integrity, but of permissiveness. In this administration, enriching oneself while one's business goes bust is not necessarily frowned upon.'

"Unfortunately, the administration has so far gotten the press to focus on the least important question about Mr. Bush's business dealings: His failure to obey the law by promptly reporting his insider trading. It is true that Mr. Bush's story about that failure has suddenly changed four times, but the administration hopes that a narrow focus on the reporting lapses will divert attention from the larger point: Mr. Bush profited personally from aggressive accounting identical to the recent scams that have shocked the Nation.

"In 1986, one would have had to consider Mr. Bush a failed businessman. He had run through millions of dollars of other people's money, with nothing to show for it but a company losing money and heavily burdened with debt. But he was rescued from his failure when Harken Energy bought his company at an astonishingly high price. There is no question that Harken was basically paying for Mr. Bush's connections.

"Despite these connections, Harken did badly. But for a time it concealed its failure, sustaining its stock price, as it turned out, just long enough for Mr. Bush to sell most of his stake at a large profit, with an accounting trick identical to one of the main ploys used by Enron a decade later."

Mr. Speaker, surprisingly, Arthur Andersen was the accountant. The ploy works this way. Corporate insiders create front corporations that seem independent but are really under their control. This front buys some of the firm's assets at unrealistically high prices, creating a phantom profit that inflates the stock price, allowing the executives to cash in their stock.

That is exactly what happened at Harken. A group of insiders, using money borrowed from Harken itself, paid an exorbitant price for a Harken subsidiary, Aloha Petroleum. That created a $10 million phantom profit which hid three-quarters of the company's losses in 1989. White House aides have played down the significance of this move saying $10 million is not very much compared with recent scandals. Indeed, it is a small fraction of the apparent profits Halliburton created through a sudden change in accounting procedures during DICK CHENEY's tenure as chief executive. But for Harken's stock price and hence Mr. Bush's personal wealth, this accounting trickery made all the difference. Mr. Bush was on the company's audit committee, as well as on the special restructuring committee.

And back in 1994, another member of both committees, E. Stuart Watson, assured reporters that he and Mr. Bush were constantly made aware of the company's finances. If Mr. Bush did not know about the Aloha maneuver, he was a very negligent director. In any case, Mr. Bush certainly found out what his company had been up to when the Securities and Exchange Commission ordered it to restate its earnings, so he cannot really be shocked over recent corporate scams. His own company pulled exactly the same tricks, to his considerable benefit. Of course what really made Mr. Bush a rich man was the investment of those proceeds from Harken in the Texas Rangers, a step that is another equally strange story.

The point is the contrast between image and reality. Mr. Bush portrays himself as a regular guy, someone ordinary Americans can identify with, but his personal fortune was built on privilege and insider dealings, and after his Harken sale, on large-scale corporate welfare. Some people have it easy.

Mr. Speaker, this is the man who went down there and said we are going to clean this thing up. We are going to have a task force on corporate fraud. The fox went down to the chicken house and said to the other foxes, hey, I know how to run this hen house, and I am going to show you.

This guy, can we expect him really, really, after that story, and this is not me talking, this is a columnist for the New York Times.

Mr. Speaker, most people who watch television tonight will see about 19 seconds of the President saying, I am going to be tough on corporate fraud. They will think it is for real because they will not know the story behind the man, what he really did. That is why I took the time to come down and read this. I feel like an old-fashioned news reader on television. Now everything has to be snap, snap and Americans never learn what is really going on.

This President is running a game on us, and the pensions and investments of people are at risk as long as he refuses to put people on the SEC to stop it.

SUCCEEDING IN BUSINESS

(By Paul Krugman)

George W. Bush is scheduled to give a speech intended to put him in front of the growing national outrage over corporate malfeasance. He will sternly lecture Wall Street executives about ethics and will doubtless portray himself as a believer in old-fashioned business probity.

Yet this pose is surreal, given the way top officials like Secretary of the Army Thomas White, Dick Cheney and Mr. Bush himself acquired their wealth. As Joshua Green says in The Washington Monthly, in a must-read article written just before the administration suddenly became such an exponent of corporate ethics: "The 'new tone' that George W. Bush brought to Washington isn't one of integrity, but of permissiveness. . . . In this administration, enriching oneself while one's business goes bust isn't necessarily frowned upon."

Unfortunately, the administration has so far gotten the press to focus on the least important question about Mr. Bush's business dealings: his failure to obey the law by promptly reporting his insider stock sales. It's true that Mr. Bush's story about that failure has suddenly changed, from "the dog ate my homework" to "my lawyer ate my homework—four times." But the administration hopes that a narrow focus on the reporting lapses will divert attention from the larger point: Mr. Bush profited personally from aggressive accounting identical to the recent scams that have shocked the nation.

In 1986, one would have had to consider Mr. Bush a failed businessman. He had run through millions of dollars of other people's money, with nothing to show for it but a company losing money and heavily burdened with debt. But he was rescued from failure when Harken Energy bought his company at an astonishingly high price. There is no question that Harken was basically paying for Mr. Bush's connections.

Despite these connections, Harken did badly. But for a time it concealed its failure—sustaining its stock price, as it turned out, just long enough for Mr. Bush to sell most of his stake at a large profit—with an accounting trick identical to one of the main ploys used by Enron a decade later. (Yes, Arthur Andersen was the accountant.) As I explained in my previous column, the ploy works as follows: corporate insiders create a front organization that seems independent but is really under their control. This front buys some of the firm's assets at unrealistically high prices, creating a phantom profit that inflates the stock price, allowing the executives to cash in their stock.

That's exactly what happened at Harken. A group of insiders, using money borrowed from Harken itself, paid an exorbitant price for a Harken subsidiary, Aloha Petroleum. That created a $10 million phantom profit, which hid three-quarters of the company's losses in 1989. White House aides have played down the significance of this maneuver, saying $10 million isn't much, compared with recent scandals. Indeed, it's a small fraction of the apparent profits Halliburton created through a sudden change in accounting procedures during Dick Cheney's tenure as chief executive. But for Harken's stock price—and hence for Mr. Bush's personal wealth—this accounting trickery made all the difference.

Oh, the Harken's fake profits were several dozen times as large as the Whitewater land deal—though only about one-seventh the cost of the Whitewater investigation.

Mr. Bush was on the company's audit committee, as well as on a special restructuring committee; back in 1994, another member of both committees, E. Stuart Watson, assured reporters that he and Mr. Bush were constantly made aware of the company's finances. If Mr. Bush didn't know about the Aloha maneuver, he was a very negligent director.

In any case, Mr. Bush certainly found out what his company had been up to when the Securities and Exchange Commission ordered it to restate its earnings. So he can't really be shocked over recent corporate scams. His own company pulled exactly the same tricks, to the considerable benefit. Of course, what really made Mr. Bush a rich man was the investment of his proceeds from Harken in the Texas Rangers—a step that is another, equally strange story.

The point is the contrast between image and reality. Mr. Bush portrays himself as a regular guy, someone ordinary Americans can identify with. But his personal fortune was built on privilege and insider dealings—and after his Harken sale, on large-scale corporate welfare. Some people have it easy.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After listening to several 5-minute special order speeches, the Chair would remind all Members that, although remarks in debate may include criticism of the President on matters of policy or politics, remarks in debate may not descend to personalities by alluding to unethical behavior on the part of the President.

FOX GUARDING THE CHICKEN COOP

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor tonight dismayed, disillusioned and disappointed. What is happening in corporate America? What has become of our corporate leaders? This is a simple issue of right and wrong, good and evil, how fraud, lying and cheating have become part of our corporate culture. We must ask ourselves, How did this happen? What gave birth to this period of corporate greed and scandal?

It all started with the corporate crusade against big government. Big government was making big business file too many reports. Big government was spending too much time making sure that big business was following the law, so big business asked their friends in Congress to do something about it.

Thanks to Republican attacks against big government, these CEOs and board of directors are acting with little, if any, government regulation. They have been lying to investors, lying to workers, and lying to the Federal Government. And they have been getting away with it.

While corporate America has been making out like bandits, hard-working men and women are losing their jobs, their retirement, and losing their children's college funds. The majority party in the White House has created a climate in which Enron, WorldCom, and Tyco could happen. Instead of having the SEC look over corporate books, Republicans have had the SEC look the other way.

My colleagues, so shall thee sow, so shall thee reap.

But this travesty is not just about Global Crossing, WorldCom, Enron, Martha Stewart, Tyco, and Merck. In fact, it is not just about the world of business. It is bigger than that.

Look at the Republican environmental record. Look at their record on worker safety. Our Interior Department is fighting tooth and nail to drill for oil and dig for coal on our pristine public lands. The EPA is leading the fight for more air pollution. OSHA is making fewer and fewer trips to the workplace. And the SEC has been leading the fight to let business just go about its business.

Time and time again, Republicans have declared that the only regulation is self-regulation or no regulation. Even today, President Bush declared that we must "depend on the conscience of American business leaders."

Republicans have left the fox in charge of the chicken coop; and now they are shocked, they are absolutely shocked to find a fat fox and an empty chicken coop.

Mr. President, actions speak louder than words. Today's moral indignation rings as falsely as an Enron accounting report.

Today, President Bush told the American people that he wanted to hire 100 new staffers at the SEC to make corporations obey the law. President Bush did not tell the American people that just last year he proposed getting rid of 57 SEC workers. This is what the Republicans were doing before the American people started paying attention. This is what the Republicans were doing when no one was watching.

We do not need strong words and empty promises. We need strong regulation and strict enforcement. It is time to get tough on crime, all crime, and not just the folks who cannot afford to make a campaign contribution.

When someone gets caught dealing a thousand dollars' worth of drugs, they lock you up, lock you away, and take almost everything you own. We need the same standards for CEOs who steal millions of dollars from their companies. We need the same standards for corporate leaders who lie, cheat and steal from their employees and their shareholders.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to get serious about corporate crime. It is time to put some teeth back into securities laws and some power back into the SEC. Do not just talk the talk; walk the walk. Pass the laws. Protect the folks who are being dumped on and ripped off. We owe our people no less. It is our mission, our mandate, and our moral obligation, our moral responsibility.

HAS CAPITALISM FAILED AGAIN?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, the question I want to address today is: Has capitalism failed again?

It is now commonplace and politically correct to blame what is referred to as the excesses of capitalism for the economic problems that we face, and especially for the Wall Street fraud that dominates the business news. Politicians are having a field day demagoguing the issue while, of course, failing to address the fraud and deceit found in the budgetary shenanigans of the Federal Government for which they are directly responsible. Instead, it gives the Keynesian crowd that runs the show a chance to attack free markets and ignore the issue of sound money.

So once again we hear the chant: Capitalism has failed; we need more government controls over the entire financial markets. No one asked why the billions that have been spent and thousand of pages of regulations that have been written since the last attack on capitalism in the 1930s did not prevent the fraud and deception of the Enrons, the WorldComs, and the Global Crossings. That failure surely could not have come from a dearth of regulations.

What is distinctly absent is any mention that all financial bubbles are saturated with excesses in hype, speculation, depth, greed, fraud, gross errors in investment judgment, carelessness on the part of the analysts and investors, huge paper profits, conviction that a new-era economy has arrived, and above all else, pie-in-the-sky expectations.

When the bubble is inflating, there are no complaints. When it bursts, the blame game begins. This is especially true in the age of victimization and is done on a grand scale. It quickly becomes a philosophic, partisan, class, generational and even a racial issue.

While avoiding the real cause, all the fingerpointing makes it difficult to resolve the crisis and further undermines the principles upon which freedom and prosperity rests. Nixon was right once, when he declared we are all Keynesians now. All of Washington is in sync in declaring that too much capitalism has brought us to where we are today. The only decision now before the central planners in Washington is whose special interest will continue to benefit from the coming pretense at reform. The various special interests will be lobbying heavily, like the Wall Street investors, the corporations, the military-industrial complex, the banks, the workers, the unions, the farmers, the politicians and who knows who else, but what is not discussed is the actual cause and perpetration of the excesses now unraveling at a frantic pace. This same response occurred in the 1930s in the United States as our policymakers responded to very similar excesses that developed and collapsed in 1929. Because of the failure to understand the problem then, the Depression was prolonged. These mistakes allowed our current problems to develop to a much greater degree. Like the failure to come to grips with the cause of the 1980s bubble, Japan's economy continued to linger at no-growth and recession level, with their stock market at approximately one fourth of its peak 13 years ago.

If we are not careful, and so far we have not been, we will make the same errors that will prevent the correction needed before economic growth can be resumed.

In the 1930s it was quite popular to condemn the greed of capitalism, the gold standard, lack of regulation, and no government insurance on bank deposits for the disaster. Businessmen became the scapegoat. Changes were made as a result and the welfare warfare state was institutionalized. Easy credit became the holy grail of monetary policy, especially under Alan Greenspan, the ultimate maestro.

Today, despite the presumed protection from these Government programs built into the system, we find ourselves in a bigger mess than ever before. The bubble is bigger, the boom lasted longer, and the gold price has been deliberately undermined as an economic signal. Monetary inflation continues at a rate never seen before in a frantic effort to prop up stock prices and continue the housing bubble, while avoiding the consequences that inevitably come from easy credit.

This is all done because we are unwilling to acknowledge that current policy is only setting the stage for a huge drop in the value of the dollar. Everyone fears it, but no one wants to deal with it. Out of ignorance as well as disapproval for the natural restraints placed on market excesses that capitalism and sound markets impose, capitalism is not only rejected, it is blamed for all problems we face. If this fallacy is not corrected and capitalism is even further undermined, the prosperity that the free market generates will be destroyed.

Corruption and fraud in the accounting practices of many companies are coming to light. There are those who would have us believe this is an integral part of free market capitalism. If we did have free market capitalism, there would be no guarantees that some fraud would not occur. When it did, it would be dealt with by local law enforcement authorities, not by the politicians in Washington who had their chance to prevent such problems but choose instead to politicize the issue while using the opportunity to promote more Keynesian, useless regulations.

Capitalism should not be condemned since we have not had capitalism. A system of capitalism presumes sound money, not fiat money manipulated by a central bank. Capitalism cherishes voluntary contracts and interest rates that are determined by savings, not credit creation by a central bank. It is not capitalism when the system is plagued with incomprehensible rules regarding mergers, acquisitions, stock sales, wage controls, price controls, protectionism, corporate subsidies, international management of trade, complex and punishing corporate taxes, privileged Government contracts to the military-industrial complex, a foreign policy controlled by corporate interests and overseas investments; central mismanagement of farming, education, medicine, insurance, banking and welfare. This is not capitalism.

To condemn free market capitalism because of anything going on today makes no sense whatsoever. There is no evidence that capitalism exists today. We are deeply involved in an interventionist, planned economy that allows major benefits to accrue to the politically connected of both political spectrums. One may condemn the fraud in the current system, but it must be called its proper name, Keynesian, inflationism, interventionism, and corporatism.

What is not discussed is that the current crop of bankruptcies reveals that the blatant distortions and lies emanating from years of speculative orgy were predictable.

First, Congress should be investigating the Federal Government's fraud and deception in accounting, reporting future obligations such as Social Security and how the monetary system destroys wealth. Those problems are bigger than anything in the corporate world and are the responsibility of the Congress. Besides, it is the standard set by the Government and the monetary system it operates that are the major contributing causes to all that is wrong on Wall Street today.

When fraud does exist, it is a State matter, not a Federal one, and State authorities can enforce these laws without any help from Congress.

Second, we do know why financial bubbles occur and we know from history that they are routinely associated with speculation, excessive debt, wild promises, greed, lying and cheating. These problems were described by quite a few observers as the problems were developing in the 1990s, but the warnings were ignored, for one reason; everybody was making a killing and no one cared, and those who were reminded of history were reassured by the Fed chairman that, this time, a new economic era had arrived and not to worry. Productivity increases, it was said, could explain it all.

But now we know that is just not so. Speculative bubbles and all that we have been witnessing are a consequence of huge amounts of easy credit, created out of thin air by the Federal Reserve. We have had essentially no savings, which is one of the most significant driving forces in capitalism. The illusion created by low interest rates perpetuates the bubble and all the bad stuff that goes along with it. And that is not a fault of capitalism. We are dealing with a system of inflationism and interventionism that always produces a bubble economy that must end badly.

So far, the assessment made by the administration, the Congress, and the Fed bodes badly for our economic future. All they offer is more of the same, which cannot possibly help. All it will do is drive us closer to national bankruptcy, a sharply lower dollar and a lower standard of living for most Americans, as well as less freedoms for everyone.

This is a bad scenario that need not happen. But preserving our system is impossible if the critics are allowed to blame capitalism and sound monetary policy is rejected. More spending, more debt, more easy money, more distortion of interest rates, more regulations on everything, more foreign meddling, will soon force us to the very uncomfortable position of deciding the fate of our entire political system.

If we were to choose freedom and capitalism, we would restore our dollar to a commodity or a gold standard. Federal spending would be reduced; income taxes would be lowered and taxes would be removed from savings, dividends and capital gains; regulations would be reduced; special interest subsidies would be stopped and no protectionist measures would be permitted; our foreign policy would change and we would bring our troops home.

We cannot depend on government to restore trust to the markets. Only trustworthy people can do that. Actually, the lack of trust in Wall Street executives is healthy, because it is deserved and prompts caution. The same lack of trust in the politicians, the budgetary process, and the monetary system would serve as a healthy incentive for the reforms in government we need.

Markets regulate better than governments can. Depending on government regulations to protect us significantly contributes to the bubble mentality. These moves would produce the climate for releasing the creative energy necessary to simply serve consumers, which is what capitalism is all about.

The system that inevitably breeds corporate government cronyism that created our currently ongoing disaster would end. Capitalism did not give us this crisis of confidence now existing in the corporate world. The lack of free markets and sound money did. Congress does have a role to play, but it is not proactive. Congress' job is to get out of the way.

IS AMERICA A POLICE STATE

Another subject, Mr. Speaker, I want to address today, is is America a police state? Most Americans believe we live in dangerous times, and I must agree. Today I want to talk about how I see those dangers and what Congress ought to do about them.

Of course, the Monday-morning quarterbacks are now explaining with political overtones what we should have done to prevent the 9/11 tragedy. Unfortunately, in doing so, foreign policy changes are never considered.

I have for more than 2 decades been severely critical of our post-World War II foreign policy. I have perceived it to be not in our best interests and have believed that it presented a serious danger to our security.

For the record, in January of 2000 I said on this floor, "Our commercial interests in foreign policy are no longer separate. As bad as it is that average Americans are forced to subsidize such a system, we additionally are placed in greater danger because of our arrogant policy of bombing nations that do not submit to our wishes. This generates hatred directed toward America and exposes us to a greater threat of terrorism, since this is the only vehicle our victims can use to retaliate against a powerful military state. The cost in terms of lost liberties and unnecessary exposure to terrorism is difficult to assess, but in time it will become apparent to all of us that foreign interventionism is of no benefit to American citizens. Instead, it is a threat to our liberties."

Again, let me remind you, these were statements I made on the House floor in January of the year 2000. Unfortunately, my greatest fears and warnings have been borne out.

I believe my concerns are as relevant today as they were then. We should move with caution in this post-9/11 period so that we do not make our problems worse overseas while further undermining our liberties at home.

So far, our post-9/11 policies have challenged our rule of law here at home and our efforts against the al Qaeda have essentially come up empty-handed. The best we can tell now, instead of being in one place, the members of the al Qaeda are scattered around the world, with more of them in allied Pakistan than in Afghanistan. Our efforts to find our enemies have put the CIA in 80 different countries. The question that someday we must answer is whether we can catch them faster than we generate them. So far, it appears we are losing.

As evidence mounts that we have achieved little in reducing the terrorist threat, more diversionary tactics will be used. The big one will be to blame Saddam Hussein for everything and initiate a major war against Iraq, which will only generate even more hatred toward America from the Muslim world.

But, Mr. Speaker, my subject today is to discuss whether America is a police state. I am sure the large majority of Americans would answer this in the negative. Most would associate military patrols, martial law and summary executions with a police state, something obviously not present in our everyday activities. However, those knowledgeable with Ruby Ridge, Mount Carmel and other such incidents may have a different opinion.

The principal tool for sustaining a police state, even the most militant, is always economic punishment, by denying such things as jobs or a place to live, levying fines or imprisonment. The military is more often only used in the transition phase to a totalitarian state. Maintenance for long periods is usually accomplished through economic controls on commercial transactions, the use of all property and political dissent. Peaceful control through these efforts can be achieved without storm troopers on our street corners. Terror or fear is used to achieve complacency and obedience, especially when the people are deluded into believing they are still a free people.

The changes, they are assured, will be minimal, short-lived and necessary, such as those that occur in times of declared war. Under those conditions, most citizens believe that once the war is won, the restrictions on their liberties will be reversed. For the most part, however, after a declared war is over, the return to normalcy is never complete. In an undeclared war, without a precise enemy and, therefore, no precise ending, returning to normalcy can prove illusory.

We have just concluded a century of war, declared and undeclared, while at the same time responding to public outcries for more economic equality. The question as a result of these policies is, are we already living in a police state? If we are, what are we going to do about it? If we are not, we need to know if there is any danger that we are moving in that direction.

Most police states, surprisingly, come about through the democratic process with majority support. During a crisis, the rights of individuals and the minority are more easily trampled, which is more likely to condition a nation to become a police state than a military coup. Promised benefits initially seem to exceed the cost in dollars or lost freedom. When the people face terrorism or great fear from whatever source, the tendency to demand economic and physical security over liberty and self-reliance proves irresistible.

The masses are easily led to believe that security and liberty are mutually exclusive and demand for security far exceeds that for liberty. Once it is discovered that the desire for both economic and physical security that prompted the sacrifice of liberty which inevitably led to the loss of prosperity and no real safety, it is too late. Reversing the trend from authoritarian rule toward a freer society becomes very difficult, takes a long time, and entails much suffering. Although dissolution of the Soviet empire was relatively nonviolent at the end, millions suffered from police suppression and economic deprivation in the decades prior to 1989.

But what about here in the United States? With respect to a police state, where are we and where are we going? Let me make a few observations. Our government already keeps close tabs on just about everything we do and requires official permission for nearly all of our activities. One might take a look at our capital for any evidence of a police state. We see barricades, metal detectors, police, the military at times, dogs, ID badges required for every move, vehicles checked at airports and throughout the capital. People are totally disarmed except for the police and the criminals but, worse yet, surveillance cameras in Washington are everywhere to ensure our safety. The terrorist attacks only provided the cover for the do-gooders who had been planning for a long time before last summer to monitor us for our own good. Cameras are used to spy on our drug habits, on our kids at school, on subway travelers, and on visitors to every government building or park. There is not much evidence of an open society in Washington, D.C., yet most folks do not complain. Anything goes if it is for government-provided safety and security.

If this huge amount of information and technology is placed in the hands of the government to catch the bad guys, one naturally asks, what is the big deal? But it should be a big deal, because it eliminates the enjoyment of privacy that a free society holds dear. The personal information of law-abiding citizens can be used for reasons other than safety, such as political. Like gun control, people control hurts law-abiding citizens much more than the lawbreakers. Social Security numbers are used to monitor our daily activities. The numbers are given to us at birth and then are needed when we die and for everything in between. This allows government recordkeeping of monstrous proportions and accommodates the thugs who would steal others' identities for evil purposes. This invasion of privacy has been compounded by the technology now available to those in government who enjoy monitoring and directing the activity of others. Loss of personal privacy was a major problem a long time before 9-11. Centralized control and regulations are required in a police state.

Community and individual State regulations are not as threatening as the monolith of rules and regulations written by Congress and the Federal bureaucracy. Law and order has been federalized in many ways, and we are moving inexorably in that direction.

Almost all our economic activities depend upon receiving the proper permits from the Federal Government. Transactions involving guns, food, medicine, smoking, drinking, hiring, firing, wages, politically correct speech, land use, fishing, hunting, buying a house, business mergers and acquisitions, selling stocks and bonds, and farming all require approval and strict regulation from our Federal Government. If this is not done properly and in a timely fashion, economic penalties and even imprisonment are likely consequences.

Because government pays for so much of our health care, it is conveniently argued that any habits or risk-taking that could harm one's health are the prerogative of the Federal Government and are to be regulated by explicit rules to keep medical care costs down. This same argument is used to require helmets for riding motorcycles and bikes. Not only do we need a license to drive, but we also need special belts, bags, buzzers, seats, and environmentally-dictated speed limits or a policeman will be pulling us over to levy a fine and he will be carrying a gun, of course.

The States do exactly as they are told by the Federal Government because they are threatened with the loss of tax dollars being returned to their State, dollars that should never have been taken from them in the first place and sent to Washington, let alone be allowed to be used to extort obedience to a powerful central government. Over 80,000 Federal bureaucrats now carry guns to make us toe the line and to enforce the thousands of laws and tens of thousands of regulations that no one can possibly understand. We do not see the guns, but we all know they are there, and we all know we cannot fight city hall, especially if it is Uncle Sam.

All 18-year-old males must register to be ready for the next undeclared war. If they do not, men with guns will appear and enforce this congressional mandate of involuntary servitude, which was banned by the 13th amendment, but courts do not apply this prohibition to the servitude of draftees or those citizens required to follow the dictates of the IRS, especially the employers of the country who serve as the Federal Government's chief tax collectors and information-gatherers.

Fear is the tool used to intimidate most Americans to comply to the Tax Code by making examples of celebrities. Leona Helmsley and Willie Nelson know how this process works. Economic threats against business establishments are notorious. Rules and regulations from the EPA, the ADA, the SEC, the LRB, OSHA and more terrorize business owners into submission, and those charged accept their own guilt until they can prove themselves innocent. Of course, it turns out it is much more practical to admit guilt and pay the fine. This serves the interests of the authoritarians because it firmly establishes just who is in charge.

An information leak from a government agency like the FDA can make or break a company within minutes. If information is leaked, even inadvertently, a company can be destroyed and individuals involved in the revealing of government-monopolized information can be sent to prison. Each, though economic crimes, are serious offenses in the United States. Violent crimes sometimes evoke more sympathy and fewer penalties. Just look at the O.J. Simpson case as an example.

Efforts to convict Bill Gates and others like him of an economic crime are astounding, considering his contribution to economic progress, while sources used to screen out terrorist elements from our midst are tragically useless. If business people are found guilty of even the suggestion of collusion in the marketplace, huge fines and even imprisonment are likely consequences.

Price-fixing is impossible to achieve in a free market. Under today's laws, talking to or consulting with competitors can be easily construed as price-fixing and involve a serious crime even with proof that the so-called collusion never generated monopoly-controlled prices or was detrimental to consumers. Lawfully circumventing taxes, even sales taxes, can lead to serious problems if a high profile person can be made an example.

One of the most onerous controls placed on American citizens is the control of speech through politically correct legislation. Derogatory remarks or off-color jokes are justification for firings, demotions, and destruction of political careers. The movement toward designating penalties based on a category to which victims belong rather than the nature of the crime itself has the thought police patrolling the airways and the byways.

Establishing relative rights and special penalties for subjective motivation is a dangerous trend. All our financial activities are subject to legal searches without warrants and without probable cause. Tax collection, drug usage, and possible terrorist activities justify the endless accumulation of information on all Americans. Government control of medicine has prompted the establishment of a national medical data bank. For efficiency reasons, it is said, the government keeps our medical records for our benefit. This, of course, is done with vague and useless promises that this information will always remain confidential, just like all the FBI information in the past. Personal privacy, the sine qua none of liberty, no longer exists in the United States. Ruthless and abusive use of all of this information accumulated by the government is yet to come.

The Patriot Act has given unbelievable power to listen, read, and monitor all of our transactions without a search warrant being issued after affirmation or probable cause. Sneak-and-peak and blanket searches are now becoming more frequent every day. What have we allowed to happen to the Fourth Amendment?

It may be true that the average American does not feel intimidated by the encroachment of the police state. I am sure our citizens are more tolerant of what they see as mere nuisances because they have been deluded into believing all of this government supervision is necessary and helpful and besides, they are living quite comfortably material-wise. However, the reaction will be different once all of this new legislation we are passing comes into full force and the material comforts that soften our concerns for government regulations are decreased. This attitude then will change dramatically, but the trend toward the authoritarian state will be difficult to reverse. What government gives with one hand as it attempts to provide safety and security, it must at the same time take away with two others. When the majority recognizes that the monetary costs and the results of our war against terrorism and personal freedoms are a lot less than promised, it may be too late.

I am sure all of my concerns are unconvincing to the vast majority of Americans who do not only seek, but also demand, they be made safe from any possible attack from anybody, ever. I grant you, this is a reasonable request. The point is, though, however, there may be a much better way of doing it. We must remember we do not sit around and worry that some Canadian citizen is about to walk into New York and set off a nuclear weapon. We must come to understand the real reason is that there is a difference between the Canadians and all of our many friends and the Islamic radicals. Believe me, we are not the target because we are free and prosperous. The argument made for more government controls here at home and expansionism overseas to combat terrorism is simple and goes like this: If we are not made safe from potential terrorists, property and freedom have no meaning. It is argued that first we must have life and physical and economic security with continued abundances, and then we will talk about freedom.

It reminds me of the time I was soliciting political support from a voter and was boldly put down. "Ron," she said, "I wish you would lay off this freedom stuff. It is all nonsense. We are looking for a representative who will know how to bring home the bacon and help our area, and you are not that person." Believe me, I understand that argument, it is just that I do not agree that it is what should be motivating us here in the Congress. That is not the way it works. Freedom does not preclude security. Making security the highest priority can deny prosperity and still fail to provide the safety we all want.

The Congress would never agree that we are a police state. Most Members, I am sure, would argue for the negative. But we are all obligated to decide in which direction we are going. If we are moving toward a system that enhances individual liberty and justice for all, my concerns about a police state should be reduced or totally ignored; yet if by chance we are moving toward more authoritarian control than is good for us in moving toward a major war in which we should have no part, we should not ignore the dangers.

If current policies are permitting a serious challenge to our institutions that allow for our great abundance and we ignore them, we ignore them at great risk for future generations. That is why the post-9-11 analysis and subsequent legislation are crucial to the survival of those institutions that made America great.

We now are considering a major legislative proposal dealing with this dilemma, the new Department of Homeland Security; and we must decide if it truly serves the interests of America.

Since the new Department is now a foregone conclusion, why should anyone bother to record a dissent? Because it is the responsibility of all of us to speak the truth to the best of our ability; and if there are reservations about what we are doing, we should sound an alarm and warn the people of what is likely to come.

In times of crises, nearly unanimous support for government programs is usual, and the effects are instantaneous. Discovering the errors of our ways and waiting to see the unintended consequences evolve takes time and careful analysis. Reversing the bad effects is slow and tedious and fraught with danger. People would much prefer to hear platitudes than the pessimism of a flawed policy.

Understanding the real reason why we were attacked is crucial to deriving a proper response. I know of no one who does not condemn the attacks of 9-11. Disagreement as to the cause and the proper course of action should be legitimate in a free society such as ours; if not, we are not a free society.

Not only do I condemn the vicious acts of 9-11, but also out of deep philosophic and moral commitment I have pledged never to use any form of aggression to bring about social or economic changes. But I am deeply concerned about what has been done and what we are yet to do in the name of security against the threat of terrorism.

Political propagandizing is used to get all of us to toe the line and be good patriots, supporting every measure suggested by the administration. We are told that preemptive strikes, torture, military tribunals, suspension of habeas corpus, executive orders to wage war, and sacrificing privacy with a weakened fourth amendment are the minimum required to save our country from a threat of terrorism. Who is winning this war, anyway?

To get popular support for these serious violations of our traditional rule of law requires that people be kept in a state of fear. The episode of spreading undue concern about the possibility of a dirty bomb being exploded in Washington without any substantiation of an actual threat is a good example of excessive fear being generated by government officials.

To add insult to injury, when he made this outlandish announcement, our Attorney General was in Moscow. Maybe if our FBI spent more time at home, we would get more for our money we pump into this now-discredited organization. Our FBI should be gathering information here at home, and the thousands of agents overseas should return. We do not need these agents competing overseas and confusing the intelligence apparatus of the CIA or the military.

I am concerned that the excess fear created by the several hundreds of al Qaeda functionaries willing to sacrifice their lives for their demented goals is driving us to do to ourselves what the al Qaeda themselves could never do to us by force. So far, the direction is clear: we are legislating bigger and more intrusive government here at home and allowing our President to pursue much more military adventurism abroad. These pursuits are overwhelmingly supported by Members of Congress, the media, and the so-called intellectual community, and questioned only by a small number of civil libertarians, anti-imperial antiwar advocates.

The main reason why so many usually level-headed critics of bad policy accept this massive increase in government power is clear. They, for various reasons, believe the official explanation of "why us?" The several hundreds of al Qaeda members we were told hate us because we are rich, free, and we enjoy materialism, and the purveyors of terror are jealous and envious, creating the hatred that drive their cause. They despise our Judeo-Christian values; and this, we are told, is the sole reason they are willing to die for their cause.

For this to be believed, one must also be convinced that the perpetrators lied to the world about why they attacked us. The al Qaeda leaders say they hate us because we support Western puppet regimes in Arab countries for commercial reasons and against the wishes of the populace of those countries. This partnership allows military occupation, the most confrontational being in Saudi Arabia, that offends the sense of pride and violates their religious convictions to have a foreign military power on their holy land. We refuse to consider how we might feel if China's navy occupied the Gulf of Mexico for the purpose of protecting their oil, and had air bases on U.S. territory.

We show extreme bias in support of one side in the 50-plus-year war going on in the Middle East. That is their explanation.

What if the al Qaeda is telling the truth and we ignore it? If we believe only the official line from the administration and proceed to change our whole system and undermine our constitutional rights, we may one day wake up to find that the attacks have increased the numbers of those willing to commit suicide for their cause has grown, our freedoms have diminished, and all this has contributed to making our economic problems worse.

The dollar cost of this war could turn out to be exorbitant, and the efficiency of our markets can become undermined by the compromises placed on our liberties. Sometimes it almost seems that our policies inadvertently are actually based on a desire to make ourselves less free and less prosperous, those conditions that are supposed to have prompted the attacks.

I am convinced we must pay more attention to the real cause of the attacks of last year and challenge the explanation given us. The question that one day must be answered is this: What if we had never placed our troops in Saudi Arabia, and involved ourselves in the Middle East war in an even-handed fashion? Would it have been worth it if this would have prevented 9-11?

If we avoid the truth, we will be far less well off than if we recognize that just maybe the truth lies in the statements made by the leaders of those who perpetuated the atrocities. If they speak the truth about the real cause, changing our foreign policy from foreign military interventionism around the globe supporting an American empire would make a lot of sense. It could reduce tension, save money, preserve liberty, and preserve our economic system.

This for me is not a reactive position coming out of 9-11, but rather, an argument I have made for decades, claiming that meddling in the affairs of others is dangerous to our security and actually reduces our ability to defend ourselves.

This in no way precludes pursuing those directly responsible for the attacks and dealing with them accordingly, something that we seem to have not yet done. We hear more talk of starting a war in Iraq than in achieving victory over the international outlaws that instigated the attacks on 9-11.

Rather than pursuing war against countries that were not directly responsible for the attacks, we should consider the judicious use of mark and reprisal. I am sure that a more enlightened approach to our foreign policy will prove elusive. Financial interests of our international corporations, oil companies and banks, along with the military-industrial complex, are sure to remain a deciding influence on our policies.

Besides, even if my assessments prove to be true, any shift away from foreign militarism, like bringing our troops home, would now be construed as yielding to the terrorists. It just will not happen. This is a powerful point, and the concern that we might appear to be capitulating is legitimate. Yet, how long should we deny the truth, especially if this denial only makes us more vulnerable? Should we not demand the courage and wisdom of our leaders to do the right thing in spite of the political shortcomings?

President Kennedy faced an even greater threat in October of 1962, and from a much more powerful force. The Soviet-Cuban terrorist threat with nuclear missiles only 90 miles off our shores was wisely defused by Kennedy's capitulating and removing missiles from Turkey on the Soviet border. Kennedy deserved the praise he received for the way he handled this nuclear standoff with the Soviets.

This concession most likely prevented a nuclear exchange and proved that taking a step back from a failed policy is beneficial. Yet how one does so is crucial. The answer is to do it diplomatically. That is what diplomats are supposed to do.

Maybe there is no real desire to remove the excuse for our worldwide imperialism, especially our current new expansion into central Asia, or the domestic violations of our civil liberties. Today's conditions may well be exactly what our world commercial interests want. It is now easy for us to go into the Philippines, Colombia, Pakistan, Afghanistan, or wherever, in pursuit of terrorists. No questions are asked by the media or the politicians, only cheers. Put in these terms, who can object? We all despise the tactics of the terrorists, so the nature of the response is not to be questioned.

A growing number of Americans are concluding that the threat we now face comes more from a consequence of our foreign policy than because the bad guys envy our freedoms and prosperity.

How many terrorist attacks have been directed toward Switzerland, Australia, Canada, or Sweden? They are also rich and free, and would be easy targets; but the Islamic fundamentalists see no purpose in doing so. There is no purpose in targeting us unless there is a political agenda, which there surely is. To deny that this political agenda exists jeopardizes the security of this country. Pretending something to be true that is not is dangerous.

It is a definite benefit for so many to recognize that our $40 billion annual investment in intelligence-gathering prior to 9-11 was a failure. Now, a sincere desire exists to rectify these mistakes. That is good, unless instead of changing the role of the CIA and the FBI all the past mistakes are made worse by spending more money and enlarging the bureaucracy to do the very same thing without improvement in their efficiency or a change in their goals. Unfortunately, that is what is likely to happen.

One of the major shortcomings that is led to the 9-11 tragedy was the responsibility for protecting commercial airlines was left to the government: the FAA, the FBI, the CIA, and the INS. They failed. A greater sense of responsibility for the owners to provide security is what is needed. Guns in the cockpit would have most likely prevented most of the deaths that occurred on that fateful day.

But what does our government do? It firmly denies airline pilots the right to defend their planes, and we federalize the security screeners and rely on F-16s to shoot down airliners if they are hijacked. Security screeners, many barely able to speak English, spend endless hours harassing pilots, confiscating dangerous mustache scissors, mauling grandmothers and children, and pestering Al Gore, while doing nothing about the influx of aliens from Middle Eastern countries who are on designated watch lists.

We pump up the military from India and Pakistan, ignore all the warnings about Saudi Arabia, and plan a secret war against Iraq, to make sure no one starts asking, where is Osama bin Laden? We think we know where Saddam Hussein lives, so let us go get him instead.

Since our government bureaucracy failed, why not get rid of it, instead of adding to it? If we had proper respect and understood how private property owners effectively defend themselves, we could apply those rules to the airlines and achieve something worthwhile.

If our immigration policies have failed, when will we defy the politically correct fanatics and curtail the immigration of those individuals on the highly suspect list? Instead of these changes, all we hear is that the major solution will come by establishing a huge new Federal department, the Department of Homeland Security.

According to all the pundits, we are expected to champion the big government approach; and if we do not jolly well like it, we will be tagged unpatriotic. The fear that permeates our country calls out for something to be done in response to almost daily warnings of the next attack. If it is not a real attack, then it is a theoretical one, one where the bomb could well be only in the minds of a potential terrorist.

Where is all this leading us? Are we moving toward a safer and more secure society? I think not. All the discussions of these proposed plans since 9-11 have been designed to condition the American people to accept major changes in our political system. Some of the changes being made are unnecessary, and others are outright dangerous to our way of life.

There is no need for us to be forced to choose between security and freedom. Giving up freedom does not provide greater security; preserving and better understanding freedom can. Sadly, today, many are anxious to give up freedom in response to real and generated fears.

The plans for a first strike supposedly against a potential foreign government should alarm all Americans. If we do not resist this power the President is assuming, our President, through executive order, can start a war anyplace, anytime, against anyone he chooses for any reason without congressional approval.

This is a tragic usurpation of the war power by the executive branch from the legislative branch, with Congress being all too accommodating. Removing the power of the executive branch to wage war, as was done through our revolution and the writing of the Constitution, is now being casually sacrificed on the altar of security.

In a free society, and certainly in the constitutional Republic we have been given, it should never be assumed that the President alone can take it upon himself to wage war whenever he pleases. The publicly announced plan to murder Saddam Hussein in the name of our national security draws nary a whimper from Congress. Support is overwhelming, without a thought as to the legality, the morality, the constitutionality, or its practicality.

Murdering Saddam Hussein will surely generate many more fanatics ready to commit their lives to suicide attacks against us. Our CIA attempts to assassinate Castro backfired with the subsequent assassination of our President. Killing Saddam Hussein just for the sake of killing him obviously will increase the threat against us, not diminish it. It makes no sense. But our warriors argue that some day he may build a bomb, some day he might use it, maybe against us or some unknown target.

This policy further radicalizes the Islamic fundamentalists against us because, from their viewpoint, our policy is driven by Israel, not U.S. security interests.

Planned assassination, a preemptive strike policy without proof of any threat and a vague definition of terrorism may work for us as long as we are king of the hill; but one must assume every other nation will naturally use our definition of policy as justification for dealing with their neighbors. India can justify a first strike against Pakistan, China against India or Taiwan as other examples. This new policy, if carried through, will make the world a lot less safe.

This new doctrine is based on proving a negative which is something impossible to do, especially when we are dealing with a subjective interpretation of plans buried in someone's head. To those who suggest a more restrained approach on Iraq and killing Saddam Hussein, the war hawks retort saying, Prove to me that Saddam Hussein might not do something some day directly harmful to the United States. Since no one can prove this, the war mongers shout, let us march to Baghdad.

We can all agree that aggression should be met with force and that providing national security is an ominous responsibility that falls on the shoulders of Congress. But avoiding useless and unjustifiable wars that threaten our whole system of government and security seems to be the more prudent thing to do.

Since September 11, Congress has responded with a massive barrage of legislation not seen since Roosevelt took over in 1933. Where Roosevelt dealt with trying to provide economic security, today's legislation deals with personal security from any and all imaginable threat at any cost, dollar or freedom loss. These include the PATRIOT Act, which undermines the fourth amendment with the establishment of an overly-broad and dangerous definition of terrorism; the Financial Anti-terrorism Act, which expands the government's surveillance of the financial transactions of all American citizens through the increased power of FinCen and puts back on track the plans to impose "Know our customer" regulations on all Americans.

The airline bail-out bill gave $15 billion rushed through shortly after September 11. The federalization of all airlines security employees, military tribunals set up by executive orders, undermining the rights of those accused, rights established as far back as 1215. Unlimited retention of suspects without charges being made even when a crime has not been committed, a serious precedent that one day may well be abused. Relaxation of FBI surveillance guidelines of all political activity. Functioning of the Federal Government authority and essentially monopolizing vaccines and treatment for infectious diseases, permitting massive quarantines and mandates for vaccinations.

Almost all significant legislation since 9-11 has been rushed through in a tone of urgency with reference to the tragedy including the $190 billion farm bill. Guarantees to all insurance companies are now moving quickly through the Congress. Increasing the billions already flowing into foreign aid is now being planned as our intervention overseas continue to expand.

There is no reason to believe that the massive increase in spending, both domestic and foreign, along with the massive expansion of the size of the Federal Government will slow any time soon. The deficit is exploding as the economy weakens. When the government sector drains the resources needed for capital expansion, it contributes to the loss of confidence needed for growth, allowing the economy to function.

Even without evidence that any good has come from this massive expansion of government power, Congress is in the process of establishing this huge new Department of Homeland Security, hoping miraculously through centralization to make all of these efforts productive and worthwhile. There is no evidence, however, that government bureaucracy and huge funding can solve our Nation's problem. The likelihood is that the unintended consequences of this new proposal will be to diminish our security and do nothing to enhance our security.

Opposing currently proposed legislation and recently passed legislation does not mean that one is complacent about terrorism or homeland security. The truth is that there are alternative solutions to these problems we face without resorting to expanding the size and scope of government at the expense of liberty.

As tempting as it may seem, a government is incapable of preventing crimes. On occasion with luck they might succeed. But the failure to tip us off about 9-11 after spending $40 billion a year on intelligence-gathering should surprise no one. Governments by nature are very inefficient institutions. We must accept that as fact.

I am sure that our intelligence agency had the information available to head off 9-11, but bureaucratic blundering and turf wars prevented the information from being useful. But the basic principle is wrong. City policeman cannot and should not be expected to try to prevent crimes. This would invite massive intrusions into the everyday activities of every law-abiding citizen. But that is exactly what our recent legislation is doing. It is a wrongheaded approach, no matter how wonderful it may sound. The policemen in the inner cities patrol their beats, but crime is still rampant.

In the rural areas of America, literally millions of citizens are safe and secure in their homes though miles from any police protection. They are safe because even the advantage of isolation does not entice the burglar to rob a house when he knows a shotgun sits inside the door waiting to be used. But this is a right denied many of our citizens living in the inner city.

The whole idea of government preventing crime is dangerous. To prevent crimes in our homes or businesses, governments would need cameras to spy on every move to check for illegal drug use, wife-beating, child abuse or tax evasion. They would need cameras not only on our streets and in our homes; but our phones, Internet, and travels would need to be constantly monitored just to make sure we are not a terrorist, drug dealer, or tax evader.

This is the assumption used at the airports, rather than using privately owned airlines to profile their passengers to assure the safety for which airline owners ought to assume responsibility. But, of course, this would mean guns in the cockpit. I am certain this approach to safety and security would be far superior to the rules that existed prior to 9-11 and now have been made much worse in the past 9 months.

This method of providing security emphasizes private property ownership and responsibility of the owners to protect that property, but the right to bear arms must be included. The fact that the administration is opposed to guns in the cockpits and the fact that airline owners are more interested in bailouts and insurance protection means that we are just digging a bigger hole for ourselves, ignoring liberty and expanding the government to provide something it is not capable of doing.

Because of this, in combination with a foreign policy that generates more hatred towards us and multiplies the number of terrorists that seek vengeance, I am deeply concerned that Washington's effort so far, sadly, have only made us more vulnerable. I am convinced that the newly proposed Department of Homeland Security will do nothing to make us more secure, but it will make us a lot poorer and less free. If the trend continues, the Department of Homeland Security may well be the vehicle used for a much more ruthless control of the people by some future administration than any of us dreamed. Let us pray that this concern will never materialize.

America is not now a ruthless authoritarian police state, but our concerns ought to be whether we have laid the foundation of a more docile police state. The love of liberty has been so diminished that we tolerate intrusions into our privacy today that would have been abhorred just a few years ago. Tolerance of inconvenience to our liberties is not uncommon when both personal and economic fears persist. The sacrifices being made to our liberties will surely usher in a system of government that will place only those who enjoy being in charge of running other peoples lives.

What then is the answer? Is America a police state? My answer is maybe, not yet. But it is fast approaching. The seeds have been sown and many of our basic protections against tyranny have been and are constantly being undermined. The post-9-11 atmosphere here in Congress has provided ample excuse to concentrate on safety at the expense of liberty, failing to recognize that we cannot have one without the other.

When the government keeps detailed records on every move we make and we either need advanced permission for everything we do or are penalized for not knowing what the rules are, America will be a declared police state. Personal privacy for law-abiding citizens will be a thing of the past. Enforcement of laws against economic and political crimes will exceed that of violent crimes. War will be the prerogative of the administration. Civil liberties will be suspended for suspects and their prosecution will not be carried out by an independent judiciary. In a police state this becomes common practice rather than a rare incident.

Some argue that we already live in a police state and Congress does not have the foggiest notion of what we are dealing with. So forget it and use your energies for your own survival, some advise. And they advise also that the momentum toward the monolithic state cannot be reversed.

Possibly that is true. But I am optimistic that if we do the right thing and do not capitulate to popular fallacies and fancies and the incessant war propaganda, the onslaught of statism can be reversed. To do so, we as a people once again have to dedicate ourselves to establishing the proper role a government plays in a free society. That does not involve the redistribution of wealth through force. It does not mean that government dictates to us the moral and religious standards of the people. It does not allow us to police the world by involving ourselves in every conflict as if it is our responsibility to manage an American world empire. But it does mean government has a proper role in guaranteeing free markets, protecting voluntary and religious choices and guaranteeing private property ownership while punishing those who violate these rules, whether foreign or domestic.

In a free society, the government's job is simply to protect liberty. The people do the rest. Let us not give up a grand experiment that provided so much for so many. Let us reject the police state.

PROTECTING AMERICANS FROM POLLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMMONS). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, ultimately the Federal Government has an important responsibility to protect the quality of life for our citizens. My sense is that it is important for us to promote liveable communities where the Federal Government is a partner to help make our families safe, healthy, and more economically secure.

Unfortunately, when it comes to dealing with hazardous waste, we, as a Federal Government, have failed to follow through on our commitment. This is very serious business for most Americans. I, in the State of Oregon, have eleven Superfund sites. One in four Americans live within 4 miles of a Superfund site. Ten million American children live within a short bicycle ride of a Superfund site. These are areas, some 1,200 priority sites around the country, many of which are polluted by hazardous chemicals known to cause cancer, heart disease, kidney failure, birth defects and brain damage.

There has been a very simple principle at work for over 20 years as far as the Federal Government is concerned, and that is that corporations, businesses that have been involved with serious pollution should clean up after themselves. If they are responsible for the environmental damage and the public health threats, they should be held financially accountable for their contaminated sites and should help keep them up.

The law that we put in place in 1980 is based on this "polluter pays" principle. When the companies that are responsible for this pollution and the public health threats are unable to clean up after themselves, then the Federal Government steps in. And that part of that same legislation created the Superfund site, created a Superfund itself, that was to be supplied with money from a special tax on oil and chemical companies who, by and large, have been responsible for much of this pollution.

The money from the tax was placed in a trust fund, the so-called Superfund, and designated for cleaning up polluted sites where the responsible party either could not pay or we were unable to identify them.

Unfortunately, the tax that provides the Environmental Protection Agency with the funds to clean up these abandoned sites expired in 1995. Part of the Gingrich revolution was simply a refusal to reenact the tax, despite the fact that every Congress and every President since its original enactment was supportive of that effort.

Now, originally when they have refused to renew the tax in 1995, it was not an immediate disaster because over the years money had accumulated in the trust fund; and, indeed, at the time of the tax termination there was over $3.5 billion in 1996. But now that fund has dwindled from $3.8 billion down to a projected $28 million next year.

This leaves us with three stark choices. We either reinstate the tax, we dramatically reduce our clean up efforts, or we force the taxpayers to pick up the tab from already strained budgets. The Federal Government now, as we know, is hemorrhaging red ink. We have gone from last year being concerned that we were somehow going to pay off the national debt too quickly, to a point where we are going to be borrowing over a trillion and a half dollars from the Social Security fund.

Sadly, the administration has chosen to abandon the notion of renewing the Superfund tax. It has chosen instead to slash the cleanup funding and to rely for what money will be available from the general fund. This is part of a pattern from this administration that is unsettling.

In its first year, the Bush administration decreased the pace of cleanups by almost 45 percent, from an average of 87 sites per year in President Clinton's second term. It originally projected this year, the administration predicted that it would clean up 65 sites this year, but now that number will be only 40.

Last month, the administration announced that it would be cutting funding for cleanup at 33 sites in 19 States. In addition to zeroing out the funding for these 33 sites altogether, it is severely underfunding sites of existing projects. We have two of them that I am following closely in Oregon, McCormick and Baxter creosote plant in Portland on the banks of the Willamette River, and a site designated Northwest Pipe and Casting Process Company, which is an area that is near a number of well areas and that drains into the Clackamas River which drains into that same Willamette River.

I must say that I am rather frustrated at this attitude we have at this point. During the last presidential election, we had the candidates, both Mr. Bush and Mr. Gore, talking a good fight about being able to be forward protecting on the environment. Now when we have a chance to put it into action, we are not seeing the performance.

It does not have to be that way. When we get a chance to work together, good things can happen. Earlier this Congress was able to work with the administration in a bipartisan fashion to deal with cleanup of brownfields, and we made some significant progress. These are the properties that are idle due to actual or potential contamination by hazardous substances and pollutants, by and large in our urban areas. We have an estimate of almost a half million of these brownfields sites nationally.

We found that by moving to restore the environmental health of these sites it is an effective way to revitalize neighborhoods and in some cases an entire city. It can help communities become more livable in a number of ways. It improves the environment by cleaning up the toxic contaminants and preventing their spread and contamination and potential disease-causing aspects, side effects for individuals. The cleanup makes the communities healthier and safer, and it targets reinvestments in our city.

By providing redevelopment opportunities where infrastructure is currently in place, it saves taxpayers dollars over greenfield development out in pristine farmlands that would require new roads, utility, water, and would take away open space, productive farmland, wetlands that have other purposes that help stabilize the environment.

We see significant job creation and economic development opportunities provided by brownfield cleanup, and it actually boosts the tax revenues for cities and towns by improving property tax bases. In fact, the EPA estimates that for every dollar of Federal money spent on brownfield cleanup, cities and States produce or leverage almost two-and-a-half dollars in private investment.

Sort of a stark example. We have the opportunity to revitalize communities with investments in brownfields, and we have been able to work on that on a bipartisan basis, what has happened with Superfund, where Democrats, I assure my colleagues, are willing to step forward with progressive, environmentally sensitive Republicans and support the administration to make sure that we take advantage of these opportunities to protect the environment and revitalize the community.

I am pleased to be joined by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), my colleague from the Great Pacific Northwest, from the Seattle area, who has been very active on a whole range of environmental areas. I would be pleased to yield to him to comment, if he would, on corporate responsibility, environmental cleanup and where he sees us going in the months ahead.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman organizing this chance to address this because this is an interesting sort of coming-together of two themes of American values, and one of those values is protect our natural resources for our children, and the other American value is responsibility and accountability and corporate responsibilities which certainly is in the news in a lot of different ways today.

I have come to the floor tonight because I am so concerned that I think the administration is grossly on the wrong track on both these issues on an interesting sort of marriage of two values, where the administration is going absolutely backwards. Clearly we have an environmental challenge in making sure that our Superfund sites remain in operation to clean up these most toxic areas with PCB, DDT, creosote, you name it, in it. So we have got this environmental challenge and cleaning it up is an American value. Americans feel very strongly about cleaning up these sites so that we do not leave water pollution for our children for hundreds and hundreds of years.

But there is another thing Americans feel strongly about, and that is responsibility for one's actions. That is why years ago this Chamber and the Senate adopted a Superfund plan that would make sure that polluters pay, not taxpayers, and Americans have felt for years that polluters who dump this toxic material into the soil ought to be the one, to the extent humanly possible, to pay for the cleanup, instead of John Q. Citizen or Mary Q. Citizen who pay their taxes, and Americans have felt for a long time that it is only right because why should the taxpayer have to pay when the polluter was the one who dumped the crud into the ground? That has been the law up until George W. Bush was elected President of the United States.

Now he wants to change that. He wants to abandon this basic American value of personal responsibility and he wants to shift the cost of that onto the American taxpayer, and I think that is wrong.

I think the continued American value is, one, we ought to continue the Superfund cleanup to get these sites done, and two, that the President is wrong in trying to stop the idea and abandon the idea of polluter pays and now make the rule in America being that the taxpayer pays, and somehow we have got to put it on the general fund for the taxpayer to fund these billions of dollars of cleanup, and I think that that is way out of touch with what Americans want to see happen here, and it is but yet one more, just one more manifestation of how the President's administration unfortunately has acted slavishly to these corporate interests instead of the general interests, and the President who has had a history, as we all know, in the oil and gas industry, cannot seem to break that history to answer the general needs of the public rather than the special needs of the polluting industries.

This is not something that we are asking the President to sort of invent a new science or even a new type of legislation. We are just asking him to take his hands off the existing legislation, which requires polluters to pay for their own problems they created rather than the taxpayer. We are only asking him to do what has been the law for years and years and years and years, and that is why it is most discouraging that the President has seen fit to try to go backwards both on environmental policy and on the concept of personal accountability, and we are going to do everything we can to stop him in his efforts.

In the State of Washington we have a number of Superfund sites. They are at risk with many other Superfund sites of not being funded because of the President's threats, and even if they are funded, we do not think they should be funded by the taxpayer. We think they should be funded by the polluter who dumped the stuff in the ground.

I give my colleagues an example. In Bainbridge Island, where I live, one of the largest toxic waste sites in the West Coast is a former creosote plant and that for years and years and years the owners dumped creosote into the ground right on Bill Point which is a point just on Eagle Harbor there in Bainbridge Island. It is a beautiful location. Trouble is now it is one of the most toxic area substrata around because it is full of creosote, which is pretty ugly stuff. Sometimes when I go by, I can see it bubble up out of the water, and it is real stinky and black and it is quite toxic. We think that the polluters who put the creosote in the ground should be responsible for that cleanup, which is going to take years and years and years, rather than the taxpayers in the State of Washington or anywhere else in the United States, and yet the President wants to reduce that protection.

I just give my colleague a little comment, too. We are now trying, just to tell him how nasty the stuff is, we are trying a new technology of injecting steam into the ground to try to break up the creosote so it can be pumped out, and it is an experiment, really one of the first or second times it is being tried anywhere in the Nation. We hope it works because if it does not work, we have got to build these walls to essentially have a bathtub to preserve this stuff so it does not keep leaking into Puget Sound and causing terrible things in the food chain, and if we have to do that, we have to pump water out of this literally for eternity.

So this is very expensive and we think the one who put it in ought to be responsible. We think that the President should revisit this issue and stick with the existing view of the polluter being responsible rather than the taxpayer. We hope we are successful in this regard.

Today the President gave a speech about corporate responsibility, and he said that corporations need to be more ethical, more responsible, and if he feels that way, why the heck is he trying to shift the costs off of corporations who dump creosote in the ground year after year after year after year, poisoning the atmosphere and the environment, and try to change that responsibility off the taxpayers? That is not in league with what I sense he was saying today, which is corporations ought to be responsible for their own conduct.

So we will continue in our efforts, and I appreciate this opportunity to join my colleague to talk about this one particular issue that I am very concerned about.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman making that linkage because I think it is important.

There is a lot of talk about corporate responsibility. There is a lot of talk now when the spotlight has been trained on some practices that are having a devastating effect on the pocketbook of Americans across the country, as people are getting their quarterly statements from their individual retirement accounts, their 401(k)s. They have watched what has happened as the stock market has been hammered by questionable practices that are in turn being reflected in a loss of wealth for Americans.

It is going to make it harder to do business, yet this notion of exercising corporate responsibility is something that could be simply done in terms of an area that would actually add value to every community around the country in terms of reestablishing this principle of polluter pays.

Mr. INSLEE. I may just tell my colleague, we have got a lot of great corporations out there, too, that are being extremely responsible, and those sort of good actors are paying corporate taxes, the ones who are not polluting against the law, and what the President's proposal is doing is shifting the burden for the pollution of the bad actors onto the corporations as well as individual taxpayers. He is shifting the burden for the pollution off the bad actors onto the good corporations that are not polluting. So I mean it is not like just individuals are victims of the President's proposal here. The good corporations that are following environmental laws and taking care of their waste and recycling their products, and thank goodness I have got hundreds of them in my district, Microsoft being one. Why do we have to have Microsoft have to pay for some other corporation that is not following the law, that is dumping this stuff in the ground? So we are defending the corporations who are good neighbors and good community members against the perditions of those who are not, and George Bush is in league with those corporations that want to violate the law and dump this stuff in the ground, and we think that is just absurd and that is the best, most gracious language I can use.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the distinction because in the Northwest we have seen a significant increase in environmental consciousness, worked with programs like The Natural Step. We are seeing models of corporate responsibility where people are trying to reduce their footprint on the landscape, and we are seeing many small- and medium-sized businesses and consulting firms that are emerging that are practicing sustainable business models.

The approach that is being taken here, shifting this onto the general fund, means that instead of identifying sources of pollution historically, it is going to put a greater burden on individuals and corporations who are actually doing an outstanding job. In some cases, it is in effect taxing them twice because they pay their share plus the share of people who are evading responsibilities.

Mr. INSLEE. If I may add, the other thing that is frankly disturbing to a lot of my constituents, is that this is just one more of a litany of these antienvironmental actions by this administration.

Everybody makes a mistake. We are all human, and we do not expect perfection from the President. But when we look at the number of times that the President, this President, has sided with these special interests to the degradation of clean air and clean water, it really bothers the people I represent. I have lots of them come up to me and say, "Whatever you do, just do not let him continue down this road."

It started with his efforts on arsenic in the water; then it has gone on to issues to gut the roadless area rule where we are trying to protect the last pristine areas in our forest areas; then the President ignores any affirmative action on global warming; and then the President takes this action that we are talking about trying to gut the Superfund sites. That was preceded 2 weeks ago by his efforts to reduce clean air rules.

This is consistent with his actions, unfortunately, with the Securities and Exchange Commission, to date, where he appointed a gentleman, who, though a very nice person, very intelligent, is from the industry he is supposed to be regulating. Mr. Pitt from the SEC is supposed to be regulating the securities industry and the accounting industry, and that is who he represented. As a result, we have had no effective, meaningful reform in the last 6 months of this horrendous predation on American investors. Yet the President has not stood up for American values, he has stood up and allowed the special interests to dominate his administration to the degradation and damage of the American investors.

So this is a consistent pattern where corporations, not all of them, but some of them, who have acted against the laws, have dominated his decision-making. And this is just another example of how an administration has gone off course. We hope he restores that and rethinks through this pattern of his.

With that, I would like to thank the gentleman for an opportunity to join him this evening.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's thoughts and observations and the leadership the gentleman has provided, particularly in chairing for the minority the Subcommittee on Forests and Forest Health of the Committee on Resources. The gentleman has had an opportunity to train a searchlight on some of the practices that those who would not place quite the same premium on the environment would have. The gentleman has also provided leadership in pushing back on the notion of abandoning the roadless rule, where we had, what, almost 2 million comments in support of this important protection.

Mr. INSLEE. Just one more comment, if I may, and I thank the gentleman for his compliments, I always accept those, but 96 percent of the Americans who commented on this wanted a strong roadless area bill to protect our pristine area, yet what did the President of the United States do? He ignored them.

Now he is trying to back up on this rule to allow clear-cutting and roadless area rules. We are going to fight this. We feel very strongly about it.

And I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I appreciate the gentleman's leadership.

One of the areas we have been focusing on in dealing with Superfund needs to be in the area of hard rock mining. Frankly, there are a number of us who are concerned about the situation that is occurring in our Nation's wilderness areas that have basically been given away to mining interests with virtually no change since that law was enacted in 1872, basically the same as when it was enacted and signed into law by President Ulysses S. Grant.

There are those that argue that hard rock mining is the Nation's number one polluter. They are currently responsible for approximately 70 Superfund sites. Of the 33 sites around the country that the administration sadly is talking about eliminating funding for, two of them were contaminated by hard rock mining companies in Montana. Yet, until recently, there were no requirements that the mining companies pay for the notion of cleaning up after themselves.

That is how companies like W.R. Grace, who have been in the news for years with its notorious activities, were able to walk away from the site without being held responsible. Yet, last month, the administration issued a rule that would make filling our waterways with waste from hard rock mining mountaintop removal legal.

Now, think about this for a moment: giving a grant of authority from the administration to the mining industry to legalize this notion of where they are just stripping away mountaintops and shoving it into streams to gain access to seams of coal.

As if the Superfund law and the Clean Air Act were not enough, we have here a direct opportunity on the part of the administration to overturn important provisions of the Clean Water Act, all of this to protect an extraordinarily destructive mining practice. These companies have already buried over 800 miles of rivers and streams in West Virginia and Kentucky, all with the permission of the Army Corps of Engineers. But until this rule change goes through, it is still illegal for the Corps to allow waste from mining to be dumped in our Nation's waterways.

Why? Why would the administration, instead of changing the Corps' practice to make them obey the law, why have they decided instead to change the law to make these actions legal? Think about the types of harmful fill we are talking about dumping into wildlife habitat and communities' drinking supplies. Hard rock mining waste includes construction and demolition debris. People have found coal ash waste, old tires, car parts, and discarded appliances. They also often contain particularly dangerous toxic chemicals, such as cyanide, arsenic, and sulfuric acid.

Mr. Speaker, this is serious business. We are approaching the 130th anniversary of the mining law of 1872, as I mentioned, signed into effect by President Ulysses S. Grant, essentially unchanged. We should be talking about how to make this outdated law stronger. We should not be taking an opportunity to roll back provisions of the Clean Water Act that are here to protect public health and the environment.

We are already giving the mining industry public lands and minerals for 19th century recording prices. We are not requiring that these corporations, often foreign-owned, that are extracting this mineral wealth, give a portion of it back in the form of a tax or royalty to American taxpayers to put in our Treasury. And now we are allowing them to blow off the tops of mountains, bulldoze them away to bury rivers and streams.

I would strongly suggest that instead of facilitating this type of behavior, it is important that we provide more corporate responsibility, provide more environmental protection, and we make sure that we are protecting the heritage that God has given this country.

It is frustrating that we have not been able to give people the type of understanding of what is at stake. Remember, as I mentioned earlier, one in four Americans lives within 4 miles of a Superfund site. Now, these sites are hazardous waste, often abandoned warehouses, landfills and mines, and 85 percent of all Superfund sites have contaminated groundwater. Research suggests that there is a markedly increased risk for birth defects when women live close to Superfund sites early in pregnancy.

A few of the hazardous chemicals that people are discovering on these sites include arsenic. We had a great deal of debate earlier in this Congress as the administration proposed rolling back protections on arsenic in the drinking water. Well, that frankly blew up, and the administration did retreat because the public knows arsenic in the drinking water is not a positive development. It is known to cause cancer of the lungs, bladder, and skin. It is also linked to cancer of the liver, kidney, colon, even nasal passages; and to a variety of noncancerous health effects, including heart disease, diabetes, adverse effects to the immune system, lungs, gastrointestinal tract, and thickening and discoloration of the skin.

Lead is another serious area of pollution that can damage almost every organ and system in the human body, especially the immune and reproductive system, and can cause heart disease and kidney damage. It is particularly damaging to the central nervous system, especially for children, where it is well-known and accepted now that children suffering from exposure to lead can have serious brain damage, decreased IQ scores, slow growth, and cause hearing problems in infants or young children.

We have serious problems with mercury on these Superfund sites that can cause brain and kidney damage and pose a high risk for adverse neurological development of fetuses. These are some of the hazards that we face with over 1,200 toxic waste sites on the Superfund national priority list.

Congress should not be undercutting the polluter-pays principle and walking away from its financial responsibility. Some of these sites have been on the list for more than a decade. Last year, in a report requested by Congress, Resources for the Future calculated that implementing the Superfund program for the current decade is going to cost us from $14 billion to $16.5 billion. Now is not the time to walk away from the financing.

I mentioned that it was, I felt, unfortunate that Congress allowed the corporate tax that funded the Superfund to expire in 1995 and that the administration has no plans to work with us to reinstate this tax. It has been that combination of funding that enabled us to clean up more than 800 toxic waste sites in communities across the country. During the last 5 years, we were averaging about 87 sites per year. Last year, in its first year, the Bush administration found that the pace of clean-up was down 45 percent. In 2 years, the administration expects to reduce the pace of cleanups by more than 50 percent more, along with shifting the responsibility for the cleanup.

Now, we have seen, as a consequence, that the administration has gone to the General Fund for $634 million in 2001. It is proposing $700 million this next year. When we had the Superfund in place that was funded by the tax, the General Fund only assumed about 18 percent of the program costs. Next year, if the President's proposals are adopted, they will be paying 54 percent of the associated costs, and soon, in the next year or two, the entire cost.

Mr. Speaker, I find that to be unacceptable. We need to not be abandoning the principle of polluter-pays. We ought not to be putting more pressure on the beleaguered General Fund. We ought not to be cutting the pace of Superfund cleanup. After more than 20 years, if anything, we should be redoubling our efforts in providing this revitalization. We have, today, opportunity after opportunity to take a step back and to do what the American public wants us to do, which is more investment in areas that is going to protect the environment.

Another critical area that we are having a great deal of discussion about on the floor of this Congress and in our committees deals with the situation we see in forest fires that have been raging across the West. In recent days, we have had 22 large fires in seven States.

We have had over 300 million acres already burned this year. For comparison purposes, that is more than twice what we have had over the last 10 years on average, and we are only halfway through this fire season. There are approximately 10,000 men and women currently fighting the fires throughout the West. It has been important enough for the President and a number of governors to be involved with touring. We have been watching homes being lost. To date we have had nearly 1,500 homes across the West and over 35,000 residents have been evacuated. I would hope that this would be another area where we might be able to assess what has happened and draw the appropriate environmental conclusions and lessons, particularly since we are facing what is likely to be the worst fire season in memory.

It is important that these catastrophic fires serve as a wake-up call, not senseless recrimination, attacking. In some cases we have even seen people trying to blame this on environmentalists, incredible as it sounds. This is an opportunity for us to reflect on the transformation of our natural systems of forest and even astrospheric chemistry dealing with global warming. We need to have a cultural shift to a more conservative approach, respecting the fragility of these systems and our dependence upon them. We need to stop this curious blame game.

It is not, by any stretch of the imagination, the environmentalists who caused the drought. It is not the environmentalists who have had a policy for the last 50 years of instantly suppressing any fire anywhere so that what we have done is we have stopped the periodic fires that have swept through the forests of the West. We have seen the number of trees and other flammable material expand dramatically, and it has been actually compounded by logging practices that have opened up many of these forests and removed the most mature trees, trees that are the most fire resistant, and leave the tinder behind. And it was interesting 2 years ago when we went through this cycle, we found that the areas that had been the most heavily logged were the ones that had the worst forest fires.

This current fire season will be the worst in the past half century, and I am hopeful that we will be able as a Congress, we will be able as a country to take a step back and face the hard questions about current forest management policies, funding for various wild-fire management programs, and look at the Federal role in protecting State, Federal, and private land and, yes, take a hard look at the land uses that we are permitting and encouraging in this area.

We need to return to ecology 101. Small ground fires that once regulated the vegetation in our great western woods need to be returned to the ecosystem. The brush and small trees that would burn while older larger trees survive were part of a natural process that made the forest healthier. We need to recognize that a century of aggressive fire suppression has rendered western forests susceptible to these massive conflagrations that cost us billions of dollars annually and that much of the cost and the agony can be attributed to structure protection for homes that are in the forested fringe.

There is a lot of talk these days about the wild land-urban interface. It is a serious question, Mr. Speaker, because we have in this interface between the developed areas on formerly undeveloped forest land, it is putting people in direct contact with what earlier had been a healthy natural phenomenon of wildfires that have just rushed through. We found that people have a difficult time accepting the reality. A recent survey in the Arizona Republic showed that people in this wild land-urban interface have an attitude that, well, they know that it is risky, but I think I will take my chances because it is not that risky. Of course it is not just their chance. They will not bear the costs alone when the worst scenario plays out. Since 1985, wildfires have burned over 10,000 homes.

I see my good friend Mr. TANCREDO from Colorado in the Chamber. My understanding is that there will be a million people in the foreseeable future in Colorado who will be located under current policies in areas that are heavily forested, putting them in harm's way and giving us a very difficult choice about allowing the fires to burn on, risking people's homes and lives, or making some changes to deal with a more rational approach. It is not appropriate for us to continue to put thousands of men and women in harm's way needlessly, and in some cases there are bizarre situations that are a result of human activity on formerly wild forest areas.

We had in Fort Windgate, New Mexico, firefighters having to stay away from certain areas because there were explosions of unexploded ordnance beneath the surface of the public land in areas that had been used for target practice. We had this a couple of years ago in Storm King State Park in New York where firefighters were out fighting a blaze and all of a sudden explosions started to occur. This was a result of shelling from cadets from West Point.

Well, it is not just these unusual situations that deal with unexploded ordnance in military activities. We have to have a comprehensive approach to how we are going to permit activities into the forest land, who is going to bear the risk, what we can do to minimize that in terms of if we are not going to prohibit it outright, to regulate where it is, building materials, what is happening in terms of landscaping. In too much of the West, people have just turned their back on their responsibility, creating serious, serious problems.

Since 1970, over 2.8 million housing units have been constructed along this forest fringe and out into the forest land. The total now is over 5 million dwelling units. If population growth continues at current rates, and we continue to have the ex-urban housing development and we have resort development, there will be an additional 2.4 million housing units in the next 30 years, approaching 9 million in all.

As staggering as these numbers are, they only represent primary residence. They do not include tens of thousands of residences that are second and seasonal and vacation homes, particularly near resort towns. We are seeing the consequences of unplanned growth and development. Some may call it sprawl or dumb growth when it occurs in and around suburban areas; but the facts are we are seeing it leak out in the countryside, and we are going to be penalizing the taxpayer, costing money to extend services, penalizing the taxpayer for fighting fires, for example, where it is going to be exceedingly expensive and difficult to solve in the future.

The final area of concern that I have that I wanted to talk about this evening deals with the way the global climate change has the potential of accelerating and compounding these difficulties. Now the unprecedented drought that we have seen in the West, we have seen in Wyoming, it is the worst in 100 years. We are seeing it throughout the eastern seaboard in places like metropolitan Atlanta where we are not used to thinking about drought conditions.

This is merely a preview of what we can expect if we are going to continue to have the effects of global climate change, as droughts are going to be contributing to concerns about wildfire vulnerability. Unusually dry winters and hot summers increase the likelihood, and we are going to make it more and more difficult to contend with multiple challenges across the country.

I find it ironic that the President will tour the fire sites in Arizona, but really does not have anything in the way of a plan for American leadership when it comes to mounting a plan to deal with global climate change which might forestall or minimize this very serious problem in the future.

It is research from our own federally funded studies that have shown that climate change is going to have a dramatic increase in the areas burned and the number of potentially catastrophic fires, in fact, more than doubling the losses in some regions. And the changes are going to occur despite deployment of fire suppression resources at the highest levels, implying that the change is going to precipitate an increase in both fire suppression costs and economic loss due to just wild fires alone.

And it is not just wild fires that are a concern dealing with the change in greenhouse gasses and global climate. Worldwide, the number of great weather disasters, including fires, in the 1990s was more than five times the number of these disasters for the 1950s. And the damages, the costs that were incurred by governments, by insurance, were more than 10 times as high adjusted for inflation than in the 1950s.

We have seen in the last year of the previous decade 47 events, more than double the average for the 1980s. Well, the United States, with less than 5 percent of the world's population, is playing a huge role in greenhouse gas contributions. We produce approximately five times our per capita contribution.

We as Americans know that we can do better. I sincerely hope that the administration will work with concerned people on both sides of the aisle to not abandon the principle of "polluter pay" and make sure that Superfund cleanup is the priority that the American public wants, to deal with the abuse of the mining industry, hardrock mining in particular, to not make it easier for them to have assaults on the environment, to fill miles of streams and valleys in violation of current law, that instead encourage, indeed mandate, that the industry clean up after itself, that we deal with the current realities of this urban-rural interface that has created such a problem with forest fire protection. And last, but by no means least, that we deal with national leadership for global climate change.

Next month the United States will join with over 100 other nations in the environmental summit in Johannesburg. Mr. Speaker, this would be an excellent opportunity for the United States, if the administration cannot abide by the Kyoto Protocols, which ironically even some large businesses are stepping up and agreeing to meet those targets, at least we are obligated to have our plan, our approach, and it would be a perfect time for the administration to reverse its position, come forward with a leadership approach to make sure that these problems of global climate change, storm events, and wildfires, are not going to be worse as a result of our stewardship, but instead would be better.

ITEMS OF CONCERN TO AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KENNEDY of Minnesota). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to bring to the attention of my colleagues a number of issues. I have listened, as I have been sitting here preparing my notes, to the previous speaker, and there are many concerns that he expresses that I certainly share.

Before I get into the main part of my comments, I do just want to make one statement regarding the issue of wildfires and their cause, the reason for the severe nature of the fires we are having in my State and the others around the West.

I certainly agree with the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) when he says that what has contributed to this condition in our Nation's forests has been 100 years of fire suppression philosophy. The idea that we had to try to put out every fire that started in our forests has undoubtedly been a wrong-headed approach. We recognize now that fires, of course, can be healthy. I say "can be," because it is not necessarily the case. It is not always the case that every type of fire that you have is a "healthy" phenomenon.

There are certain kinds of fires that are enormously destructive, not just in the terms that we naturally think of when we hear of a wildfire, but there are certainly other aspects of it. So not allowing for a natural process to occur, constantly getting in there and trying to stop all fires, is not good, and I agree.

Now the question becomes one of how to deal with it. Is it to simply ignore the fact that we have forests in the Nation that have accumulated up to 400 tons, 400 tons per acre, of fuels, when the average amount, what we would call a healthy natural forest, is around 10 tons per acre? Is it to simply ignore that, leave it, and say because we do not like the idea that mankind, that governments have attempted to intervene in this process, and that has been problematic, is it to suggest that we have no role to play?

I would state categorically that it is just the opposite. Now that we know what the problem is, now that we have some sense of what has contributed to this enormous problem, then what we need to do as a government and as a public policy is to try to address it, and it is not to ignore it. It is not to pretend that the potential for these catastrophic fires does not exist and to simply walk away from the forests and the management thereof to some other kind of bucolic world in which, after all of the forests in the United States have burned to the ground, in a couple of hundred years they will all be back in a more natural and pristine state. That is essentially what our environmentalist friends are asking us to do.

However, we do have options. We do have alternatives. What we have learned is that you can actually now reduce the catastrophic kind of fires that we are experiencing in the West by management, by enlightened forest management. Part of that is what we call controlled burning, where we go to the area, the Forest Service goes into a particular area and does in fact burn a lot of the underbrush and burn those fuels in an area and in a way that they can contain it so it does not, hopefully, get out of control. It has happened in the past, Los Alamos is a horrible example, but, for the most part, it does not happen that it gets out of control. We have in fact over the years had hundreds, if not thousands, of controlled burns. They have all worked perfectly well. It does help create a more natural environment.

It also helps stop the spread of catastrophic fires like the one we are having. I have seen it with my own eyes in Colorado, in the forests we are now dealing with, with the firings we are now dealing with, where we have allowed for a controlled burn. The Hayman fire, which is the one that has consumed 150,000 acres, you can actually see where it has come up against what was called the Polhemus burn, which was a controlled burn, come up against that area, and essentially stopped because there was not the fuel to have it continue.

We can manage the forests by controlled burns. We can also manage the forests by thinning, by going in and actually taking out a lot of this underbrush, by cutting down trees, yes, I am saying it, cutting down trees, especially the trees with the small circumference, and a lot of the underbrush that has been so problematic in these fires. We can do this.

There are ways to manage forests, not to stop all fires, but to make the fires that do occur a product of or manifestation of that healthy ecosystem. It is this area, this point of conflict, that we find ourselves in with our friends in the environmental community, especially the more radical elements of that community, who have stopped every single attempt on the part of the government to try and manage the forests, of the Forest Service to try to manage those forests, and, as a matter of fact, were successful in stopping the Forest Service from doing any sort of thinning right in the middle of the area we now call the Hayman fire.

A year-and-a-half ago the Forest Service proposed to go in there and thin parts of that area, to clean out that kind of underbrush. The environmentalist community filed appeals. They worked for a year-and-a-half with them to try to come to some resolution of their concerns. When the Forest Service thought the concerns were met, they went ahead to start the process. What do you think happened? Guess what? The environmentalists went in there and filed the appeal again, stopped the process again. That was a year-and-a-half ago, and, of course, now that issue is moot, irrelevant, because that part of the forest, along with another 150,000 acres, are simply pieces of charcoal.

So we can do a lot to mitigate the disastrous effects of the fire. As for the wildlife wildland-urban interface, that is problematic. We can also control that. There are zoning laws we can adopt and, in many, many cases, have already. It is not the fault of an American who wants to live near a forest or in the forest area. It is not their fault that we have fires or that the fires are catastrophic.

To this point, we have not had a fire in Colorado, of which I am aware, actually, that was started because someone was living near a forest. I am not saying that has not happened. Nothing I am aware of recently. None of the major fires were started by people who happened to live in or near the forests.

Unfortunately, the two most horrendous fires we have burning or have just brought under control in the United States, one in Colorado and one in Arizona, were started by Forest Service personnel. In Colorado, the lady that started the fire apparently, apparently started the fire, I should say, is a Forest Service employee directly. The gentleman in Arizona who apparently started this fire is someone who is employed by the Forest Service to go in and help the Forest Service fight fires. He is a smoke jumper and he wanted to essentially be employed, so he started this fire thinking I will get the job; I can go in and fight the fire. It got away from him, and 500,000 acres burned down. An area actually now larger than the size of Los Angeles has burned in Arizona.

So this idea that you have got people living on or near the land and therefore we have these big problems, that is really not it. Yes, there are homes that are destroyed, and it is true and horrible, but the people who have chosen to live there take that kind of risk and pay insurance premiums that reflect that, for the most part.

Anyway, I just wanted to talk about that. There are many other issues, but that was not the main purpose of my coming to the floor tonight.

I did want tonight to reflect upon another speaker who had the hour before the gentleman from Oregon, and this was my dear friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), a gentleman whom, by the way, I respect enormously and whose opinions and attitudes I believe are incredibly profound and need to be heard. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is a devout libertarian who has in many, many cases and many, many times, I think, been a lone voice for a variety of different causes here and a perspective that is not heard often enough.

Of course, there are certain aspects of his presentation, of his discussion tonight, with which I must disagree, especially in terms of what our responsibility is as a Nation to defend ourselves against the war that we are now involved in and whether or not we can argue about the purpose of the war, I should say the genesis of it. But I do not think we can argue about the fact that we are in one.

The question that I think this House must always deal with, and I commend my colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), for being such an articulate defender of the fact or the idea, the philosophy, that we must never surrender individual freedom and liberty in the pursuit of ultimate security. I certainly agree with that, that that is a terribly difficult balance that we are asked to try and maintain here in this Congress. And the issue is to what extent does this government have a responsibility to actually try to defend itself against the threat that we, I think, that we now face, and what are the measures that we can legitimately take to defend ourselves, considering the nature of our opponent, our enemy.

That is really the ultimate debate we are having. What is the nature of the fight we are in? Is it just against this small band of terrorists who have, as we have been told, hijacked a particular religious philosophy? And, if so, if it is just against a small band? Maybe we can name them al Qaeda. If that is it, if that is our only war, I would agree with my colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), that the steps presently taken, the steps we have taken up to this point in time, may have been overreaction, because it is a relatively small group and we can identify who they are by name, we can go after them wherever they are, find them, arrest them, kill them, if that is the only alternative.

But I believe that that is not the nature of the battle or of the enemy that we face. I believe it is much broader than that. I believe it is in fact fundamentalist Islam that we are fighting tonight, today, yesterday, and will be fighting for many years to come. It is something far larger than this small group of people.

Tonight, maybe, during this discussion we will have the opportunity to go through this at greater length, to determine what exactly it is then our Nation should do, if we are faced with that broader, more broadly defined enemy. One of the things I believe we must absolutely do is to work to control our borders.

It is incumbent upon us, it is incumbent upon us because we call ourselves a Nation State, because we believe ourselves to be a sovereign Nation. We claim that, and I believe we are, I believe we are separate and distinct from the other nations of the world.

I believe that becoming an American citizen, for instance, means more and should mean more than simply crossing a line, simply stepping over a boundary. I believe there are all kinds of things that are incumbent upon an individual when they become a citizen of this country, and I believe that there are people in this world, there are, in fact, far too many people in this world, that would destroy this Nation, everything we stand for, everything we believe in, and physically destroy us, not just our philosophy, but all of us living here.

I believe that that is the nature of the fight we are in, and I believe that there are many things we need to do. Among them is to actually secure our own borders. It is to say to the world that we have a right, a responsibility, to defend ourselves. Part of that may be to seek out our enemies in Afghanistan and in Iraq and in the Philippines or wherever they may be hiding. But it is also to defend our own borders from those who would come across for the purpose of doing us harm. And I do not think we should be condemned for that or called myopic or xenophobic or anti-individual freedom. It is the least that our citizens can expect of us, to defend them, so that they can be free to practice their religion and their political philosophies and their individual ways of life.

□ 2000

I see that I am joined tonight by the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER) and another colleague whom I will introduce in just a moment. I am glad that they are here. I will gladly yield to my colleague.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, I would like for the record and for anyone who is observing this presentation this evening, to understand the pivotal role that the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDI) is playing in this battle for our Nation's security in terms of the fight against illegal immigration.

Now, I may or may not agree with the gentleman about the nature of the terrorist threat to the United States; I tend to think that there are many, many Muslims throughout the world who are as much against terrorism as we are, standing right here in this body today, and that they are horrified that the bin Ladens of the world are being presented to the American people and to others as spokesmen for Islam. They are just horrified by this.

But to the degree that there is a threat there, what is important is what the gentleman from Colorado has been doing to make sure that we focus on a major vulnerability of our country, which is the fact that our government is not concerned about the sanctity of our immigration system and the security of our borders, so that the people of the United States of America are being made vulnerable every day in many ways; economically, but also in terms of their own personal safety, as well as the safety of our government and our institutions, by a massive flow of illegal immigration into the United States of America.

The gentleman from Colorado has taken it upon himself to try to mobilize public opinion and mobilize the opinion of Members of this body so that the public, as well as this body, will understand the great risk we are putting ourselves in by not controlling the flow of illegal immigrants into our country. It is a risk that has economic ramifications, which the gentleman from Colorado has time and again talked about, and about how the standard of living of the average working person has been going down; and yet, of course, we have the ownership class in America who seems to be able to take advantage of cheap labor.

We have also heard from the gentleman from Colorado about the criminal elements that are coming into our country; and now the gentleman from Colorado is also warning us about the potential terrorist implications to not having control over our borders.

Now, I have been fighting illegal immigration for as long as I have served, and have been privileged to serve, in this body; and that is why I feel so strongly that the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDI) is playing a role that is just indispensable to the security of our country, because he is carrying much of this load on his own shoulders.

But I have been especially concerned over the years about the security risks that illegal aliens pose to our country. We do not need to just make this fundamentalist Muslims, because I happen to believe that there are a lot of fundamentalist Christians and fundamentalist Jews that say crazy things about other people's religions, and there are radicals who would murder people in every faith. We must make sure that we are opposed to any of this type of radicalism, and it should be denied access to the United States of America. If you have a radical Christian or a radical Buddhist or a radical Communist or a radical Hebrew or a radical Muslim, any one of those who are willing to kill other people because of their faith, should not be permitted in the United States of America, period.

Well, since 245(i), which was an amnesty for illegal aliens, was proposed in 1996, I have talked myself hoarse about why this was such a grave matter to our national security. Mr. Speaker, 245(i), as we know, permits people who are in this country illegally not to have to go back to their home countries in order to readjust their status so that they could in some way be here legally. In the past, if someone is here illegally, they have to go back before they can adjust their status.

Well, others in this body have openly scoffed, saying that 245(i) is about, what they claim, is about uniting families, or fairness, or economics, or anything else than what it is.

Mr. Speaker, 245(i), which is an amnesty for those people who are here illegally so they do not have to go home to adjust their status, they can do it here, is an invitation to criminals and terrorists and anyone else who would overstay their visa to come to this country and break our laws. It is an invitation for everyone who comes here on a visa to overstay their visa because, after all, now that they are here in the United States, and they can be adjusted. And while 245(i), which we put into place, was supposedly a limited right of these people who are here illegally to adjust their status, it has had already horrible impacts on the safety of our people.

Now, the 245(i) amnesty for illegal aliens has claimed the first victims that can be officially proven to be the victims of the action of 245(i) by this Congress, and it is a very prominent case. The INS Congressional Relations

Office confirmed to my office that the Egyptian gunman who killed two people at the El Al counter in Los Angeles Airport, at LAX, on July 4, was in this country only due to a 245(i) amnesty. That is that Hesham Mohamed Hadayet, an Egyptian citizen, a man who apparently either was part of a terrorist system which we do not know, he may not have been, but we do know that he lost his composure or perhaps he did it intentionally, but he went to LAX and murdered two people, two innocent people.

Think about this. Mr. Hadayet, and I do not know if that is the way you pronounce his name, who was due to be deported, became a resident of this country due to a 245(i) amnesty. What a travesty.

Now, this is a case that we can document. I would contend that there are probably many other cases in this country where people have been brutalized or murdered or raped or robbed, or that you have someone who imposes a terrorist threat in our country because of this, but this one we can document. If we had deported him, those two people there at LAX, those beautiful young people, may be alive today, would certainly be alive today, and their families and their friends would have been saved this enormous grief.

Estimates from the INS and others are literally several hundred thousand, by the way, in terms of how many illegal aliens have already applied for and received legal permanent status through 245(i). So let us make that clear. Hundreds of thousands of people have received their permanent resident status, even though they were in this country illegally at the time, because of 245(i).

Now I might add just for the record that the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN), my good friend and colleague, the two of us debated this issue out. I was claiming at the time that hundreds of thousands of people would seek to utilize this loophole if Congress passed the 245(i) extension. The gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) emphatically stated that it would only be 30,000, he could never imagine more than 30,000 or so people claiming this, and this was his official estimate by some, of course, source that either did not know what they were talking about or were intentionally misleading the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN).

But I remember him saying, if you have over that many people apply, I will buy you dinner. Well, I say to the gentleman, I am ready for dinner. I am ready for dinner. And I want the gentleman to know that I will not mention over dinner the death of those two poor people at the El Al counter at LAX, because they can be traced right back to that 245(i), and there are not just a few thousand people who applied, there are hundreds of thousands, and it is a gigant loophole that we do not need to open wider, we need to stop that loophole. We need to plug it so we do not have any more maniacs in our midst who might have been deported; at least they would not have been here. Who knows.

I had a person from the INS tell me that the reason why we want them here, if they are here illegally, the reason we want them deported back to their home country to check them out is because that is where the records are. That is where all the authorities in those countries know in their country who has been arrested for unstable behavior. Maybe this man was not a Muslim extremist. He may have just been a very disturbed person.

Well, guess what? We do not want a very disturbed person in this country who is here illegally either. And if Congress should pass another extension of 245(i), which is, of course, what we were being pressured to do, and let me add that the vote that they were leading up to, and there is enormous pressure on us to pass 245(i), that vote was supposed to be on what day? 9-11.

If those people would not have flown those planes into the World Trade Center, if those terrorists would not have slaughtered thousands of Americans up there in New York, this body would have been in session and we would have been voting for 245(i) that would permit these types of threats to our security and to the personal safety of our people to remain in the United States. Had Congress passed 245(i), there would probably be, and we estimate, another 300,000 illegal aliens permitted to stay here and to start to legalize their citizenship status and their immigration status.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time for just a minute, the gentleman makes a very interesting and, I think, dramatic point here, something I did not know, something that I think a majority of Americans did not know. And I will guarantee my colleagues this: What my colleague has just stated about the status of the gentleman who was here and killed those two people at El Al, that fact, I would be willing to bet anyone dinner and anything else, would never, ever, ever have come out had it not been for the dogged determination of the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

These are the things that we hear about, but the INS will never admit to. And I hope to see, but I wonder if tomorrow morning we will see on the front page of every newspaper in this country and on every talk show in the country this fact, the fact that my colleague has just pointed out to us; and I will bet again, if it is brought up at all, it will probably be buried, except for the very few parts of the media that have a tendency to support our point of view on this.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman is precisely correct. My staff, when this happened, noticed that there was a discrepancy about why this person was actually in the country after he had been given deportation notices. I talked to them about it and, frankly, several of my staff members worked very diligently to find this information out. Rick Dykema, who is my chief of staff, headed the investigation; and the INS, although they finally confirmed it this evening, right before I came up here, the INS was being very nebulous and it was like, oh, well, they did not want to admit that this was it.

How many people around the country are going to hear this? As the gentleman says, how many newspapers are going to report that? I am very grateful, and I thank the gentleman very much for noting that it took a lot of hard work for us to do this.

I would just hope that those people who want to extend 245(i) go down and take a look at the blood on the floor of the LAX airport before they do. Take a look at the picture of those poor people who were murdered by this either fanatic or unstable foreigner who was here illegally, whom we could have sent back, but instead, we kept, because our colleagues have bought into this idea that it is in some way a positive thing to permit this loophole to exist.

By the way, if there are another 300,000 people who now the INS has to process because of 245(i), let us remember that the INS is already 3 million cases behind in processing people who already have made their application. Why are we adding to their work in processing these applications, and while they are doing it, permitting these people who are here illegally to stay here in this country?

If there is a backlog of 3 million people, it is going to take them years to work and to try to find or go over everyone's case like this, and now we are just adding more and more people who are able to stay here without the serious background check that they would get if they were sent home because they were here in this country illegally.

With the July 4 attack, we knew that we were in a horrible situation. We must take a look at 245(i) and the entire immigration policy of this country after this attack on July 4, but we should have been doing this after September 11, as well.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, absolutely. Here is the thing: we are now 10 months past 9-11. We can talk about the errors we have made in the Congress in the past and the errors this government has made in the past in the crazy-quilt patchwork type of immigration policy that we have been dealing with here for years, and we can affix blame there, and rightly so.

But would the gentleman not think that subsequent to 9-11, subsequent to that horrible event, we would have done something to correct this action, to say, okay, we have made mistakes and we recognize it?

But not only have we not done anything significant to correct it, but an interesting article that I came across just the other day said that, since 9-11, we have given out over 50,000 visas to people from countries on the terrorist watch list. This is not just people from countries that are kind of on the fringe; these are people from the countries on the terrorist watch list. We have given out 50,000 visas since then.

It is still the case that if people live in Saudi Arabia and want to come to the United States they do not have to go see an actual counselor; they can put it in a drop-box. They can get the visa. No one interviews them. This is coming from Saudi Arabia, a country that we already know many people have come from who have done horrible, horrible things to the United States.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, all 19 of those people who flew the planes into our buildings and murdered our people were Saudi citizens. I think there are some people in Saudi Arabia who are friends of the United States and allies of the United States, but we have to take a look at what is going on in Saudi Arabia. We have to protect ourselves, to make sure that we just do not have an open door, because they have not cleaned up their own house. They have not put their own house in order. Thus, they have made it unsafe.

How many other countries are like that?

Mr. TANCREDO. Reclaiming some of my time, I want to say that the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER) has been enormously flattering in his description of my efforts, and I sincerely appreciate it. But I also know that long before I came to this Congress, there were people here laboring in this vineyard, and the gentleman is one.

I want to tell the gentleman how much I appreciate what he has done in this area. It is by circumstance and event and whatever that I ended up in the position of being the spokesman for our caucus, but it is only because of work like the gentleman has done and another colleague I will introduce right now that we have the ability to actually bring, I think, some sanity to this discussion. It is because they have been here for some time, and they have been really and truly pressing this issue.

Now, of course, it is on everybody's plate. It is on everybody's top list of things to be concerned about. Why? Only because of horrendous events. They should have been listening to my colleagues a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. DEAL).

Mr. DEAL of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his leadership, as the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER) has already expressed, for leadership on the Immigration Reform Caucus.

I would like to take a few minutes to share more information. I think the information just brought forward by the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER) is certainly pertinent to the issue of the 245(i) matter that is still pending before this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, we should learn some things when we have studies and censuses and other reports made, because we spend a lot of money doing this. If we will just look at a few statistics. For example, the latest census of 2000 tells us that approximately 8.7 million people are undocumented illegal aliens living in this country. That is about 1 million more than most people estimated was going to show up in the report.

According to those figures, we are having about 700,000 a year illegal immigrants entering this country. If that translates down to 1,918 per day, 80 per hour, and approximately one per minute, in other words, since 9-11, we are approaching a half a million illegal immigrants who have entered this country and virtually nothing is being done about it.

Let me share some other things. As the gentleman has already alluded to, the 19 terrorists in the 9-11 attack all had Social Security cards, all had Social Security numbers. In fact, 13 of them obtained Social Security cards legally. In that regard, a recent report was issued by the Inspector General of the Social Security Administration in which he said that one in every 12 foreigners receiving new Social Security numbers have done so using false documents. He indicated in his report that preliminary results show that some 100,000 Social Security numbers were wrongly issued to noncitizens in the year 2000.

He goes on to say that even before 9-11, that he had been recommending that the Social Security agency check its records with the INS before issuing Social Security cards, and had received no support and cooperation from Social Security. Since that time, Social Security has agreed with that recommendation, but still is having difficulty coordinating records. We, of course, have tried to pass legislation previously to deal with that issue.

Let me deal with another subject. Speaking of ironic situations, I have discovered in my research and in my talking with local INS agents that one of the reasons we are having difficulty deporting illegals is that a lot of times we do not have any detention facilities to keep them until we can process them for deportation.

One of the major reasons is we cannot use many of our jails where we are housing American citizens for criminal activity. They do not comply with the INS detention standards. The INS has adopted detention standards that do not correspond with the American Correctional Association standards. Now, these are the standards that are used in over 21,000 detention facilities all across our country, but the INS says they are not good enough.

Let me give the gentleman just a few examples. Non-English speaking detainees must be provided with more than just simple access to a set of English language law books. They must also be allowed to have presentations made by outside groups informing them of U.S. immigration laws and procedures, and the INS encourages these presentations.

What about meals? Detainees under the INS standards must be served at least two hot meals a day. Any sack meal shall contain at least two sandwiches per meal, which at least one must be nonmeat and one must be meat, and that must be nonpork, and they must also include one piece of fresh fruit and a dessert item.

I was recently told that in my hometown in Hall County, Georgia, we could not use the local detention facility which houses all other detainees simply because that facility serves a cold breakfast and a balogna sandwich for lunch, and that was just not good enough for the housing of people who are illegally in this country.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman tells me that it is all right to detain our neighbor who has a traffic violation or a bad-check charge, or even our children in the school lunch program who do eat balogna sandwiches and are sometimes served cold breakfasts, and it is not good enough for those who are illegally in this country, but it is good enough for American citizens, let us get real about this.

What about telephone access? We have all heard the proverbial, I am entitled to my telephone call. If one is an illegal alien in this country, let me tell the gentleman what they are entitled to about telephone calls. They cannot, first of all, be placed in a detention facility unless they have unlimited access to telephones; and they cannot be limited, except if they do attempt to limit the time, it can be no less than 20 minutes.

They have also required, the INS has required, their telephone service provider to program the telephone system to permit detainee calls to numbers on the pro bono legal representation list, and permits them to use debit cards to make the calls. Now, that is not the same privileges that are entitled to Americans who are detained in our detention facilities.

They also say that if one is a normal detainee, one has to make all long distance calls, and they have to be collect.

Not so if one is an illegal alien. They are entitled to use a debit card. I am told by one that even the detention facility may have to have international telephone access to meet the requirements.

I know that we all recall some of the debates that surrounded the 1996 Immigration Reform Act. We are in the process of looking at that act again, trying to clarify some things. One of the issues was what is a deportable offense. Generally, it was considered to be certain felonies that are of an aggravated nature.

For example, just to have a DUI is not enough to get one deported. Let me read from a letter from a local judge in my hometown. This is what he said:

"Last week I sentenced a gentleman on his fourth DUI committed in the last 2 years. This gentleman is an illegal immigrant. I directed the probation department to contact INS in an attempt to prevent further violations in Hall County." He goes on to say that that was not enough to get him deported.

He also makes reference to local gang activity. I might just say within the last months we have had two drive-by murders and gang-related activity in my community.

He goes on and summarizes. He says that people who repeatedly drive drunk and are known to be involved in gang activity are allowed to basically run free, with no fear of prosecution, because of the current INS policies. That is a real tragedy and a real shame. It needs to be corrected.

How many DUIs does the gentleman think a person should have who is, first of all, illegally in the country to begin with? One is not enough to get them deported, two is not enough, three is not enough, and in this case he cites an actual case where four DUIs is not enough to get him sent out of this country.

I ask, where is MADD on this issue? Where are those who say that we ought to get tough on drunk driving and the other things that disrupt communities and endanger the safety and lives of our local citizens?

I commend the gentleman, and I will conclude with this comment. It is a comment that was presented to our reform caucus by a senior INS special agent. I think he says it very well when he says this: "The first laws that aliens entering the United States encounter are those laws that the INS is supposed to enforce. When the INS fails to effectively, consistently, and fairly enforce these laws, we are sending a very dangerous message to aliens seeking to enter the United States. In effect, we are telling them that not only can they expect to get away with violating our laws, they can anticipate being rewarded for violating our laws."

I think he says it very well.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. Although the gentleman did say it very well, it was made even more profound, I think, and more articulate by the gentleman's brilliant analysis. I do sincerely appreciate the gentleman coming down this evening.

The gentleman points out several ironic, would be one way to describe them, or infuriating is another way to describe these situations, these events, these things with which we are now dealing almost daily. It seems to me I confront something like this all the time where we hear something like this and we say, How could this be? This could not really be. For instance, four DUIs, and he cannot be deported?

We have constructed on our Web site a list of things that we call "incredible but true," and Members can go to that Web site, www.house.gov/Tancredo and go to the immigration page on that Web site, and Members will see these.

If they wish, people are able to go to that Web site and sign a petition to the President of the United States asking him to please augment the forces that we presently have on the border, the Border Patrol people that are so, right now, inundated. They are so overrun, outgunned, outmanned by the people they are trying to keep out of this country that they are in desperate shape. So we are asking the President to actually help us help them by putting military on the border. Members can go there and sign a petition.

I see that my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER), has something else he wants to say.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to reaffirm something we talked about earlier, and this is for people who may have missed the beginning of this Special Order, that due to research from my office, we have discovered that the murderer who may well be a terrorist or may well be just a very disturbed man or may be a cold-blooded murderer who is in this country illegally, managed to stay in this country through the use of the 245(i) process, this is the murderer who killed those people on July 4 at LAX. So we have confirmed officially for the first time at least, these are known victims of the 245(i).

This is outrageous. And hopefully by exposing this, it should wake up some of our colleagues to just how serious it is to not regain control of our borders which are just totally out of control. And, number two, hopefully this will alert our fellow colleagues to the danger of the 245(i) reform, which they call it, which is a gigantic loophole which permits people who should be deported or should not be in this country because they are here illegally, to stay in this country and adjust their status here in the country rather than having to go back to their native country.

Had this man who came from Egypt been forced to return to his country as was the law without 245(i), those two people who were murdered on July 4 at LAX at the El Al counter would be alive today. And this grief that we brought upon their families is the grief that can be brought upon any American family.

We just heard from our colleague of someone having four DUIs. What does that mean? That person was driving, that person was a threat to killing our families on the street. Now, why are we permitting people who are in this country to pose a risk to the safety of our people and the security of our country? This is ridiculous. I would hope that those listening understand just how serious this issue is and demand that Congress act on this, and watch what Congress does, and, again, that people pay attention to people like the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO), who is offering tremendous leadership on this issue and he has taken a lot of personal hits.

I can tell you years ago I was called a racist skinhead for suggesting that instead of giving hundreds of thousands of dollars to medical benefits to illegal immigrants, that they should be sent home to their own countries for medical benefits. There was one man in my district who received over $300,000 worth of medical treatment. He had leukemia. Now, I am sorry he had leukemia, but $300,000? What does that do for the amount of money that we have available to take care of our own people?

Obviously, America has not been taking the steps necessary to secure our own borders. Obviously, the leaders in America are not putting the safety and security and well-being of the American people first. Who is to care about America unless we do?

The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) has been in the forefront of this type of patriotism, caring about his country and watching out for our people.

I thank the gentleman very much for letting me participate.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for joining us this evening.

The gentleman brought up several interesting points, not the least of which is the cost of illegal immigration, the cost to the country. There are a whole host of ramifications of illegal immigration into the country. People do not like talking about any of them. But there is an enormous economic cost to illegal immigration, and it far outweighs the amount of money that is contributed, quote/unquote, to the American society by the taxes that many of these people pay.

It is true that if they come here and they work and they are working for wages that can be taxed, that is to say they are not working under the counter, just being paid under the table, they will pay some sort of tax, and they pay a tax on the things they buy. But the reality is that for the most part 90-some percent of the people who are here and especially who are here illegally have the lowest-paying jobs. They are low-skilled people who, therefore, of course are employed at a marginal level. They pay relatively little, if anything, number one, in income tax and certainly not all that much even in the sales tax because their purchasing power is relatively low. We do not gain a tremendous amount of revenue from the people who come here and are working illegally. But we do gain a tremendous amount of cost.

Recently Rice University estimated that the undocumented aliens in the United States cost taxpayers $24 billion every single year. And by the way, in Arizona a Federal judge has just added to that. To go on the list of incredible, but true, things about immigration, let us add this one: right now 175 illegals in Arizona are getting free kidney dialysis treatments, free kidney dialysis. Many of them came across the border to obtain this service.

Now, it was supposed to end on June 30, but Judge Browning has extended the benefits for five illegals who are "very ill." Now the question we have to ask ourselves, how many people in our own districts, how many people who have been here all their lives, that were born here, grandparents born here, that are citizens of the United States, paid taxes all their lives, how many of them can afford kidney dialysis or have it paid for or that were able to have it paid for by the State? And yet people who can come into this country illegally, take advantage of our system, take advantage of our laws, can receive this treatment? It is not fair. I am sorry for them that they need the treatment. How much can we possibly afford, is the question? How much can we afford? And why should we be doing it for people who are not citizens?

There are a lot of people who would suggest that in reality there is nothing different from being just here physically in this country and being here as a citizen. But I suggest to you that there is an enormous amount of difference, and we should not ignore it.

Another colleague who has joined me this evening, another member of our Immigration Reform Caucus and another member who, long before I came to the Congress, has been laboring in this vineyard and bringing to the attention of the American people concerns about illegal immigration, my colleague from Virginia (Mr. GOODE).

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO). First, I want to thank him for his tireless effort on behalf of reining in the huge problem of illegal immigration in this country. I also want to thank the Congressman from Georgia for pointing out the situation where four drunk driving convictions are insufficient for deportation. I would also like to thank the Congressman from California (Mr. ROHR-ABACHER) for pointing out the background of the killer of the three persons at Los Angeles Airport on July 4. He mentioned one cost and this gentleman has mentioned one cost, and that is the free medical treatment that illegal immigrants impose on the United States.

I was just reading a letter from another Member of Congress in a Dear Colleague about a cost of a million dollars for treating immigrants in the State of Florida. In Patrick County, an illegal immigrant ran a citizen off the road in an automobile accident. That citizen had to go to Baptist Hospital in North Carolina, was in a coma, and the young man is still not recovered. And this treatment of him has been going on and that is a tangent cost. It is not a direct cost, but it has long surpassed the resources of that family.

I also wanted to talk this evening a few minutes about the need for troops on our borders. This past week we celebrated Independence Day. And I think one of the best birthday presents this Nation could have would be secure borders. With secure borders we could greatly reduce or stop terrorism. We could greatly reduce or stop illegal immigration. And with secure borders we could greatly reduce or stop the illegal drug traffic. And I know that several of us with the gentleman's leadership have urged the administration to deploy the military on our borders; and we stand committed towards that end, either administratively or through legislation. In particular, the southern and northern borders of the United States are porous.

Canada and Mexico are still not doing an adequate job of screening the immigrant traffic and cargo in and out of their countries. Aside from obviously being dangerous to the welfare of citizens in this country, the porousness of our borders adds an unacceptable burden on our already overworked border patrol.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service is struggling to meet the demands of new threats, and it is in urgent need of the support of our military. Congress is working to give the administration greater authority to use the military on our borders. As the gentleman noted, the House adopted an amendment to the defense authorization bill that would allow the Department of Justice, if requested by the INS or the Customs Service, to utilize troops on our borders. This legislation would allow the direct involvement of the military in assisting Customs and our border patrol in preventing the coming into this country of terrorists, drug traffickers, and illegal aliens.

If we really want to make our homeland secure, we have got to do more than reorganize homeland security. That is a good positive step. And we have taken other good and positive steps, but to have our borders secure we need troops; and that will have a three-fold purpose of stopping illegal drugs, stopping illegal immigration, and stopping terrorists. And, again, I want to thank the gentleman for his tireless efforts on behalf of this.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely appreciate it.

The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODE) has been also enormously helpful as a member of our committee and a person to whom I turn often for advice and consultation. It is important I think that we should point out that it was the amendments of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODE) to the defense authorization bill that did, in fact, provide, if it is passed by the other body, signed into law, it will provide the President with that authorization. And I sincerely hope that it is retained by the Senate.

This would not be the first time we have passed that resolution, and every time we have done so in the past the Senate has chosen to simply ignore it. This is, I hope, a change as a result of all of the events of the last several months. The last 10 months really would help the Members of the other body understand the need for doing this and certainly would help the President also.

Mr. Speaker, again, I want to just say that there has been an enormous amount of talk about the need to protect the United States from future terrorist attacks. Unfortunately, there has not been enough action, certainly far more talk than action. Since 9-11, we are absolutely not one bit safer today in this country. Our borders are not one bit more secure than they were at the time that the terrorists flew the planes into the buildings here in the United States and killed 3,000 of our citizens. That is an unacceptable position to be in for the Members of this body. For the administration to ignore the security of our borders as one aspect of this war that we are fighting, is irresponsible to say the least. And all I can hope is that they will heed the advice of the colleagues that joined me tonight, especially the President, in putting troops on the borders, that is the number one thing, and the rest of the Members of this body to tighten up our immigration policy.

AMENDMENT NO. 3: Page 12, strike line 3
 and all that follows through line 21 on page 13, and insert the following:

"(2) RISK-BENEFIT DETERMINATION DECISION.—Before the last day of such 2-year period, the President, in consultation with the Under Secretary, shall determine whether the security benefits of the Federal flight deck officer pilot program outweigh the risks of the program.

"(3) TERMINATION OF PILOT PROGRAM.—If the President, in consultation with the Under Secretary, determines under paragraph (2) that the risks outweigh the benefits, the President shall sign a certification ordering the Under Secretary to publish a notice in the Federal Register terminating the pilot program and explaining the reasons for the decision to terminate. The Under Secretary shall publish such notice and shall provide adequate notice of the decision to Federal flight deck officers and other individuals as necessary.

"(4) CONTINUATION OF PROGRAM.—If the President, in consultation with the Under Secretary, determines under paragraph (2) that the benefits outweigh the risks, the President shall sign a certification ordering the Under Secretary to publish a notice in the Federal Register announcing the continuation of the program. The Under Secretary shall publish such notice, continue the program in accordance with this section, and may increase the number of Federal flight deck officers participating in the program.

AMENDMENT NO. 6: Page 15, strike line 12 and all that follows through line 4 on page 18 and insert the following:

(a) AVIATION CREWMEMBER SELF-DEFENSE DIVISION.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 44918 of title 49, United States Code, are amended to read as follows—

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) REQUIREMENTS FOR AIR CARRIERS.—

"(A) PRESCRIPTION.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism Act, the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall prescribe detailed requirements for an air carrier cabin crew training program, and for the instructors of that program as described in subsection (b) to prepare crew members for potential threat conditions.

"(B) CONSULTATION.—In developing the requirements, the Under Secretary shall consult with appropriate law enforcement personnel who have expertise in self-defense training, security experts, terrorism experts, and representatives of air carriers and labor organizations representing individuals employed in commercial aviation.

"(2) AVIATION CREWMEMBER SELF-DEFENSE DIVISION.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, the Under Secretary shall establish an Aviation Crew Self-Defense Division within the Transportation Security Administration.

"(B) DUTIES.—The Division shall develop and administer the requirements described in this section.

"(C) DIRECTOR.—

"(i) APPOINTMENT.—The Under Secretary shall appoint a Director of the Aviation Crew Self-Defense Division who shall be the head of the Division. The Director shall report to the Under Secretary.

"(ii) SOLICITATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS.—In the selection of the Director, the Under Secretary shall solicit recommendations from law enforcement, air carriers, and labor organizations representing individuals employed in commercial aviation.

"(iii) BACKGROUND.—The Director shall have a background in self-defense training, including military or law enforcement training with an emphasis in teaching self-defense and the appropriate use of force.

"(D) REGIONAL TRAINING SUPERVISORS.—Regional training supervisors shall be under the control of the Director and shall have appropriate training and experience in teaching self-defense and the appropriate use of force.

"(b) PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The requirements prescribed under subsection (a) shall provide competence, and ensure retention of skills, in self-defense training that incorporates classroom and situational training that contains the following elements:

"(A) Determination of the seriousness of any occurrence.

"(B) Crew communication and coordination.

"(C) Appropriate responses to defend oneself, including hands on training, with reasonable and effective requirements on time allotment providing competence and ensuring retention of skills in the following levels of self-defense:

"(i) Awareness, deterrence, and avoidance.

"(ii) Verbalization.

"(iii) Empty hand control.

"(iv) Intermediate weapons and self-defense techniques.

"(v) Deadly force.

"(D) Use of protective devices assigned to crewmembers (to the extent such devices are approved by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration or Under Secretary).

"(E) Psychology of terrorists to cope with hijacker behavior and passenger responses.

"(F) Live situational simulation joint training exercises regarding various threat conditions, including all of the elements required by this section.

"(G) Flight deck procedures or aircraft maneuvers to defend the aircraft.

"(2) PROGRAM ELEMENTS FOR INSTRUCTORS.—The requirements prescribed under subsection (a) shall contain program elements for instructors that include, at a minimum, the following:

"(A) A certification program for the instructors who will provide the training described in paragraph (1).

"(B) A requirement that no training session shall have fewer than 1 instructor for every 12 students.

"(C) A requirement that air carriers provide certain instructor information, including names and qualifications, to the Aviation Crew Member Self-Defense Division within 30 days after the requirements are prescribed under subsection (a).

"(D) Training course curriculum lesson plans and performance objectives to be used by instructors.

"(E) Written training bulletins to reinforce course lessons and provide necessary progressive updates to instructors.

"(3) RECURRENT TRAINING.—Each air carrier shall provide the training under the program every 6 months after the completion of the initial training.

"(4) INITIAL TRAINING.—Air carriers shall provide the initial training under the program within 24 months of the date of enactment of the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism Act.

"(5) COMMUNICATION DEVICES.—The requirements described in subsection (a) shall include a provision mandating that air carriers provide flight and cabin crew with a discreet, hands-free, wireless method of communicating with the flight deck."

(b) RULEMAKING; LIABILITY.—Section 44918 of such title is further amended by adding at the end the following:

"(f) RULEMAKING AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding section 44903(i) (relating to authority to arm flight deck crew with less than-lethal weapons), not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism Act, the Under Secretary, in consultation with persons described in subsection (a)(1), shall prescribe regulations requiring air carriers to—

"(1) provide adequate training in the proper conduct of a cabin search and allow adequate duty time to perform such a search; and

"(2) conduct a preflight security briefing with flight deck and cabin crew and, when available, Federal air marshals or other authorized law enforcement officials.

"(g) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—

"(1) AIR CARRIERS.—An air carrier shall not be liable for damages in any action brought in a Federal or State court arising out of the acts or omissions of the air carrier's training instructors or cabin crew using reasonable and necessary force in defending an aircraft of the air carrier against acts of criminal violence or air piracy.

(2) TRAINING INSTRUCTORS AND CABIN CREW.—An air carrier's training instructors or cabin crew shall not be liable for damages in any action brought in a Federal or State court arising out of an act or omission of a training instructor or a member of the cabin crew regarding the defense of an aircraft against acts of criminal violence or air piracy unless the crew member is guilty of gross negligence or willful misconduct."

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 44918 of such title is further amended—

(1) in subsection (c)—

(A) by striking "issues the guidance" and inserting "prescribes the requirements";

(B) by striking "that guidance" and inserting "those requirements"; and

(C) by striking "guidance" the third place it appears; and

(2) in subsection (e) by striking "guidance issued" and inserting "requirements prescribed".

(d) NONLETHAL WEAPONS FOR FLIGHT ATTENDANTS.—

(1) STUDY.—The Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall conduct a study to determine whether possession of a non-lethal weapon by a member of an air carrier's cabin crew would aid the flight deck crew in combating air piracy and criminal violence on commercial airlines.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Under Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on the study.

Page 6, after line 6, insert the following:

"(7) MINIMIZATION OF RISK.—If the Under Secretary determines as a result of the analysis under paragraph (3)(E) that there is a significant risk of the catastrophic failure of an aircraft as a result of the discharge of a firearm, the Under Secretary shall take such actions as may be necessary to minimize that risk."

Page 11, line 19, before the period insert the following: "under chapter 171 of title 28, relating to tort claims procedure."

"(i) PROCEDURES FOLLOWING ACCIDENTAL DISCHARGES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an accidental discharge of a firearm under the pilot program results in the injury or death of a passenger or crew member on an aircraft, the Under Secretary—

"(A) shall revoke the deputization of the Federal flight deck officer responsible for that firearm if the Under Secretary determines that the discharge was attributable to the negligence of the officer; and

"(B) if the Under Secretary determines that a shortcoming in standards, training, or procedures was responsible for the accidental discharge, the Under Secretary may temporarily suspend the program until the shortcoming is corrected.

"(2) AFFECT OF SUSPENSION.—A temporary suspension of the pilot program under paragraph (1) suspends the running of the 2-year period for the pilot program until the suspension is terminated."

OFFERED BY: MR. STEARNS

AMENDMENT NO. 13: Page 14, line 18, strike the close quotation marks and the period.

"§ 44922. Federal cockpit officer program

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall establish a pilot program to deputize volunteer pilots of air carriers providing air transportation or intrastate air transportation as Federal law enforcement officers to defend the flight decks of aircraft of such air carriers against acts of criminal violence or air piracy. Such officers shall be known as 'Federal cockpit officers'.

"(b) PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 months after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary shall establish procedural requirements to carry out the program under this section.

"(2) COMMENCEMENT OF PROGRAM.—Beginning 2 months after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary shall begin the process of selecting, training, and deputizing pilots as Federal cockpit officers under the program; except that, if the procedures required under paragraph (1) are not established before the last day of such 2-month period, the Under Secretary shall not begin the process of selecting, training, and deputizing pilots until the date on which the procedures are established or the last day of the 4-month period beginning on such date of enactment, whichever occurs first.

"(3) ISSUES TO BE ADDRESSED.—The procedural requirements established under paragraph (1) shall address the following issues:

"(A) The type of non-lethal weapon to be used by a Federal cockpit officer.

"(B) The standards and training needed to qualify and requalify as a Federal cockpit officer.

"(C) The placement of the non-lethal weapon of a Federal cockpit officer on board the aircraft to ensure both its security and its ease of retrieval in an emergency.

"(D) Analyze the risk of catastrophic failure of an aircraft as a result of the discharge of a non-lethal weapon to be used in the program into the avionics, electrical systems, or other sensitive areas of the aircraft.

"(E) The division of responsibility between pilots in the event of an act of criminal violence or air piracy if only one pilot is a Federal cockpit officer and if both pilots are Federal cockpit officers.

"(F) Procedures for ensuring that the non-lethal weapon of a Federal cockpit officer does not leave the cockpit if there is a disturbance in the passenger cabin of the aircraft or if the pilot leaves the cockpit for personal reasons.

"(G) Interaction between a Federal cockpit officer and a Federal air marshal on board the aircraft.

"(H) The process for selection of pilots to participate in the program based on their fitness to participate in the program.

"(I) Storage and transportation of non-lethal weapons between flights, including international flights, to ensure the security of the weapons.

"(J) Methods for ensuring that security personnel will be able to identify whether a pilot is authorized to carry a non-lethal weapon under the program.

"(K) Methods for ensuring that pilots (including Federal cockpit officers) will be able to identify whether a passenger is a law enforcement officer who is authorized to carry a firearm aboard the aircraft.

"(L) Any other issues that the Under Secretary considers necessary.

"(4) PREFERENCE.—In selecting pilots to participate in the program, the Under Secretary shall give preference to pilots who are former military or law enforcement personnel.

"(5) CLASSIFIED INFORMATION.—Notwithstanding section 552 of title 5 but subject to section 40119 of this title, information developed under paragraph (3)(E) shall not be disclosed.

"(6) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Under Secretary shall provide notice to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate after completing the analysis required by paragraph (3)(E).

"(c) TRAINING, SUPERVISION, AND EQUIPMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Under Secretary shall provide the training, supervision, and equipment necessary for a pilot to be a Federal cockpit officer under this section at no expense to the pilot or the air carrier employing the pilot.

"(2) TRAINING.—

"(A) ELEMENTS.—The training of a Federal cockpit officer shall include, at a minimum, the following elements:

"(i) Training to ensure that the officer achieves the level of proficiency with a non-lethal weapon required under subparagraph (C)(i).

"(ii) Training to ensure that the officer maintains exclusive control over the officer's non-lethal weapon at all times, including training in defensive maneuvers.

"(iii) Training to assist the officer in determining when it is appropriate to use the officer's non-lethal weapon.

"(B) TRAINING IN USE OF NON-LETHAL WEAPONS.—

"(i) STANDARD.—In order to be deputized as a Federal cockpit officer, a pilot must achieve a level of proficiency with a non-lethal weapon that is required by the Under Secretary.

"(ii) CONDUCT OF TRAINING.—The training of a Federal cockpit officer in the use of a non-lethal weapon may be conducted by the Under Secretary or by a training facility approved by the Under Secretary.

"(iii) REQUALIFICATION.—The Under Secretary shall require a Federal cockpit officer to requalify to carry a non-lethal weapon under the program. Such requalification shall occur quarterly or at an interval required by a rule issued under subsection (i).

"(d) DEPUTIZATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Under Secretary may deputize, as a Federal cockpit officer under this section, a pilot who submits to the Under Secretary a request to be such an officer and whom the Under Secretary determines is qualified to be such an officer.

"(2) QUALIFICATION.—A pilot is qualified to be a Federal cockpit officer under this section if—

"(A) the pilot is employed by an air carrier;

"(B) the Under Secretary determines that the pilot meets the standards established by the Under Secretary for being such an officer; and

"(C) the Under Secretary determines that the pilot has completed the training required by the Under Secretary.

"(3) DEPUTIZATION BY OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The Under Secretary may request another Federal agency to deputize, as Federal cockpit officers under this section, those pilots that the Under Secretary determines are qualified to be such officers.

"(4) MAXIMUM NUMBER.—The maximum number of pilots that may be deputized under the pilot program as Federal cockpit officers may not exceed 1 percent of the total number of pilots that are employed by air carriers engaged in air transportation or intrastate transportation on the date of enactment of this section.

"(5) REVOCATION.—The Under Secretary may revoke the deputization of a pilot as a Federal cockpit officer if the Under Secretary finds that the pilot is no longer qualified to be such an officer.

"(e) COMPENSATION.—Pilots participating in the program under this section shall not be eligible for compensation from the Federal Government for services provided as a Federal cockpit officer. The Federal Government and air carriers shall not be obligated to compensate a pilot for participating in the program or for the pilot's training or qualification and requalification to carry non-lethal weapons under the program.

"(f) AUTHORITY TO CARRY NON-LETHAL WEAPONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Under Secretary shall authorize, while the program under this section is in effect, a Federal cockpit officer to carry a non-lethal weapon while engaged in providing air transportation or intrastate air transportation. Notwithstanding subsection (c)(1), the officer may purchase a non-lethal weapon and carry that weapon aboard an aircraft of which the officer is the pilot in accordance with this section if the weapon is of a type that may be used under the program.

"(2) PREEMPTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal or State law, a Federal cockpit officer, whenever necessary to participate in the program, may carry a non-lethal weapon in any State and from one State to another State.

"(3) CARRYING NON-LETHAL WEAPONS OUTSIDE UNITED STATES.—In consultation with the Secretary of State, the Under Secretary may take such action as may be necessary to ensure that a Federal cockpit officer may carry a non-lethal weapon in a foreign country whenever necessary to participate in the program.

"(g) AUTHORITY TO USE FORCE.—Notwithstanding section 44903(d), the Under Secretary shall prescribe the standards and circumstances under which a Federal cockpit officer may use, while the program under this section is in effect, force against an individual in the defense of the flight deck of an aircraft in air transportation or intrastate air transportation.

"(h) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—

"(1) LIABILITY OF AIR CARRIERS.—An air carrier shall not be liable for damages in any action brought in a Federal or State court arising out of a Federal cockpit officer's use of or failure to use a non-lethal weapon.

"(2) LIABILITY OF FEDERAL COCKPIT OFFICERS.—A Federal cockpit officer shall not be liable for damages in any action brought in a Federal or State court arising out of the acts or omissions of the officer in defending the flight deck of an aircraft against acts of criminal violence or air piracy unless the officer is guilty of gross negligence or willful misconduct.

“(3) LIABILITY OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.—For purposes of an action against the United States with respect to an act or omission of a Federal cockpit officer, the officer shall be treated as an employee of the Federal Government.

“(i) DURATION OF PROGRAM.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the pilot program established under this section shall be in effect for a period of 2 years beginning on the date that the 250th pilot is deputized as a Federal cockpit officer under this section.

“(2) RISK-BENEFIT DETERMINATION DECISION.—Before the last day of such 2-year period, the Under Secretary shall determine whether the security benefits of the Federal cockpit officer pilot program outweigh the risks of the program.

“(3) TERMINATION OF PILOT PROGRAM.—If the Under Secretary determines under paragraph (2) that the risks outweigh the benefits, the Under Secretary shall publish a notice in the Federal Register terminating the pilot program and explaining the reasons for the decision to terminate and shall provide adequate notice of the decision to Federal cockpit officers and other individuals as necessary.

“(4) CONTINUATION OF PROGRAM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If the Under Secretary determines under paragraph (2) that the benefits outweigh the risks, the Under Secretary shall publish a notice in the Federal Register announcing the continuation of the program, shall continue the program in accordance with this section, and may increase the number of Federal cockpit officers participating in the program.

“(B) NOTICE OF PROPOSED RULEMAKING.—Not later than 60 days after the date of publication of a notice continuing the program, the Under Secretary shall issue a notice of proposed rulemaking to provide for continuation of the program. In conducting the proposed rulemaking, the Under Secretary shall readdress each of the issues to be addressed under subsection (b)(3) and, in addition, shall address the following issues:

“(i) The use of various technologies by Federal cockpit officers, including smart gun technologies and nonlethal weapons.

“(ii) The necessity of hardening critical avionics, electrical systems, and other vulnerable equipment on aircraft.

“(iii) The standards and circumstances under which a Federal cockpit officer may use force against an individual in defense of the flight deck of an aircraft.

“(5) REEVALUATION.—Not later than 3 years after the date of publication of a notice continuing the program, the Under Secretary shall reevaluate the program and shall report to Congress on whether, in light of additional security measures that have been implemented (such as reinforced doors and universal employee biometric identification), the program is still necessary and should be continued or terminated.

“(j) APPLICABILITY.—

“(1) EXEMPTION.—This section shall not apply to air carriers operating under part 135 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, and to pilots employed by such carriers to the extent that such carriers and pilots are covered by section 135.119 of such title or any successor to such section.

“(2) PILOT DEFINED.—The term ‘pilot’ means an individual who has final authority and responsibility for the operation and safety of the flight or, if more than 1 pilot is required for the operation of the aircraft or by the regulations under which the flight is being conducted, the individual designated as second in command.”

SENATE—Tuesday, July 9, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Thank you, Lord, for the resources You have given to us. You ask us to be good stewards—to invest resources wisely. And we want to do so. But this is hard when others deceive us. We have learned recently how professionals in a few companies took unfair advantage of investors. They lost track of their accountability to truth and their commitment to integrity. As a result, investors lost billions of dollars, tens of thousands of workers lost their jobs, and untold numbers of people lost confidence in the financial markets. Please comfort and help those who were harmed. Bless the many men and women who operate their companies honestly. Help strengthen the integrity of America's financial system so that people can be better stewards of our resources. And give the Senators wisdom to know how to legislate to preserve an effective financial accounting system for the businesses of America. In Your Holy Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JACK REED led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, July 9, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. JACK REED thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in a short time there will be a period of morning business until 10:15 today, with times evenly divided, the first half under the control of the Republicans and the second half under the control of the Democrats. At 10:15, the Senate will resume consideration of the accounting reform bill.

I was advised by my junior colleague from Nevada last evening that he was notified by the Republican leader that this afternoon the Republicans will move to the nuclear waste veto matter which has been hanging around for a while. If that is the case, that will take up most of the afternoon, I am sure, with a 10-hour statutory time available that could go into tomorrow. We have been working since we learned about this yesterday to work something out that would be more definite. We will keep the Senate advised as soon as we know something more.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:15 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

Under the previous order, the first half of the time shall be under the control of the Republican leader or his designee.

The Senator from Nebraska.

DISASTER ASSISTANCE FOR AGRICULTURE

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, I rise this morning to speak about the severe drought gripping much of our Nation. The situation is developing into a national problem, a big problem that can no longer be ignored.

Last week in Nebraska, I met with farmers and livestock producers who have witnessed firsthand the devastation caused by this drought. For many agricultural producers in Nebraska and throughout America, hope is again for this growing season. Their crops are wilted and their pastures are scorched and bare. These producers need assistance. For them, there are no options left. Drought is not just a Nebraska problem; it is a national problem.

According to the National Drought Mitigation Center at the University of Nebraska, about 15 percent of the country experiences drought in a typical year. Today, more than 40 percent of the entire country is suffering from drought. The West is bone dry. "Exceptional" and "extreme" drought, as it is termed by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, NOAA, has ravaged the Southwest as well as Wyoming, Montana, and parts of Texas. The Southern States, along with sections of New England, such as represented by the distinguished Presiding Officer, and the Mid-Atlantic States are also reeling from drought.

This past spring was the driest in 107 years of data reporting in Colorado and the second driest in Arizona and southern California. Keep in mind, it is only July 9. To add to this problem, the drought has brought swarms of grasshoppers which are now infecting many parts of Nebraska as well as the entire Midwest.

The economic effects of drought are often hard to measure. Unlike a hurricane or tornado, droughts area measured in years, sometimes decades. The worst drought in recent memory, in the summer of 1988, covered almost 40 percent of the entire United States. It cost an estimated $40 billion. Compare that to Hurricane Andrew in 1992, which cost about $30 billion.

The bad news is the current drought could be much worse than the drought of 1988, considering we still must endure July and August, the hottest months of the year. Already, Nebraska is estimating at least $307 million damage to its economy, with the loss to crops and pastureland alone estimated at $150 million. Again, this is only a midyear estimate.

Government action is now necessary. Congress is quick to respond to floods, earthquakes, and hurricanes. Now we must respond to this national drought. Some of my colleagues may second-guess the need for additional agricultural assistance. After all, Congress, for the past 3 years, has provided billions of dollars for supplemental agricultural spending, mostly due to low commodity prices. Emergency payments were supposed to cease with passage of the new farm bill this year.

Clearly, the new farm bill, which will spend an estimated $180 billion or more over the next 10 years, provides almost no safety net for farmers and ranchers hurt by drought. That is one of the farm bill's biggest faults, as Senators ROBERTS and LUGAR pointed out often during the farm bill debate on the floor of the Senate. Increased price supports could not help much when there is no crop to be harvested.

During the Senate farm bill debate, Senator LUGAR brought up the idea of expanded crop and livestock revenue insurance. Senator ROBERTS called for more emphasis on direct, decoupled, nonproduction-related payments. Both are solid, sound ideas, but Congress did not listen. Now we must play with the cards we have dealt ourselves.

It is important we do not hold drought-plagued agricultural producers hostage to a shortsighted farm bill. The President said any new agricultural disaster aid must come from the $73.5 billion in new agricultural funding. I agree with the President. We should find the necessary offsets for this new funding. But we must act quickly to find the necessary disaster aid to help minimize the drought's impact on local economies. America will see a ripple effect on these economies. The economies of many States are directly tied to agriculture and food production.

We are not limited to just an agricultural disaster package. There are other ways in which Washington is helping our agricultural producers this year.

Secretary Veneman has been making disaster declarations for counties across the country, which allows eligible agriculture producers to receive emergency low-interest loans. She has approved grazing and haying on Conservation Reserve Program acres throughout the country, including almost 40 Nebraska counties.

Also, I would like to remind my colleagues of an important bill recently introduced by the senior Senator from New Mexico. Senator DOMENICI's National Drought Preparedness Act S. 2528 would move us away from the costly, ad-hoc, response-oriented approach to droughts to a comprehensive, proactive national drought policy. We need an established program that will allow local, State, and Federal Governments to work together—to coordinate a drought preparedness strategy.

Droughts do not happen overnight, and the damage they cause to the economy and environment do not go away with one measurable rainfall. Government cannot bring an end to the drought or bring pastures and crops back to life. But we can help our agriculture producers survive, weather this crisis, and prepare for the next growing season. With many of my colleagues in the House and Senate, I am working on an emergency drought disaster package to bring before the Congress.

I urge all of my colleagues to help find a responsible way to get America's agriculture producers the help they need—as soon as possible.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, how much time do the Republicans have?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republicans have 5 minutes 30 seconds.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Presiding Officer advise me if the time of the Republicans has run out?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Republicans has expired.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

What is the order now?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader or his designee has control of the remaining 20 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you very much, Mr. President.

CORPORATE ENVIRONMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to discuss a matter that is very related to the whole issue of corporate responsibility. Sometimes the people do not connect the issue of the environment with corporate responsibility, but I am going to do that this morning with the Senator from Illinois, as we touch on some of the policies of this administration, which are really, in my view, putting us in a very dangerous situation in terms of taking a stand with the corporate polluters versus the people of this country who deserve to have protection from environmental hazards. This is not a discussion about ideology, it is really a discussion about the checks and balances that there have to be in this country so we can have robust economic growth along with the sense that there will be responsibility and people will be protected.

I have found out, in my long history in politics, that in fact if you are good to the environment and if you care about the health and safety of people, you will have, actually, development of new businesses to deal with pollution and you will have prosperity.

We go back in the environmental movement to the days when rivers in this country were on fire, they had so many hazards in the waterways, such as in Ohio and other places. That is what started the Clean Air Act. We go back to the days when you could literally see the air in some of our big cities. We turned it around in such a way that the people benefited both from a healthier environment and a robust economy.

So this argument that we should step away and no longer say to corporations that pollute: You have a responsibility to clean up your mess—the fact that this administration seems to take that position is at odds with our history and is at odds with what we ought to be doing.

On Monday, July 1, a report by the Environmental Protection Agency inspector general was released stating that the EPA has designated 33 sites in 18 States for cuts in financing for the Superfund cleanup program. The reason this administration decided to do this is, frankly, they are depleting the Superfund, which is a fund that is set up via a fee by polluting corporations, and the administration is not interested, at least to now, in making sure that we have that fund, that that fund is not depleted.

The report that was commissioned several months ago by Democrats in the House finally did come back. I have to say, as the chair of the Superfund Subcommittee in the Environment Committee, we have been trying to get this information from EPA for several months. We have not been able to get it. I thank my colleagues in the House for going to the inspector general.

The 33 sites are National Priorities List sites, and they are among the most toxic in the country. So instead of saying, we are going to clean them up, the administration is walking away from them.

What do these sites contain? Let me say, you may want to know this information but you would not want to get near it. The sites contain arsenic, Agent Orange, dioxin, and industrial pesticides.

The report indicates that EPA's Atlanta regional office staff say there is a bottleneck on new starts for cleanup and that there must be maintenance of cleanup progress. The Dallas office reports they have problems. They did not receive $56 million. The Kansas office says they need $100 million. The Denver regional office at EPA says they did not get the $10 million they were to receive.

Here is the point. For an administration that says, trust the people who are working in the field, this administration has turned its back on their regional offices.

One of the excuses the administration comes up with—and then I will yield to my friend from Illinois—is that, well, it is true the Clinton sites were cleaned up—I have a chart showing progress that was made under President Clinton. We see, in the last 4 years of his administration, 88, 87, 85, and 87 sites. That is the number of sites that were cleaned up. Under this administration, they told us, when we asked them, they wanted to clean up 75, 65, and 40 sites. Now it is 47, 40, and 40 sites.

We are looking at a terrible diminution in the number of sites cleaned.

One of the things they say is: Well, there are no tough sites left. They were cleaned up by Clinton.

So we did a little research. One of the sites that was cleaned up by the Clinton administration is the Illinois site.

I want to bring this up so my colleague can hear this. The NL Industries Corporation smelter site in Illinois was cleaned up. For them to say they didn't clean up any hard sites is ridiculous. The site was used for lead smelting operations from the turn of the century until 1983. It included 100 square blocks and 1,600 residences were affected. Ten percent of the children living near the site had blood levels of lead above 10 micrograms, which is an unsafe level. The responsible parties fought the EPA. We had to go to the Superfund to get the money. It was not a simple site. The cleanup was important for the children. The site was cleaned up.

Why was it cleaned up? Because the Clinton administration used that Superfund, and they were committed to cleaning up the site. I am sure my colleague will attest to the fact that the site is quite different today.

That is the reality. That is why we are on the floor—because this is a great program. It had some problems in the early stages. It wasn't moving. But by 1992 it really started.

It is a sad day when I am here to tell you that this administration is not cleaning up its act.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I thank the Senator from California for her leadership on this issue. I hope the Senator will bear with me for a moment. I think for those who are following this debate, a little history goes a long way.

There was a time in America, in my home State of Illinois, when people would strip-mine coal. They would literally drag the coal out from just below the surface and leave behind this terrible wasteland that looked like craters on the Moon. Over time, people started saying: It is not only ugly but the runoff is dangerous, and we ought to require the coal companies to restore the land after they have strip-mined so it can be used for something—so it looks a little bit like it looked when God created it.

That really reflected a kind of change in the national conscience which said it isn't enough to take the land, or take parts of America, blight them, make them toxic and dangerous for someone to make a profit.

We said, as we looked around America and found toxic waste and hazardous waste, that is a danger to our environment, to the people living nearby and to the ground water. President Carter—a Democrat—said let us put together a Superfund tax where the corporations, the businesses which are polluting businesses, will pay a tax to pay for the cleanup of the mess left from this industrial work.

The reason I wanted to get into this history a little bit is that, as I understand from staff, although it was passed by President Carter—obviously, a Democrat—and a Democratic Congress, a few years later, in 1986, President Ronald Reagan—a Republican—not only reauthorized the same program but said, yes, corporations around America should be held accountable; they should pay a fee or a tax to clean up the toxic waste sites across America through the Superfund. Not only did this Republican President restore it, but he raised the tax. He said we need more money to do this on a national basis.

Now we had a bipartisan commitment to this concept from a Democratic President, Jimmy Carter, and a Republican President, Ronald Reagan. They assumed that America would stand behind the concept of corporate responsibility when it came to environmental cleanup.

Now enter President Clinton at a later point. He said to Congress, we need to reauthorize this same law to keep up this program. What he ran into was a Republican Congress, a probusiness Congress, that said: We don't believe that is the right thing to do any longer. So they wouldn't reauthorize the Superfund. The collection of about $2 billion or more a year to clean up America started evaporating as the taxes and fees were not being collected to clean up the polluted mess across America. Now we are down to $25 million, or $26 million for all of this mess around America.

The Senator from California, in a bipartisan effort, I might add, with Senator CHAFEE of Rhode Island, says we ought to reestablish the Superfund. If it was good enough for Democratic President Carter and Republican President Reagan, if Congress—Democratic and Republican—thought it was a good concept, why are we walking away from it?

When I was back home on the Fourth of July break, I went to two sites in Chicago. I went to one site in the southeastern part of the city. It is an industrial graveyard from an operation not many years ago, and 75,000 manufacturing jobs are now gone. I went to the LTV Steel Corporation site, a company that declared bankruptcy just last December. I took a look at the toxic waste which the Superfund left behind.

I went up to north to Waukegan. For over 20 years, Waukegan has been dealing with mercury and PCBs dumped into Lake Michigan—something we value as part of our national heritage. They are in a position of limbo with a suspended mix of efforts to clean it up. It is within a stone's throw of Lake Michigan. We pointed out the outboard marine site. Waukegan said this is a site which won't be cleaned up because the Superfund is not being funded again by the Bush administration. They refused to put the money into environmental cleanup.

That is irresponsible. It is irresponsible not to hold liable the corporations that produce the chemicals that we find over and over again at these sites. If they want to make a profit producing these chemicals, is it unreasonable to suggest they pay a fee so they can clean up the aftermath of the use of these chemicals which have blighted parts of America?

I say to the Senator from California, as we view this issue, some say: There go the Democrats again with their outlandish environmental policies. But if you look at the history, this has been a bipartisan approach from the start. I ask the Senator from California, who has been our leader on this issue, if she could comment on that.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I first thank the Senator from Illinois for his eloquence on this subject. Again, this isn't really a theoretical thing at all. We see the progress that has been made during the last 8 years. It is amazing to look at the difference because there were, frankly, problems with the Superfund Program for a while. They weren't really doing a good job of it. Under Carol Browner began a shake-up, and they began to get through all the problems.

Here we are. My friend is right. This is not only important for the environment, and not only bipartisan, as he pointed out, but it is really, in my view, a probusiness situation. When they leave behind a mess such as this, then they go somewhere else and go before the planning commission in some little place in Illinois, or California, or Louisiana, and this big company XYZ wants to come in and do some work over here with a plant, what is their record? Now the county supervisor or the planning commission can look back and say: Oh, my God, the XYZ company left a mess in California. The truth is that the company is not going to be welcomed.

To me, it is probusiness to clean up your mess. It is going to help your business. It is, in fact, a part of corporate responsibility. It is our responsibility to make sure that polluters pay.

I want to share a chart with my friend that shows what has happened with this program.

In 1995, 82 percent of the cleanup was paid by industry. Either through responsible parties coming forward and paying for the mess they made, or the Superfund itself—as my friend points out, as opposed to the dollars that are collected from a fee on polluters—only 18 percent had to be made up by the general taxpayers.

By 2003, if the situation continues to deteriorate under this President, 46 percent of the cleanup is going to be paid for by our constituents who had nothing to do with the dumping of those materials. This should fall on the people who made the mess. The polluters should pay. It is part of the Superfund.

As we talk about corporate irresponsibility and as we talk about ways we can put confidence back into the system, we shouldn't forget that corporate responsibility is reflected in the Superfund Program. It has been reflected. It has been a successful program. That is why it was embraced by many Republicans. That is why I hope it will be again embraced by many, although I am very concerned, frankly, that the bipartisan nature of this is slipping away in this atmosphere today.

I am very proud to have Senator CHAFEE of Rhode Island as the key Republican sponsor of the Superfund legislation.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator will yield for one last question, is this not the same basic concept as protecting pensions? If a corporation accepts the responsibility of going into business, hiring people, making a promise that the people who work for them when they retire will have a pension, then that corporation violates its trust and responsibility and destroys the pension, like the Enron officers cashing in on stock while the pensioners were losing everything they had in their 401(k)s isn't this a similar situation where if a business in America says, I want to create a business here and I want to try to make a profit and I am going to hire people to do it, isn't there kind of a social contract involved here that says: You can't pollute the land and walk away from it as part of doing business in America; part of your responsibility as a corporation is to take responsibility for keeping that natural heritage we all respect so much protected.

Eliminating Superfund takes away the responsibility of these corporations to clean up their own mess and says no to the families at large and businesses across America: It is now your responsibility.

It seems to me, whether we are talking about pensions or the environment, corporate responsibility really applies at the same level. I ask the Senator from California, does she see a distinction here? I do not.

Mrs. BOXER. That is an excellent analogy. If a corporation makes certain promises to the people they employ and that is part of the contract and if a corporation comes into a community to be a good neighbor and that is part of the deal, then they should not walk away from either. That is why it is important sometimes that the Government, the House and Senate, the President, make sure that we get in and restore justice.

Talk about justice, a lot of these sites—take a look at the sites shown in purple on the chart—are the major polluted sites. They are in every State but North Dakota. My State has the second number. New Jersey has the first. Illinois is up there, unfortunately. There are many States that are affected.

We are talking about walking away from a lot of places when we deplete the Superfund. We are walking away from "polluter pays."

I thank my friend. There is a definite analogy to be made. He has made it very clearly, as he usually does when we talk about the issue of corporate responsibility.

Today we are concentrating on the WorldComs and Global Crossings and the Enrons and Arthur Andersens and the ImClones. We know those names now. Those names and what is behind those names has propelled us in the Senate to take up the very important Sarbanes bill. The Leahy bill will be added, and the bill will become the Sarbanes-Leahy bill. We have been propelled into action because of, as President Bush says, these bad actors.

I think it goes beyond that to the system. There are no checks and balances in that system. If we don't have a Superfund, I say to the Senator, we have no check and balance on those bad actors who would walk away.

Let me say to my friend, is he familiar with that site I talked about that was cleaned up?

Mr. DURBIN. I am. I say to the Senator from California, we have three Superfund sites in the State of Illinois, another 18 that must go on the list, and 6 others we think could be eligible. Frankly, if the Bush administration's proposal goes through, it means no Superfund, no money, no cleanup. That means the public health hazard will remain.

Today the President will go to New York to talk about corporate responsibility. He wants to throw the bad actors in jail. That makes sense. The simple fact is, an actress accused of shoplifting in California is facing potentially more prison time than any officer of Enron is facing today. I might say, if the President's premise, his principle is sound, why do we stop and say it is just when it comes to accounting? If a corporation walks away from its responsibility in terms of cleaning up the environmental mess they have left behind, why aren't we talking about that as being the kind of misconduct that should not only be condemned but punished?

Instead, the administration has said: We don't even want to hold them liable for paying for it. No penalty, no crime, they are not even going to be liable for paying for the cleanup.

The Senator from California has made the point so well today: Corporate responsibility goes way beyond accounting. It goes into the handling of pensions. It goes into the environmental responsibility that corporations have.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. LANDRIEU). According to the earlier order, morning business is now closed.

PUBLIC COMPANY ACCOUNTING REFORM AND INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 2673, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2673) to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for public companies, to create a Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, to enhance the standard setting process for accounting practices, to strengthen the independence of firms that audit public companies, to increase corporate responsibility and the usefulness of corporate financial disclosure, to protect the objectivity and independence of securities analysts, to improve Securities and Exchange Commission resources and oversight, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4174

(Purpose: To provide for criminal prosecution of persons who alter or destroy evidence in Federal investigations or defraud investors of publicly traded securities, and for other purposes)

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE], for Mr. LEAHY, for himself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. MILLER, Mr. EDWARDS, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. CORZINE, and Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 4174.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, on behalf of Senator LEAHY and others, I offer this amendment which is identical to the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, S. 2010, passed unanimously by the Judiciary Committee some time ago.

I view the Leahy amendment as a necessary complement to the Sarbanes bill. In fact, I think of them as two parts of a vital whole—one element guarantees the truth and honesty of corporate accounting. The other is a deterrent. It says that corporate misrepresentation will be forcefully punished—with jail time.

We need both. We need to improve oversight and independence of the accounting profession and hold corporate wrongdoers accountable for their actions.

We need to act comprehensively to fulfill our promise to the American people that integrity, honesty, and accountability will be restored to our markets.

Last week Senator LEAHY and I wrote to the President requesting his views on this bill and the Sarbanes accounting reform bill.

Unfortunately, the President has not answered our letter yet. But I hope to hear today—and I think we need to hear today—that he supports and will sign both.

We welcome the President's apparent new enthusiasm for reforming our corporate culture, and we look forward to working with him.

The administration needs to understand that the time for half measures has long passed. The American people expect and deserve comprehensive reform.

Combining the Leahy bill and the Sarbanes bill accomplishes just that. The Sarbanes bill revamps the regulatory structure that protects our markets. There will be better rules and a new oversight body to send corporations and accountants a clear message that they must tell the truth on their balance sheets.

The Leahy bill is every bit as vital. Let me summarize a few of its provisions very quickly. The amendment has three aims: punishing criminals; preserving evidence; and protecting victims.

The Leahy amendment punishes criminals by creating a tough new 10-year felony for securities fraud. It provides prosecutors with a new tool that is flexible enough to keep up with the most complex new fraud schemes and tough enough to deter violations on the front end. It also provides a mechanism to raise the fraud sentences that are already on the books.

The amendment also preserves evidence of fraud. It creates two new criminal anti-shredding provisions in federal law. As we say in the Arthur Andersen case, even the most straightforward obstruction of justice cases can be difficult to prove under current law.

Senator LEAHY's bill closes the loopholes and makes document destruction in fraud cases an unambiguous crime.

The amendment does not just protect "paper evidence," it also protects valuable testimony from people. For the first time, the Leahy bill creates federal protection for whistleblowers. People like Sherron Watkins of Enron will be protected from reprisal for the first time under federal law. This bill is going to help prosecutors gain important insider testimony on fraud and put a permanent dent in the "corporate code of silence."

Finally, the amendment will protect victims of fraud. By extending the time period during which victims can bring cases to recoup their losses, the Leahy bill removes the reward for those fraud artists who are especially gifted at concealing what they've done for lengthy periods of time.

Cases where victims have lost their entire life savings should be decided on the merits, not based on procedural hurdles that may now be used to throw legitimate victims out of court.

The Leahy bill also prevents fraud artists from declaring bankruptcy to shut out their victims. The amendment would accomplish this by making security fraud debts nondischargeable in bankruptcy.

Again, the Leahy provisions enjoyed broad bipartisan support in the Judiciary Committee when passed unanimously in April. They are needed now more than ever, as the number and magnitude of corporate misstatements continues to pile up and the lost jobs, lost pensions, and ruined lives continue to mount.

We must act to punish criminals, no matter what color their collar. I hope all Senators will support this amendment.

Madam President, the country will be listening intently to what the President says this morning. A crucial test will be whether he explicitly supports—and pledges to sign—the Sarbanes bill with the Leahy legislation attached. We cannot restore confidence in the integrity of our markets with anything else.

Senator LEAHY is on the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DASCHLE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I very much appreciate what my good friend, the distinguished majority leader, has said. I also compliment him for his leadership on corporate accountability. Sometime ago, he asked the Chairs of the various committees with possible jurisdiction in this area to get together and craft comprehensive legislation. I recall that meeting very well. I recall the majority leader—back at the time of Enron, before WorldCom and these other business scandals came forward—expressing his concern that not only is this a blight on the business community, it is a blight on our system of doing things. He also spoke about how terrible it was for those people, not only workers who had their pensions tied up in the fortunes of the companies they are working with and are relying on for truthfulness—what they assumed is the truthfulness—of the accounting statements of those companies, but also many other people who invest, whether it is a farmer in South Dakota or a merchant in a small town in Vermont who is putting savings in and hoping this will be part of his retirement.

The majority leader made it very clear to all of us that we were to set politics aside, we were to set any kind of special interests aside, and we were to bring up the best legislation possible for the people of America. That was what Senator DASCHLE charged us to do, and that is what I am trying to do with this amendment.

We have excellent accounting reform legislation, S. 2673, crafted by Chairman SARBANES and the Senate Banking Committee. I commend Senator SARBANES and the other members of the Banking Committee—for their bipartisan leadership. Senator SARBANES had people on both sides of the aisle come out with this legislation, and I am proud to cosponsor it.

My amendment is to add to Senator SARBANES legislation, not to detract from it. As he knows, I offered to add a criminal penalty and other provisions that are within the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee.

My amendment is cosponsored by Senator MCCAIN and the majority leader, Senators DURBIN, HARKIN, CLELAND, LEVIN, KENNEDY, BIDEN, FEINGOLD, MILLER, EDWARDS, BOXER, CORZINE, KERRY, SCHUMER and BROWNBACK. Our amendment is identical to S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act that was reported unanimously by both Republicans and Democrats in the Judiciary Committee on April 25.

Again, following the very clear direction the distinguished majority leader gave us when he said we have to protect the people of this country, we have to make sure corporate America can do its best to help our economy, this would create tough new penalties for securities fraud and would preserve evidence of fraud to make sure there is accountability for crimes that not only cheat investors but rob the markets themselves of the public trust. The markets have stolen the public's trust.

According to press reports, President Bush has changed his mind on corporate reform and may support new penalties for corporate fraud, and I welcome the President's change of heart. The Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act creates tough, new, criminal penalties for corporate fraud, and Senator DASCHLE and I have written to the President asking for his support.

The time for watching and hand-wringing is over. We have to take action to start the slow but critical process of restoring confidence in the books of our publicly traded companies.

The collapse of Enron has become a symbol of a corporate culture where greed has been inflated and accountability devalued. Unfortunately, Enron is no longer alone. Joined by Arthur Andersen, Global Crossing, Tyco, Xerox, and, most recently, WorldCom, the misrepresentations about the financial health of our Nation's largest companies have shaken confidence in our financial markets.

If we do nothing to learn and apply the repeated lessons of the last months, we are only going to compound the problem. That was obviously the belief of the unanimous Judiciary Committee vote when the committee approved S. 2010. Innocent consumers, investors, and employees depend on stock investments for their children's college funds, for their retirement nest eggs, and for their savings. Every week brings news of a new financial scandal. Just look at the effect on the stock market. It has been devastating. This has repercussions not just for companies that depend on our capital markets to grow their businesses and our economy, but certainly also for the average American family. More than one in every two Americans invest in our financial markets, and they are watching what we do here. They deserve action.

Those who defraud investors should be held accountable for their crimes. The Leahy-McCain amendment, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, is all about accountability and transparency—two bedrocks of our market.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states that the majority leader has yielded for a question only while retaining the floor. Is that the intent of the majority leader?

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, it was my intention to yield for a question, but I thank the distinguished chair of the Judiciary Committee for his extraordinary leadership and the effort he has made to bring this legislation to the floor.

This is the Leahy amendment and, as I noted, it passed unanimously in large measure because I think he was able to work with our colleagues on both sides of the aisle.

I am happy to yield the floor so he and others may seek recognition.

Mr. LEAHY. My question would be this to the majority leader: Would he agree, in his experience, that nothing would focus the attention more of those executives who have defrauded their own companies and investors than the idea that they would actually go to jail for it, and not walk off with hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, it is for that reason that I believe this package ought to be viewed in its entirety. The Sarbanes bill lays out the framework. The Leahy bill lays out the penalties for violating that framework. So I don't know that you can have one without the other and not have a complete package.

So I appreciate very much the work of the Judiciary Committee, and the chair of the Judiciary Committee especially, for the work in allowing this package to come to the floor. I thank him again for the contributions he made.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I seek recognition in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 4175 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4174

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. What is the rule on recognition? Is it not the Senator who seeks recognition first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the managers of the amendment are entitled to be recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. On my amendment? May I be recognized on my own amendment which is pending before the Chair? Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers of the legislation have priority.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas, the manager of the underlying bill.

Mr. LEAHY. Would the managers of the amendment include the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky? Is he one of the managers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers of the legislation are the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Texas.

Mr. LEAHY. The distinguished Presiding Officer has recognized, however, the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Texas. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], for Mr. McCONNELL, proposes an amendment numbered 4175 to amendment No. 4174.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEAHY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will continue.

The assistant legislative clerk continued with the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I want to make sure people understand what the Leahy-McCain amendment is. I realize there may be those who want to amend it to make life easier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont suspend? The regular order is the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to calling off the reading of the amendment? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide for certification of financial reports by labor organizations and to improve quality and transparency in financial reporting and independent audits and accounting services for labor organizations)

At the end of the amendment add the following:

SEC. 302. CORPORATE AND LABOR ORGANIZATION RESPONSIBILITY FOR FINANCIAL REPORTS AND DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.

(a) FINANCIAL REPORTS.—

(1) CERTIFICATION OF REPORTS.—

(A) CERTIFICATION OF PERIODIC REPORTS.—Each periodic report containing financial statements filed by an issuer with the Commission pursuant to section 13(a) or 15(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(a) or 78o(d)) shall be accompanied by a written statement by the chief executive officer and chief financial officer (or the equivalent thereof) of the issuer.

(B) CERTIFICATION OF FINANCIAL REPORTS BY LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Each financial report filed by a labor organization with the Secretary of Labor pursuant to section 201(b) of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (29 U.S.C. 431(b)) shall be accompanied by a written statement by the president and secretary-treasurer (or the equivalent thereof) of the labor organization.

(ii) DEFINITION.—In this subparagraph, the term "labor organization" has the meaning given the term in section 3 of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (29 U.S.C. 402).

(2) CONTENT.—The statement required by paragraph (1) shall certify the appropriateness of the financial statements and disclosures contained in the periodic report or financial report, and that those financial statements and disclosures fairly present, in all material respects, the operations and financial condition of the issuer or labor organization.

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 201(b) of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 is amended, in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by inserting "(and accompanied by the statement described in section 302(a)(1)(B) of the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002)" after "officers".

(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) FINANCIAL REPORTING FOR LABOR ORGANIZATIONS EQUIVALENT TO REQUIRED REPORTING OF PUBLIC COMPANIES.—Section 201 of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (29 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(d)(1) In the case of a labor organization with gross annual receipts for the fiscal year in an amount equal to $200,000 or more, the information required under this section shall be reported using financial reporting procedures comparable to procedures required for periodic and annual reports of public companies pursuant to sections 12(g), 13, and 15 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78l(g), 78m, and 78o).

“(2)(A) Such information shall be reviewed by a certified public accountant using generally accepted auditing standards applicable to reporting companies under the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934.

“(B) Such audit shall be conducted subject to requirements comparable to the requirements under section 10A of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1).

“(3) Such information shall be reported using generally accepted accounting procedures comparable to the procedures required for public companies under sections 12(g), 13, and 15 of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78l(g), 78m, and 78o).

“(4) The authority provided under this subsection shall be in addition to the authority provided under subsection (b) and section 208, regarding reporting procedures and review of information required under this section.”.

(2) REMEDIES AND PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 210 of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (29 U.S.C. 440) is amended—

(A) by striking “Whenever” and inserting “(a) Whenever”; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

“(b)(1) If the Secretary finds, on the record after notice and opportunity for hearing, that any person has willfully violated any provision of section 201(d), the Secretary may impose a civil monetary penalty in an amount not to exceed the amount for any comparable violation under section 21B(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u-2).

“(2) In the case of a violation of an auditing requirement under section 201(d)(2) by a public accountant, the Secretary may impose a civil monetary penalty in the same manner as penalties are imposed under section 10A(d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78j-1(d)).

“(3) For purposes of any action brought by the Secretary under paragraph (1), any person who knowingly provides substantial assistance to another person in violation of a provision of section 201(d), or of any rule or regulation issued under such section (including aiding, abetting, counseling, commanding, or inducing such violation) shall be deemed to be in violation of such provision to the same extent as the person to whom such assistance is provided.

“(c)(1) Any person who makes or causes to be made any statement in any report or document required to be filed under section 201(d) which statement was at the time, and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made, false or misleading with respect to any material fact, shall be liable to any person (not knowing that such statement was false or misleading) who relied upon such statement. A person seeking to enforce such liability may sue at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction.

“(2) In any such suit the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit, and assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys’ fees, against either party litigant.

“(3) The recovery and statute of limitation provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of section 18 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78r) shall apply for purposes of any action under this subsection.

“(d) In any action arising under subsection (c) or (d) or in connection with any provision of section 201(d), the provisions of section 27(c) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77z-1(c)) regarding abusive litigation shall apply.”.

(3) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Labor, shall promulgate such regulations as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out the provisions and purposes of this subsection (including the amendments made by this subsection) and to ensure the provisions of this subsection are carried out in a manner comparable to the manner any similar provisions are carried out by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, so people understand what the Leahy-McCain amendment is, it is the Corporate and Criminal Accountability Act. It is about accountability, and it is about transparency. I think everybody—investors, corporate managers, or anybody else—will tell you that accountability and transparency are the bedrock of our economy, of our markets.

If one is going to invest in a company, one wants to know what the company does and what the books say. One wants to be able to rely upon their reports.

Transparency will instill confidence, and accountability helps enforce transparency and forthright financial decisions. We do not just rely on the better angels of our nature; we rely on the fact that somebody is going to be there to enforce it.

We cannot stop greed, but we can stop greed from succeeding. This bipartisan amendment is going to send wrongdoers to jail and save documents from the shredder, and that sends a powerful and clear message to potential wrongdoers: Don’t do it.

The measure enjoys wide support. The amendment is supported by law enforcement officials, regulators, and numerous whistleblowers, and consumer protection advocates. I have letters of support from these advocates, and I will, at the end of my statement, ask consent to print them in the RECORD.

Let me summarize some of the provisions. This bipartisan amendment has three prongs to restore accountability: punishing and preventing fraud, preserving the evidence of fraud, and protecting victims of fraud.

S. 2010, as unanimously reported, accomplishes these goals in a number of ways. It is going to create a tough new Federal felony for securities fraud for a 10-year maximum penalty. The idea of 10 years in the slammer is going to focus the attention of those who are more interested in taking their money and hiding it in offshore bank accounts.

As one who was a prosecutor, I was surprised to learn that unlike bank fraud, health care fraud, and even bankruptcy fraud, there is no specific Federal crime of securities fraud to protect victims of fraud related to publicly traded companies.

Can you imagine, Madam President, while all this talk has been going on, it turns out there is no specific crime of securities fraud. This bill would create such a felony with a tough 10-year jail sentence.

The amendment provides for a review of the existing sentencing guidelines for fraud cases and for organizational misconduct to make them tougher as well.

The new crimes and enhanced criminal penalties in this bill were worked out among Senators HATCH, SCHUMER, and me, and unanimously supported by the Judiciary Committee, and I thank Senators HATCH and SCHUMER for their support.

The Leahy-McCain amendment also creates two new anti-shredding penalties which set clear requirements for preserving financial audit guides and close loopholes in current anti-shredding laws.

These provisions close loopholes in current laws and set a clear requirement that corporate audit documents must be saved for 5 years. We, incidentally, picked that time period because that is the statute of limitation for most Federal crimes.

These provisions are crucial in preventing recurrences of what happened at Arthur Andersen.

These provisions will preserve evidence that helps law enforcement officers and prosecutors focus immediately on the evidence. It takes a few minutes to warm up the shredder, but it can take years for prosecutors and victims to put together a case without key documents.

The amendment protects corporate whistleblowers. Senator GRASSLEY and I worked out these bipartisan measures in the Judiciary Committee. I thank the Senator from Iowa for his assistance and his constant leadership over the years on whistleblower rights.

When sophisticated corporations set up complex fraud schemes, corporate insiders are often the only ones who can disclose what happened and why.

Unfortunately, the Enron case also demonstrates the vulnerability of corporate whistleblowers to retaliation under current law. This is a memo from outside counsel to Enron management. They were afraid there might be a whistleblower. It said:

You also asked that I include in this communication a summary of the possible risks associated with discharging (or constructively discharging) employees who report allegations of improper accounting practices.

Then he goes on to give them the good news:

Texas law does not currently protect corporate whistleblowers. The supreme court has twice declined to create a cause of action for whistleblowers who are discharged. . . .

In other words, if they dare tell about corporate misdeeds, fire them, it is not going to hurt.

After this high-level employee of Enron reported improper accounting practices, the Enron executives were not thinking about firing the accountants who were doing wrong; they wanted to fire the whistleblower, their own employee. Why? Because they were pocketing the money. They were getting that money out to their bank accounts as fast as they could, and they did not want anybody to say so.

The bipartisan whistleblower protections are supported by the National Whistleblower Center, the Government Accountability Project, and Taxpayers Against Fraud. They call S. 2010 "the single most effective measure possible to prevent further recurrences. . . ."

The measure lengthens the statute of limitation by extending it from the earlier of 1 year from discovery or 3 years from the fraud to 2 years from discovery or 5 years from the fraud.

Senators FEINSTEIN and CANTWELL worked hard to craft a fair compromise on this provision in the Judiciary Committee.

Indeed, the last two SEC Chairmen from both parties, Arthur Levitt and Richard Breeden, both agreed that the current short statute of limitations is unfair to fraud victims.

Attorney General Christine Gregoire testified before the Judiciary Committee in the Enron State pension fund litigation that the current short statute has forced some States to forego claims against Enron.

In Washington State alone, the short statute of limitations could cost hard-working State employees—firefighters and police officers—nearly $50 million in lost Enron investments.

Last week, Xerox announced it was restating its revenue back 5 years by $6.4 billion. Madam President, as a law student, I remember sitting in the gallery listening to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Mr. Dirksen, give his well-known speech: "A billion here and a billion there, and soon you're talking about real money."

Imagine a corporation claiming they made a mistake in their revenue of $6.4 billion for the past five years. The disclosures raise the specter of innocent investors who, through no fault of their own, will be barred from recouping losses.

We make the debt from security law violations nondischargeable in bankruptcy. We protect fraud victims by amending the bankruptcy code to make judgments and settlements based upon security law violations nondischargeable. Corporate leaders should not be allowed to take the money, run, file bankruptcy, and keep from ever paying any securities fraud judgment. The State security regulators strongly support this change. You cannot have one set of rules which say if you steal $500 from a store, you can go to jail. But if you steal $50 million from the corporate boardroom, keep the money. That makes no sense. Everywhere I went in the State of Vermont last week, people were saying: If I committed an act, if I stole something, if I cash a bad check for $100, I run the risk of going to jail.

But what do you do if you get $50 million or $100 million? You are home free.

Criminal conduct deserves criminal penalties. Corporate CEOs who rob their company, who rob the pension funds of their employees, who rob the trust of the American people, are criminals. They ought to go to jail.

The steel bars, maybe that will give a conscience to some of these people like Kenneth Lay and others who obviously do not have one. This gives prosecutors, the investigators, and victims the tools to hold corporate wrongdoers accountable.

The people who are involved in such massive criminal activity ought to pay. The American people ought to know they will have to pay. If they don't, there will be a whole lot more fraud.

I ask unanimous consent to have a number of letters printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAXPAYERS AGAINST FRAUD,
Washington, DC.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTABILITY PROJECT,
Washington, DC, July 5, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: The Government Accountability Project (GAP) and the Taxpayers Against Fraud (TAF) reaffirm our support for the Leahy Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability amendment to S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002.

Initially introduced as S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act, was unanimously reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee on May 6, 2002. This amendment is a landmark proposal. It promises to make whistleblower protection the rule rather than the exception for those challenging betrayals of corporate fiduciary duty enforced by the Securities and Exchange Commission. It would be the single most effective measure to prevent recurrences of the Enron and Worldcom debacles as well as similar threats to the nation's financial markets, shareholders and pension holders.

GAP is a nonprofit, nonpartisan public interest law firm dedicated since 1976 to helping whistleblowers, those employees who exercise freedom of speech to bear witness against betrayals of public trust that they discover on the job. GAP has led the campaign for passage of nearly all federal whistleblower laws over the last two decades. TAF is a nonprofit, nonpartisan public interest organization dedicated to combating fraud against the Federal Government through promotion and use of the federal False Claims Act and its qui tam whistleblower provisions. TAF supports effective anti-fraud legislation at the federal and state level.

The Leahy amendment to S. 2673 is outstanding good government legislation. It closes the loopholes that have meant whistleblowers proceed at their own risk when warning Congress, shareholders, and their own management's Board Audit Committees of financial misconduct threatening the health of their own company, investor confidence and the nation's economy. We hope we can count on your support to add this state of the art whistleblower protection system in S. 2673. If you have any questions regarding the Leahy amendment, please call Tom Devine at GAP (202-408-0034 ext. 124), or Doug Hartnett (ext. 136).

Sincerely,

JIM MOORMAN,
Executive Director, TAF.
TOM DEVINE,
Legal Director, GAP.

NORTH AMERICAN SECURITIES
ADMINISTRATORS ASSOCIATIONS, INC.,
Washington, DC, July 5, 2002.

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: NASAA supports S. 2673, The Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, and opposes efforts to weaken its provisions. State securities regulators believe there is an immediate need to restore investor confidence in our securities markets.

Passage of the Leahy amendment, which incorporates S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud and Accountability Act of 2002, into the accounting reform bill would send a strong deterrent message to potential securities violators by providing prosecutors with new and better tools to punish those who defraud our nation's investors. Our focus is on Section 4, which would prevent the discharge of certain debts in bankruptcy proceedings. At the present time, the bankruptcy code enables defendants who are guilty of fraud and other securities violations to thwart enforcement of the judgments and other awards that are issued in these cases.

We support passage of the Leahy amendment because it strengthens the ability of regulators and individual investors to prevent the discharge of certain debts and hold defendants financially responsible for violations of securities laws. This issue is of great interest to state securities regulators, and we hope you'll support it on the Senate floor.

In addition, state securities regulators enclose Title V of S. 2673—Analyst Conflicts of Interest—in its current form and strongly oppose any amendment to this title that would reduce our ability to investigate wrongdoing and take appropriate enforcement actions against securities analysts. An amendment drafted by Morgan Stanley was circulated that, we believe, would have prohibited state securities regulators from imposing remedies upon firms that committed fraud, if it involved securities analysts and perhaps even broker-dealers that deal with individual investors. Clearly this approach is ill-advised, especially in today's climate.

What message would be sent to Main Street investors if the states' investigative and enforcement authority were weakened? (Additional information on this proposal was delivered to your office last week.)

Please vote for passage of S. 2673, for the Leahy amendment, and against any amendments to curtail state securities enforcement actions.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH P. BORG,
NASAA President,
Alabama Securities
Director.

CHRISTINE A. BRUENN,
NASAA President-
elect, Maine Securities Administrator.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR
AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION,
Washington, DC, April 17, 2002.

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, DC.
Legislative Alert!

DEAR SENATOR LEAHY: The sudden and spectacular collapse of Enron has jeopardized the retirement security of millions of hardworking Americans and exposed systemic failures of our securities laws. If we are to prevent future Enrons and restore the credibility of America's capital markets, aggressive reform is required. This week the Judiciary Committee will markup S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002, which is an important part of this effort and deserves your support.

The measures embodied in S. 2010 will help protect working families and their retirement funds from future Enrons by strengthening the penalties for securities and accounting fraud, and destruction of audit papers. The bill provides strong civil and criminal penalties for conduct such as document shredding by auditors and conspiracies to defraud investors; and bars those who commit securities fraud from using the bankruptcy system to avoid compensating the victims of such fraud. It also lengthens the statute of limitations for civil lawsuits by the victims of securities fraud, making it more difficult for those who commit these crimes to escape having to compensate their victims.

S. 2010 is an important part of the comprehensive reforms Congress needs to enact in response to the conflicts in the capital markets exposed by the collapse of Enron. The AFL-CIO urges you to support S. 2010 at this week's Judiciary Committee markup.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM SAMUEL
Director, Department of Legislation.

CONSUMERS UNION,
Washington, DC.

Re Support for S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002

CONSUMER FEDERATION OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, April 16, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: Consumers Union and the Consumer Federation of America urge your support for S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002, sponsored by Senator Patrick Leahy, when it comes before the Judiciary Committee for markup on Thursday. This proposal adds important provisions to the civil and criminal laws, which will both, deter and when necessary, punish securities fraud.

ENHANCING ENFORCEMENT AND SANCTIONS FOR SECURITIES FRAUD

S. 2010 takes the following important steps to strengthen enforcement and penalties for securities fraud:

It creates a new felony for the act of defrauding shareholders of publicly traded companies.

It creates a new felony for destruction of evidence or creation of evidence with intent to obstruct a federal agency or criminal investigation.

It provides whistleblower protection to employees of publicly traded companies when they act lawfully to disclose information about fraudulent activities within their company.

It enhances the ability of state attorneys general and the SEC to use civil RICO to enforce existing law; currently only the US attorney general has such authority currently under RICO.

ADOPTING A REALISTIC STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

S. 2010 also increases the ability of defrauded investors to recover their losses by lengthening the statute of limitations. The bill would set the statute of limitations to the earlier of 5 years after the date of the fraud or three years after the fraud was discovered.

The current statute of limitations, the result of a 5-4 vote in a 1991 Supreme Court decision, sets up an unrealistically short timetable for bringing private suits and needs to be corrected. Former President Bush's SEC Chairman Richard Breeden, former President Clinton's SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt, and state securities regulators have all supported an extension of the statute of limitations.

Suits by defrauded investors have long been recognized by securities regulators, including former SEC Chairman Levitt, as an important deterrent against fraud. Moreover, securities fraud is often well-concealed and not readily apparent to investors until, in some cases, years after the fraud has been committed. As Chairman Levitt testified in 1995 before the Senate Banking Committee, "Extending the statute of limitations is warranted because many securities frauds are inherently complex, and the law should not reward the perpetrator of a fraud who successfully conceals its existence for more than 3 years."

Justices O'Connor and Kennedy, in their vigorous dissent in the 1991 Supreme Court case, also supported a longer statute of limitations. Justice Kennedy wrote, "The most extensive and corrupt schemes may not be discovered within the time allowed for bringing an express cause of action under the 1934 Act. Ponzi schemes, for example, can maintain the illusion of a profit-making enterprise for years, and sophisticated investors may not be able to discover the fraud until long after its perpetration . . . By adoption of a three year period of response, the Court makes a 10(b) action all but a dead letter for many injured investors who by no conceivable standard of fairness or practicality can be expected to file suit within three years after the violation occurred. In so doing, the Court also turns its back on the almost uniform rule rejecting short periods of response for fraud-based actions."

Indeed, some states' pension funds may have to forego claims against Enron for securities fraud that occurred in the late 1990s because of this short statute of limitations. Washington State's Attorney General discussed this problem when she testified before your Committee in February of this year. "In fact, for Washington State, our claim in the [Enron] case is for approximately $50 million, when in fact our losses are in excess of $100 million. But because of the statute of limitations, we're not able to make that claim." (underlining added).

The current statute of limitations rewards those who are able to conceal their fraud for a relatively short time with immunity from private liability. It also includes a limit of one-year from the time of discovery, which encourages a rush to the courthouse.

The criminal conduct surrounding the collapse of Enron, and the fact that many claims for fraud will be time-barred by the current short statute of limitations, have drawn attention to the need for reform. S. 2010 includes important investor protection measures. We urge your support for this bill in the Judiciary Committee April 18.

Sincerely,

SALLY GREENBERG,
Senior Counsel.

No More Enrons—Support S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002

DEAR MEMBER OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE: We are writing on behalf of the members of state Public Interest Research Groups to urge your strong support for S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002, sponsored by Senator Patrick Leahy, when it comes before the Judiciary Committee for markup on Tuesday. This proposal adds important provisions to the civil and criminal law to both deter and, when necessary, punish securities fraud. Please oppose weakening amendments.

S. 2010 takes the following important steps to strengthen enforcement and penalties for securities fraud:

It creates a new felony for the act of defrauding shareholders of publicly traded companies.

It creates a new felony for destruction of evidence or creation of evidence with intent to obstruct a federal agency or criminal investigation.

It provides whistleblower protection to employees of publicly traded companies when they act lawfully to disclose information about fraudulent activities within their company.

It enhances the ability of state attorneys general and the SEC to use civil RICO to enforce existing law; currently only the U.S. attorney general has such authority currently under RICO.

Importantly, S. 2010 also increases the ability of defrauded investors to recover their losses by lengthening the statute of limitations. The bill would reasonably and sensibly set the statute of limitations to the earlier of 5 years after the date the fraud occurred or three years after the fraud was discovered. A securities law violation is often a complex, multi-year enterprise. Indeed, Enron's recent accounting restatements went back five years. Under the fraudster-friendly current law, some state pension fund claims against Enron may be time-barred.

S. 2010 includes numerous important investor protection measures to assist whistleblowers, fraud victims, and law enforcement agencies. We urge your strong support for this bill to help restore investor confidence in the Judiciary Committee April 18. Please oppose weakening amendments. For more information about the full state PIRG platform to protect employees, investors and taxpayers from future Enron/Andersen debacles, please visit <http://www.enronwatchdog.org>. Please contact me with questions at either 202-546-9707x314 or ed@pirg.org.

NATIONAL WHISTLEBLOWER CENTER,
Washington, DC, April 17, 2002.

Hon. MARIA CANTWELL,
Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CANTWELL: The National Whistleblower Center strongly supports S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002. This law would protect employees who disclose Enron-related fraud to the appropriate authorities.

One of the most notorious loopholes in current whistleblower protection law exists under the securities laws, in which employees who report fraud against stockholders have no protection under federal law. It is truly tragic that employees who are wrongfully discharged merely for reporting violations of law, which may threaten the integrity of pension funds or education-based savings accounts, have no federal protection.

This point was made abundantly clear by the recently released internal memorandum from attorneys for Enron. According to Enron's own counsel, employees who were blowing the whistle on Enron's misconduct were not protected under federal law, and could be subject to termination. Unfortunately, the Enron attorney was correct.

It is imperative that the next time a company like Enron seeks advice from counsel as to whether they can fire an employee, like Sharon Watkins (who merely disclosed potential fraud on shareholders), the answer must be a resounding "no." That can only happen if the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act is enacted into law.

Respectfully submitted,

KRIS J. KOLESNIK,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL,
Washington, DC, July 3, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: It has come to my attention that the substance of S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002, will be offered as an amendment to S. 2673, the Public Company Accounting Reform and Investor Protection Act of 2002, as early as next week.

I have attached a letter to Senator LEAHY from seven Attorneys General written last April in support of the substance of S. 2010, in order to make these views known as you consider this legislation.

If you have any questions or concerns, please feel free to call Blair Tinkle, NAAG's Legislative Director at 202-326-6258.

Sincerely,

LYNNE ROSS,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ATTORNEYS GENERAL,
Washington, DC, April 17, 2002.

Hon. PATRICK LEAHY,
Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN LEAHY: We would like to take this opportunity to express our support for your bill, S. 2010, the Corporate and Criminal Fraud Accountability Act of 2002, which is pending before the Senate.

As you know, the proposal would allow state Attorneys General to seek to enjoin racketeering activities under the federal RICO statute. Such added authority would enhance the ability of Attorneys General to protect their citizens from unlawful activities by organizations both within and outside the borders of our individual states.

In addition, to restore accountability, S. 2010 provides prosecutors new and better tools to effectively prosecute and punish criminals who defraud investors by:

Creating a new, 10-year felony specifically aimed at securities fraud.

Enhancing fraud and obstruction of justice statutes where evidence is destroyed and in fraud cases, where there are many victims or where any victim is financially devastated.

Creating two new document destruction felonies establishing a new felony shredding crime and requiring the preservation of audit documents for 5 years.

Creating new protections for corporate whistleblowers.

Finally, the bill protects victims' rights by:

Protecting securities fraud victims from discharge of their debts in bankruptcy.

Extending the statute of limitations in securities fraud cases.

We appreciate your efforts to enact this important legislation. Please feel free to contact us if we can provide further assistance in this effort.

Sincerely,

Carla J. Stovall, Attorney General of Kansas, President of NAAG; Hardyress, Attorney General of Oregon, Chairman, Enron Bankruptcy Working Group; Christine Gregsire, Attorney General of Washington; William H. Sorrell, Attorney General of Vermont; Ms. Edmonds, Attorney General of Oklahoma, President-Elect of NAAG; Thurbert E. Baker, Attorney General of Georgia; Betty D. Montgomery, Attorney General of Ohio.

Mr. LEAHY. I appreciate the distinguished majority leader introducing this amendment and yielding to me.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MILLER. I was going to send an amendment to the desk but I understand there is one pending. I ask unanimous consent I have up to 8 minutes to discuss this amendment now, which I will send later.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Reserving the right to object, and I probably will not, I hoped for an opportunity to briefly explain the second-degree amendment that is pending at the desk. If the Senator thinks it might be helpful just to determine the order of discussion, perhaps it is more appropriate to discuss the amendment that is pending over one that might have been pending.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. I would like to get in the queue somewhere along the line.

Mr. REID. I ask the question of the Senator from Kentucky, How long does the Senator from Kentucky wish to speak?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I will be happy to wrap up in 5 or 6 minutes. I want to summarize what the amendment is about.

Mr. SARBANES. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the Senator from Kentucky be recognized for 5 minutes to speak to the second-degree amendment that has been offered, that is pending, and that be followed by the Senator from Georgia to speak for 8 minutes.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, I wonder if I may be recognized after the sequence that has been discussed for about 1 minute.

Mr. REID. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection to the original request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. REID. I do not object to the original 13 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I thank my friend from Georgia. I will briefly discuss the second-degree amendment. I expect to vote for the underlying bill, but we ought to, in the name of equity, apply the same principles in the underlying bill we are seeking to apply to corporations to labor unions.

The amendment I sent to the desk requires union financial statements to be audited by an independent accountant using procedures that mirror those of public companies under Federal securities laws. It imposes civil penalties for violations of these new auditing requirements that mirror those imposed on the Security Exchange Act of 1934. Third, it requires that the Union President and Secretary-Treasurer certify the accuracy of financial reports, mirroring a similar requirement for CEOs and CFOs in the Sarbanes bill.

We are debating how to better oversee and enforce the audit requirements for large corporations that were first established under the Securities Act of 1933. It may shock many to learn that labor unions are not even required to have independent audits of the financial statements they file with the Department of Labor—or should I say that they are required to file. Many unions apparently thumb their nose at the requirement. A study by the Office of Labor Management Standards found that 34 percent of all unions filed late financial reports or no reports at all.

If we are serious about protecting the investing public from the financial fraud of corporations and accountants, we should be equally serious about protecting the day-to-day American worker—the plumbers, the machinists, the longshoremen, and the steelworkers—from the financial fraud of union officials.

One prominent union official recently said that:

Over the coming months you will no doubt hear more about the Enron scandal and the many thousands of people who have lost their pensions because of corporate greed.

I agree with that. What we do not hear enough of are the stories of union greed. It is only fair to share some of them today. I have a rather long list I will discuss later in the debate, but let me cover a few of them in my allotted time. We have heard of Arthur Andersen, but has anyone heard of Thomas Havey? That is the accounting firm where a partner confessed to helping a bookkeeper conceal the embezzlement of hundreds of thousands of dollars from a worker training fund of the International Association of Ironworkers. And in an eerie parallel to the Enron scandal, the Havey accountants revealed startling information—10 years ago, the then General Counsel for the Ironworkers Union said that if the accounting firm refused to assist in the union scheme to conceal financial mismanagement, the accounting firm should be fired. Sadly, the accounting firm complied.

We have all heard of Global Crossing, but has anyone heard of ULLICO? That is the multibillion-dollar insurance company owned primarily by unions and their members' pension funds that invested $7.6 million in Global Crossing. Apparently, ULLICO directors received a sweetheart investment deal that allowed them to make millions on the sale of stock. The union pension funds, however, dried up with Global Crossing's demise.

There is much more. An accountant within the National Association of Letter Carriers embezzled more than $3.2 million from union funds over an 8-year period to buy 8 cars, 2 boats, 3 jet skis, a riding mower, and 105 collectable dolls. A former official of the Laborers' Union District Council in Oregon, Idaho, and Wyoming is in jail for accepting hundreds of thousands of dollars in kickbacks for directing money into a ponzi-like investment scheme that defrauded Oregon labor unions of $355 million.

I have a number of additional examples that I wish to get to later, but I do want to say in summary, again, what my amendment is about, just so everyone will understand as we move subsequently to a vote. It first requires union financial statements to be audited by an independent accountant using procedures that mirror those of public companies under the Federal securities laws; second, it imposes civil penalties for violations of these new auditing requirements that mirror those imposed under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; and, third and finally, it requires that the Union President and Secretary-Treasurer certify the accuracy of their financial reports, which mirrors a similar requirement for CEOs and CFOs in the Sarbanes bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MCCONNELL. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. Of course, there is a special statutory arrangement that governs labor organizations. I take it this proposal—has this come to us from the Department of Labor?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to the Senator from Maryland, it did not come from the Department of Labor. It came from my office. This is something we have been looking at over the last week or 10 days, thinking that, since the very worthwhile requirements of corporations and accounting firms, under the bill of the Senator from Maryland, make sense if we are looking to protect investors, we should also protect union members from similar kinds of casual exploitation.

Mr. SARBANES. But under the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, the Department has certain authorities it can invoke in dealing with the kind of problems the Senator has outlined. At least that is my understanding under the current state of the law. Is that correct?

Mr. MCCONNELL. I don't know what the position of the Department of Labor is on the amendment I am offering. But it is my belief that if the amendment were not necessary, we would not be offering it here today. This is something I am sure we are going to discuss further as we move along.

Mr. SARBANES. I am sure the Senator would be able to find out from the Secretary.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I expect I could find out from the Secretary of Labor, but I chose not to do that.

Mr. GRAMM. I don't know whether you could or not.

Mr. MCCONNELL. She has her job and I have mine.

AMENDMENT NO. 4176

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized under the previous order.

Mr. MILLER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the pending amendment be temporarily set aside so I be allowed to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. MILLER] proposes an amendment numbered 4176.

Mr. MILLER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to require the signing of corporate tax returns by the chief executive officer of the corporation)

At the end add the following new title:

TITLE VIII—CORPORATE TAX RETURNS
SEC. 801. SIGNING OF CORPORATE TAX RETURNS
BY CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6062 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to signing of corporation returns) is amended by striking the first sentence and inserting the following new sentence: "The return of a corporation with respect to income shall be signed by the chief executive officer of such corporation."

(b) EXECUTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to returns filed after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield?

There is a little bit of confusion. I want to be sure he is setting aside the entire amendment, the Leahy and the McConnell amendment, and he is offering a first-degree amendment? That is what I understood when I talked to the Senator and to what I had agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the Chair's understanding.

Mr. SARBANES. No. What was the request? I thought the unanimous consent request was to set aside the McConnell amendment and offer the Miller amendment to the Leahy amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. It was the pending amendment.

Madam President, I wanted to be sure that we set aside both Leahy and McConnell. This is a new issue, a first-degree amendment. That was the basis that I understood it on and on the basis of that I had no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia was going to offer an amendment that would be considered at a different time, an independent first-degree amendment, to be spoken about now and considered at a later time. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LEAHY. Reserving the right to object, I want to make sure I fully understand. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no request pending.

Mr. LEAHY. I am sorry. I thought there was a request to lay aside my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That request has been granted.

Mr. LEAHY. But then my—what is the parliamentary situation with my amendment? Maybe that is the best way to ask it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia obtained the consent to set aside the pending amendment in order to offer a first-degree amendment.

Mr. LEAHY. I understand.

Mr. SARBANES. Would the call for the regular order at the completion of the statement of the Senator from Georgia, or disposition of his amendment, bring back before the body the Leahy amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, it would.

Mr. LEAHY. The Senator from Georgia spoke to me earlier. I do not want in any way to interfere with that. I do want to accommodate him. I just wanted to make sure, also for my own schedule, where we stood.

I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer and I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee and of course I thank the distinguished Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Texas.

Madam President, there is a good old boy from down in Georgia named Jerry Reed, who went to Nashville several years ago and made it big as a tremendous guitar picker, singer, and songwriter. He had a big hit a while back. Maybe some of you remember it. It was called "She Got the Gold Mine and I Got the Shaft."

I thought about that song of Jerry Reed's as I watched what has happened lately on the corporate scene. The big shots of Enron and WorldCom and others, they got the gold mine while the poor employees and the innocent stockholders got the shaft.

If a picture is worth a thousand words, take a look at this gold mine. It was built partly on the backs of those Georgia schoolteachers who, each month, put their hard-earned money into the Georgia teachers' retirement fund. The fund in Georgia lost $78 million from Enron and another $6 million from WorldCom. Think how many monthly contributions by how many struggling teachers that represents. And think about those other thousands of employees who have lost their life savings, not even to mention the thousands of employees who have lost their jobs—at least 450 jobs were wiped out in Georgia alone so far.

Yes, a few big shots got the gold mine and a lot of little folks got the shaft.

I am as probusiness as anyone in this body. I yield to no officeholder when it comes to supporting business issues. As Governor and Senator, I have worked to give tax cuts and tax incentives and pay for the training of their employees—all to provide a probusiness environment in which the entrepreneurial spirit can thrive and prosper and create jobs. But, folks, there comes a time when so much greed and so many lies become so bad—even if it is only by a few—that something meaningful has to be done. We must act quickly to protect the investor, provide some security for the worker, and restore confidence in the marketplace because, make no mistake about it, today we have a crisis in the integrity of corporate America.

That is why I have worked with Senator SARBANES in perfecting his bill, and I strongly support it. I am pleased that it is before us this week. I also commend President Bush for making the strong recommendations he is going to be making in New York.

But I think we need to do at least one other thing, so I have a simple amendment. It is only two short paragraphs in length, but it goes to the very essence of fairness. It simply says that, when the taxman cometh, we all—workers and high-dollar bosses alike—must face him just alike, without any go-betweens or liability firewalls or corporate veils.

This is how it would work. There is a standard tax form called 1040. I know there are more sophisticated ones for big business, but the principle I am getting at is the same. This is what it says:

Under penalties of perjury, I declare that I have examined this return and accompanying schedules and statements, and to the best of my knowledge and belief they are true, correct and complete.

And then it is signed here by Joe Sixpack. Joe Sixpack of America signs those kinds of forms. There were more than 14 million of those forms filed in April. If Joe Sixpack is required to sign this oath for his family, why shouldn't Josephus Chardonay be required to sign that same oath for his corporation?

So my little amendment simply requires that henceforth the chief executive officer of all publicly owned and publicly traded corporations must sign the corporation's annual Federal tax return.

Currently, there is an IRS rule that corporations can designate any corporate officer to sign their tax return. That will not get it. Let's be specific. Let's put it into law: The CEO is the one who is to sign the tax return and must be accountable for it.

Where I come from it is expected that those being paid "to mind the store" should at least know whether the store is losing or making money.

Harry Truman had a sign on his desk in the Oval Office that said, "The Buck Stops Here." For Truman, it meant that he was accountable.

He took the blame. He suffered the consequences when things went bad.

For some of today's CEOs, it is just the opposite. They want no accountability. They shift the blame to others. They hide behind that corporate veil. And, it seems, they rarely if ever pay the consequences.

Their former workers cancel plans for their children to go to college while they sip from champagne flutes in their mansions in Boca and Aspen.

For these CEOs, Truman's famous sign has changed from "The Buck Stops Here" to "The Bucks Go Here."

Our system of collecting taxes is based upon the premise that individual taxpayers will take all steps necessary to ensure that the financial information in the tax return is accurate.

If Joe Sixpack fudges the numbers, he doesn't get a pass from paying penalties or going to jail. I find it outrageous that the same is not a part of the mind set for those in the corporate culture.

If any CEO is not willing to sign the company tax return—if they are not willing to take steps to satisfy themselves that their corporation is accurately reporting financial information—then those CEOs have no right to the prestige and respect that goes with the position they hold.

What is good for the goose is good for the gander. So I urge my colleagues to simply hold our CEOs to the same standard that we now impose upon our average wage earners.

Treat them the same, "Treat 'em" the same. That is the American way. That is what the voters out there want us to do and that is what they expect us to do. "Treat 'em" the same.

And you can take that back home this summer and explain it. Some of these other reforms, I fear, will be more difficult to explain.

Treat 'em the same.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

S.J. RES. 34—APPROVAL OF YUCCA MOUNTAIN DEPOSITORY MOTION TO PROCEED

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, in accordance with the rules of the Senate as set forth in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, the chairman of the Energy Committee, Senator BINGAMAN, introduced S.J. Res. 34 on April 9. The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources held 3 days of hearings. On June 5, the measure was favorably reported to the Senate.

As the ranking member of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, pursuant to the recommendations of the committee and in accordance with the rules of the Senate as set forth in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act that contemplates Senate action within 90 days of introduction, I now move to proceed to S.J. Res. 34.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, during the last little bit we have been working on an orderly way to proceed on this matter. We knew before the break that the minority was going to bring this matter up, and we did not know exactly when.

I spoke a couple times yesterday with the distinguished Republican leader. I spoke to my colleague, Senator ENSIGN, on a number of occasions. And the day has arrived and the motion has been made. As a result of that, even though Senator ENSIGN and I are extremely disappointed, this matter is now before us. It is here.

We think it would be best resolved as follows: I ask unanimous consent that there be 4 hours 30 minutes for debate on the pending motion to proceed, equally divided between Senator REID of Nevada and Senator MURKOWSKI, or their designees; that upon the use or yielding back of that time, the Senate vote on the motion to proceed; that if the motion to proceed is agreed to, then H.J. Res. 87 be read a third time and the Senate vote on final passage of the joint resolution; that the motion to reconsider that vote be laid on the table, and the preceding all occur without any intervening action or debate.

If I could say just one thing, Madam President, the reason that I felt so strongly, as did Senator ENSIGN, about this is it is important that Members have the benefit of some debate prior to this most important vote. So that is the reason. I appreciate the general tenure of what is going on here. I know there are strong feelings on both sides. Nobody is happy with what we are doing, but it is the best we could do.

Mr. LOTT. Reserving the right to object, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. LOTT. I do reserve the right to object but state in the beginning I would not and will not object. I think this is an appropriate way to proceed. This is something that has been fully disclosed to all on both sides of the argument. We certainly understand and respect the desire of the Senators from Nevada, Mr. REID and Mr. ENSIGN, to have an opportunity to make their case and to maximize their effort against this proposal.

I also made it clear that it was the intent of the proponents, with the leadership of Senator MURKOWSKI and others on both sides of the aisle, that under the law there is a time limit. We have to act on this issue by July 27 or, in fact, this proposal could not go forward. The veto of the Governor, in effect, would be upheld by inaction.

Not wanting to get squeezed down to the end of the session and having it unclear as to how we would proceed, we thought the fair thing to do to both sides was to say on this Tuesday, we would move to proceed to the issue which would be nondebateable unless agreement was worked out to the contrary.

As a result of that being what our intent was, the motion was made, and we have now worked out this unanimous consent agreement which is agreeable to all sides. There would be debate before the vote, and then there would be a vote on the motion to proceed which would be really, in fact, the vote. So this afternoon somewhere not later than 5:45, or perhaps earlier, as I understand it—Senator REID can maybe comment on this—there would be a vote on the motion to proceed.

While nothing else is precluded, it would be clearly my understanding that it would not be necessary to have a vote on final passage if the motion to proceed is agreed to. Everybody understands that is the vote. We have checked on both sides of the aisle, and this agreement is acceptable. That would be the vote.

Another good thing about this is it allows everybody to know when the critical vote will come. It also means, instead of 10 hours, we will go 4½ hours. There is no demand or desire that we go beyond that. Then we can get back to other business; hopefully, defense-related appropriations bills and the auditing bill and get that work done this week.

This is a fair way to proceed. Everybody is on notice. I am glad to work with the opponents and proponents to come to this agreement.

With that statement, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. As the leader has indicated, both sides have sought to determine if there would be a requirement for a rollcall vote, and both sides have come back no. If there is anyone who attempts in the ensuing period to be mischievous in that regard for whatever reason, it would be very hard for them to get a second for that vote. I think we should go forward on this basis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, let me echo the comments of the two leaders relative to what we have before us. I would like to point out in the spirit of cooperation, the motion to proceed is nondebateable. We have agreed on a 4½-hour time limit. It is my anticipation that we will yield some time back.

I just wanted to point out the reality that any Member could have brought this up for action. We worked with Senator REID and the other concerned Senators trying to reach some accord. We think this is a fair and equitable arrangement within the Senate prerogatives, particularly given the opportunity on both sides for 4½ hours of debate, and then expedite final disposition so we can move on to other business. I did want to point out, the motion to proceed ordinarily is nondebateable.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I wanted to emphasize a couple of points. First of all, Senator REID and I obviously vehemently oppose this bill and oppose this bill even being on the floor today. Given the reality of what we were dealing with, we knew that we could not delay this bill coming to the floor beyond the July 27 deadline that has been talked about. Because of that, we believed the procedural vote was so important that we have some debate prior to the vote. As Senator MURKOWSKI has pointed out, it is a nondebateable motion. We appreciate the cooperation of the other side because it is such a precedent-setting motion that we believed it was important to have the debate.

We appreciate the cooperation for this 4½ hours of debate prior to the motion to proceed, understanding that if our side loses that vote, it will automatically go to a voice vote and nobody is going to request—although not precluded—no one will request a recorded vote.

I will not object at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Madam President, it is my understanding that the unanimous consent request has been accepted; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has asked if there is further objection to the request.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nevada.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess between the hours of 12:30 and 2:15 today for the weekly party conferences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged to either side as it will be for a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. REID. Madam President, I yield time to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Madam President, I start my remarks today by saying a lot of the information that I am going to talk about this morning on this procedural vote—I will be talking more about the substance of the issue this afternoon, but this morning on the procedural vote, a lot of the information has been gathered through hours and hours of research with the Congressional Research Service, with the former Parliamentarian of the Senate, Bob Dove, as well as several conversations with the current Parliamentarian.

I believe strongly this research is accurate and that the precedent we will be setting is a very dangerous precedent.

Today's vote is not just about whether the Senate should allow nuclear waste to be dumped in Nevada. It is also about the authority of the majority leader, and the very meaning of a Senate majority.

According to the rules of the Senate, it is true, any member may offer a motion to proceed to a bill or resolution. In practice, we all know that's not the way it works. The Senate isn't governed just by rules; it is also governed by traditions. And one of those traditions is that the majority leader—and only the majority leader—can set the Senate's agenda by deciding which legislation will be considered. As Senator BYRD's history of the Senate makes clear, it is the exclusive role of the majority leader to "determine what matters or measures will be scheduled for floor action and when."

That's why—the rules notwithstanding—never in the history of the modern Senate has anyone—I repeat, anyone—other than the majority leader or his designee successfully offered a motion to proceed with legislation. It is simply not done.

Why? Because if such a motion prevails without the majority leader's consent, then his office has been impaired. His ability to control the agenda of the Senate—which is the basis of his power and that of the majority party—would be dealt a devastating blow.

That is why Senators of the majority party have always deferred to the majority leader's authority to set the Senate's agenda—and have voted with him to protect this power even when they disagreed on the substance of the issue at hand. Because they know that if they lose, what is at stake is their very power as the majority party. If any Senator can set the Senate agenda, then all the minority has to do to hijack the Senate agenda is convince a handful of Senators from the majority party to join them on any given issue.

Indeed, that is why, from time to time, the minority has sought to challenge the majority leader's power by offering motions to proceed. As a matter of fact, I believe the current majority leader did so when he was in the minority. He did so because he knew the consequences if he succeeded. And those high stakes were the very reason he was unsuccessful—because the majority party has always rallied around its leader.

We call today's vote a procedural vote. But it is in effect, a test of the power of the majority.

That being said, I suspect few on the other side of the aisle are jumping at the chance to proclaim the stakes in this vote because they hope, perhaps, that no one will notice—that it will be like a tree falling in the woods. If no one hears, perhaps it will not make a noise.

But this vote will make a loud noise—and will change the way the Senate operates. It will do so because—as of this moment—every Senator knows that even though the Standing rules of the Senate permit any Member can make a motion to proceed, no one has ever done it successfully, save for the majority leader or his designee.

After today, if the minority succeeds, it will be a different story. Each Senator will be able to decide how to interpret the results. Will it be OK for any Senator to offer a motion to proceed on any bill or resolution? Or just measures considered under expedited procedures, such as this bill? Or just those considered under expedited procedures which explicitly state that any member can make a motion to proceed? Take your pick, Madam President. Like beauty, this precedent is in the eye of the beholder. And that's what makes it so dangerous.

Our opponents argue that this is a unique circumstance. They are simply wrong. The procedure in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act is not unique.

There are many statutes containing expedited procedures. And 6 expedited procedures in current law, including the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, contain language that explicitly states that "any Member of the Senate" may offer the motion to proceed. That language merely restates the rules of the Senate. Still no one has ever successfully done so without the express consent of the majority leader.

There have been times when Congress has determined that is appropriate to override the traditional power of the majority leader to schedule the Senate's agenda, and this is important when this has been the will of Congress. Congress has passed legislation like the National Emergencies Act and the War Powers Act to do so.

The War Powers Act states that,

Any joint resolution or bill so reported (from Committee) shall become the pending business of the House in question (in the case of the Senate the time for debate shall be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents), and shall be voted on within three calendar days thereafter, unless such House shall otherwise determine by yeas and nays.

Madam President, unlike the War Powers Resolution, the nuclear Waste Policy Act does not make the resolution the pending business of the Senate. It does not take away the prerogative of the majority leader by making a resolution the pending business without any motion to proceed being required. Had the Senate wished to do so in this case it could have followed the language of the War Powers Resolution, but it did not.

Unlike this War Powers provision, there is no requirement in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act for Congress to take any action with regard to the Yucca Mountain resolution. The procedure spelled out in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act is not required; it is merely permitted. In other words, it is left up to the majority leader whether or not to proceed.

Indeed, the Nuclear Waste Policy Act anticipates that a vote on the Yucca Mountain resolution might not occur that it might be blocked. That is why, if the deadline passes, then the statute giving the State of Nevada a veto will have been carried out. That was part of the 1982 compromise.

The junior Senator from Alaska stated that he does "not know that it really matters very much" who makes the motion to proceed to the Yucca Mountain resolution.

Well, I say that it does matter. It matters very much. The majority leader has made clear he opposes proceeding with this legislation. He has staked his reputation and his office on this matter. I—and the people of Nevada—appreciate his courage in doing so.

So let me be clear: any Senator who offers a motion to proceed in this matter is posing a direct challenge to the powers of any majority leader. For the majority leader to lose such a vote would be unprecedented.

As I said, it may be in my interest as a member of the minority to see the majority leader lose such a vote. But the majority leader has put a lot on the line for Nevada, which is why I am standing here today—a Republican Senator—defending the prerogatives of the Democrat majority leader.

I am doing so because this issue is the most important matter for the State of Nevada to come before the U.S. Senate. No single issue unites Nevadans—no single issue transcends region, political party, or industry—like our fight against becoming the Nation's nuclear dumping ground.

In conclusion, let me restate how important the precedent we are setting today is if the majority leader is overruled. Every Senator needs to reflect on this vote very carefully because this vote could literally change the entire way the Senate operates. Many people believe this issue is vitally important. Some of us believe it is wrongheaded, as I do.

Regardless of how one Senator feels on this issue, the procedures of the Senate need to be preserved. The precedent set today will be a dangerous one and the unintended consequences in the future could be very dire. I encourage all my fellow Senators to think long and hard before they vote. It is not just a vote on whether or not to proceed on Yucca Mountain but a vote on violating the rules of the Senate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Let me first point out that it has been a long time coming. We have been approximately 20 years on this issue of nuclear waste, and we are moving in an orderly process, but I feel compelled to respond to my good friend from Nevada on the point on which he most eloquently commented relative to the authority of the majority leader in cases of this nature.

I am going to comment on the motion to proceed, and I think what my colleagues need to understand is that despite what has been said, we are proceeding under Senate rules, make no mistake about it. This particular provision was identified under procedures set forth in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act. They were very carefully developed and adopted as part of the rule-making powers of the Senate.

I quote that portion to address the concerns of my friend from Nevada.

They are deemed a part of the rules of the Senate.

We are not excluding the rules of the Senate. We are not excluding the authority of the majority leader. This procedure is deemed part of the Senate rules. So I hope we can put to rest the matter that somehow we are violating or circumventing Senate rules.

Some have objected to the provision that allows any Member to make the motion to proceed, but they forget, or perhaps ignore, the history of the provision and how integral it was to the 90-day limit on congressional consideration.

This came before the Senate in 1979 and 1980 when the Senate and House were attempting to resolve this issue, as we are today. That provision was considered and passed by the Senate.

Further, it was included in the nuclear waste measure that was introduced in 1981 by then-Chairman Jim McClure of Idaho, who had assumed the chairmanship of the committee. It was also included in legislation offered by Congressman UDALL on the House side, and it was included in the substitute amendments that were reported from the Energy Committee and the Environment and Public Works Committee which had joint referral of the legislation.

It was included in the legislation that passed the Senate in April and then was included in the final legislation that was enacted in December of 1982. It was part of the proposal insisted on by Senator Proxmire, Senator Mitchell, and others who wanted a stronger State veto provision. It was, in fact, what made work the compromise suggested by Congressman Joe Moakley, the chairman of the House Rules Committee.

I find it somewhat off the point, if you will, and kind of a diversion that some are speaking about violating the integrity of the Senate when we are moving a bill in line with what the Senate had already adopted. Again, I refer to the Nuclear Waste Policy Act and the manner in which this process was considered under the rulemaking powers of the Senate, and included in the rule are the words, "... are deemed to be part of the rules of the Senate."

Let me comment briefly on the role of the majority leader. I have the utmost respect for procedure and traditions. As to the role of the majority leader, there should be no misunderstanding that this process does not in any manner detract from his authority or responsibility. By its very terms, this process applies in the situation of a resolution of approval only under the Nuclear Waste Policy Act and no other situation. So no Member of this body should be misled. This process applies only to the situation of a resolution of approval under the Nuclear Waste Policy Act.

This resolution should not come as any surprise to any Member. All sides have known this was coming since last year. We certainly have not circumvented the procedure. Once the Secretary of Energy made his recommendation to the President, we all took out the calendars and figured out that 90 days would expire sometime before the end of July, specifically July 27. The majority leader was very much aware of this timeframe. Madam President, that day fast approaches.

The chairman of the committee introduced the resolution as required by law, and we had a fairly good idea of exactly when the Senate needed to act. Throughout the process—hearings, full committee consideration, and reporting—the majority leader has been aware of the status of the legislation and the need for the Senate to act, indeed, within the statutory timeframe.

The majority leader has also been aware of the desire of the chairman of the committee and mine as ranking member, together with other Members of the Senate who support the resolution, to find a time that was convenient for him, given his responsibilities to schedule activities on the Senate floor.

The majority leader's office, in fact, proposed a unanimous consent request almost immediately after we reported the resolution to the floor. We responded, and there have been several attempts to work out a suitable time and schedule as well.

It should not come as a surprise, Madam President. Everyone in the Senate knows what the issue is and what the issue is not. No one is trying to undermine the majority leader. No one is trying to circumvent the Senate rules.

When I brought the nuclear waste legislation to the floor last Congress, I tried to fully accommodate the desires of my colleagues from Nevada, and I certainly intend to see that they have every opportunity to express their concerns today.

I also advise my colleagues again that under the motion to proceed, which is nondebatable, we have agreed to a reasonable debate, 4½ hours. This shows good faith on the part of those of us who believe this matter should be brought to a head and resolved.

As I indicated, the motion to proceed is nondebatable. We could have relied on the statute to proceed, but we have worked out a satisfactory compromise that is fair and equitable. I think the method under which we are proceeding is a fair one, given the circumstances, but I want everyone to understand that we have gone the extra mile to accommodate procedure, the majority leader, each Member, and of course our friends from Nevada.

Provisions in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act are there to allow the leader to decide that he would not make the motion to proceed but allow someone else to do it. I did that this morning by proposing the motion to proceed, and we have now agreed on a procedure.

We have a choice to make. The Senate will today decide very simply whether we should permit the Secretary of Energy to apply for a license to operate a repository at Yucca Mountain.

Madam President, I am going to yield the floor at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I inquire of the distinguished manager if I may ask him a question or two. I discussed this with Senator MURKOWSKI.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I will be happy to respond to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Alaska.

The question of concern to this Senator and I think many others is the issue of safety in transporting this nuclear material. What are the plans in the general sense? That is, how will the material be transported? By truck? By rail? And in a general way, what will the routes be? Will they pass through densely populated areas?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. In response to the Senator from Pennsylvania, under the licensing process, I emphasize the action we are taking today does not address the transportation system or the procedure associated with the transportation system. That would come under the licensing process which takes place at a later time.

All we are authorizing today is the procedure to allow the Secretary to apply for the license. So the licensing process will in great detail examine all parameters associated with transportation safety, the manner in which the waste will be not only transported by rail and by truck but containers, and the safety of the containers to ensure they can withstand any anticipated exposure associated with derailment or whatever.

What we have in the transportation of nuclear waste is a number of historic examples of moving spent nuclear fuel. We have had about 2,700 shipments in the last 30 years. The distance these have been shipped totals almost 2 million miles. There has not been a single release of radioactivity.

Now, in other parts of the world—in Europe—they have shipped over 70,000 tons in the last 25 years. The estimates are 175 shipments to Yucca Mountain will take place over a 24-year period. I could go on and enlighten my friend at great length relative to the procedure, but I emphasize what we are doing today is giving the administration and the Secretary the authority to proceed with the licensing. The licensing will address the transportation issue.

I am happy to respond to further questions.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, my next question is, is the Senator from Alaska in a position to respond to what the tonnage would be, over how long a period of time, and how many shipments there would be to handle the nuclear waste involved in the projection for being a repository of Yucca Mountain?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. That Department estimate is 175 annual shipments to Yucca Mountain.

Mr. SPECTER. Over how long a period of time?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Over 24 years; that is 4,300 shipments. In comparison to 300 million hazardous material shipments that take place annually in the United States today with no notice given because these are military shipments associated with the breakup of reactors, most associated with our nuclear Navy fleet.

That is strict guidelines for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Department of Transportation. In testimony before the Senate Energy Committee, both the NRC and the DOT testified they can and will take all precautions necessary for safe and secure transportation. As I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania is aware, the transportation is in nearly impenetrable casks. For every 1 ton of spent fuel there are 4 tons of protective shielding. The casks have to pass the test to ensure there will be no breach. Tests show they can withstand a 120-mile-per-hour crash into a concrete wall and prolonged exposure to fires at 1,475 degrees.

Some of that will depend, of course, on routing and volume. But 175 shipments is a responsible estimate.

Annual numbers, as I indicated, depend on transportation plans and the combination of truck or train is not yet decided. This will be decided under the licensing process. It is fair to say we will have another opportunity for input on the adequacy of the transportation plan once the licensing process is undertaken. The action of the Senate today will lead to that next step.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, when I inquire as to the next step, the Senator from Alaska comments we will have another opportunity to make an inquiry. Will these procedures, if I may inquire of the Senator—

Mr. MURKOWSKI. It is my understanding—

Mr. SPECTER. Let me finish the question.

Having been here for 22 years, having come to the Senate the same day, we can almost communicate without speaking very much. But my question goes to the issue of another vote here. You say we will have another opportunity. Will there be something presented to the Senate where we have an opportunity to vote on our views as to the adequacy of the safety procedures?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. It is my understanding there will not be another opportunity for a vote. The licensing process is a procedure under the Nuclear Regulatory Commission that will examine and certify the safety of the transportation mode, but there will not be another opportunity for a vote.

Under the rules of procedure we have outlined, this is quite explicit. It allows the licensing process to go ahead. The licensing process will determine the adequacy of transportation and safety. We should recognize we have moved nuclear waste, military waste—primarily military waste—throughout the country for many years and have done it successfully. There is no reason to believe we cannot use transportation methods we have and technology we have to move high-level nuclear waste to one site as opposed to leaving it in 131 sites in 34 States.

Clearly, the Yucca Mountain provision which identifies it at one central location and without transportation, obviously, is going to have to stay in the States where it currently is located, which were not designed for a permanent repository.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, another couple of questions. In the absence of a vote, my question to the Senator from Alaska would be, What congressional oversight is possible? Sometimes licensing procedures are fine and sometimes they are not, but they do not have the assurance which this deliberative body can apply.

So my specific question is, What level of oversight would the Senator from Alaska envisage with the licensing procedures?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I would like to give my friend from Pennsylvania the comfort that suggests we are the parties in making a determination of safety. We certainly have the obligation of oversight. But the appropriate agencies that have this responsibility are the Department of Energy, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the Department of Transportation.

They have the obligation to address, if you will, transportation procedures, safety, routing, the manner in which casks are stored and safeguarded. It is fair to say that the National Academy of Sciences is a participant in the process as well.

What we have is the very best science, engineering, and technology to address the legitimate concerns of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I personally believe they have the expertise, the experience, and have certainly a record that suggests there has not been an accident. It does not mean there couldn't be, but all the necessary precautions within reason have been taken.

Of course, in comfort to the Senator from Pennsylvania, again, we have legitimate oversight of the agencies I have named and will continue to have and maintain that which I would hope would be sufficient to meet the concerns of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. My final question relates to the issue as to the precautions in the event, perhaps unlikely, that there would be an accident. What assurances are there, if it should happen, for example, in Russell, KS, my hometown—what could happen in Alaska could happen in the hometown of the Senator from Alaska—

Mr. MURKOWSKI. If I could respond, I would almost make sure the waste would not go through my State or through Russell, KS.

Nonetheless, it is a legitimate question. In the Nuclear Regulatory Commission proceedings there is obviously work in progress where there would be a response procedure associated with any inevitability of an accident at any time. That is part of the responsibility of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and they would work, of course, with Federal and State agencies to respond. It would involve the Department of Transportation and the Department of Energy. These procedures are already established.

Again, recognizing the movement of this waste over a period of time, there would be an increased degree of sophistication because, unlike military waste, which moves with little notice, clearly it would be known when nuclear waste was moving from reactors to the Yucca Mountain site so there would be special escorts, special procedures, and so forth, to safeguard it because it wouldn't be done without the knowledge, obviously, of the public.

What precautions are taken are outlined in the spent fuel transportation procedure, which has been put out by the Department of Energy, Office of Public Affairs. I would be happy to share this.

It is a lengthy list of what precautions the Government has taken in transportation routing. It covers routing, it covers security, it covers tracking, it covers coordination with State officials, as well as State participation.

It involves training procedures. It involves what the Government is doing with emergency procedure assistance. It identifies the specific States, proposed routing, casks, and so forth. I am further advised there is a certification here by the Chairman, Mr. Meserve, of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. It reads as follows:

Federal regulation of spent fuel transportation safety is shared by the U.S. Department of Transportation and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

It relates to the transportation of all hazardous materials. It further goes on to say:

For its part, NRC establishes design standards for the casks used to transport licensed spent fuel, reviews and certifies cask designs prior to their use. Further, cask design, fabrication, use and maintenance activities must be conducted under an NRC-approved Quality Assurance Program.

NRC has reviewed and certified a number of package designs. . . .

We believe the safety protection provided by the current transportation regulatory system is well established [and they] continually examine the transportation safety program.

I think that pretty much addresses the input, the testimony at the hearings by those responsible for oversight.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alaska for those responses.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Who yields time?

Mr. ENSIGN. I wonder if the junior Senator from Alaska will yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. ENSIGN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ENSIGN. While the Senator from Pennsylvania is still here—this was part of the hearing. I think it is something important for us to get cleared up.

The 175 shipments per year the Department of Energy—and you have mentioned this morning that has been a common number that has been tossed around. The piece of paper I have in my hand is page J-11. It is from the final EIS statement. I am sure your staff has a copy of this. This is part of the final EIS statement from the Department of Energy, table J-1, a summary of the estimated number of shipments for the various inventory, national transportation analysis scenario combinations.

They go through the various types of ways that we would ship and the minimums and maximums.

From what I understand, the 175 per year would be if every shipment was in dedicated trains, which the Department of Energy so far has been opposed to because of the expense of dedicated trains.

The other thing is that we have no rail built in Nevada to make possible the rail segment or the rail scenario. You have to have the rail built in Nevada to be able to go from rail to rail, and there is no rail leading to the Nevada Test Site.

The reason I bring this up, and the reason I would like at least to have this on the record as part of the Senate debate is because it is huge amounts more of shipments, from what I understand, unless it is all dedicated trains. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I think, in response to my good friend from Nevada, he has to understand where we are. The licensing plan will address the legitimate mass questions because there is no rail into the area. That is going to come under the licensing plan. But there is a Union Pacific route that is adjacent to the area. It would not be difficult to put a spur in. This was discussed in hearings and so forth.

Mr. ENSIGN. It is about 400 miles it has to go, 300-some depending on the route, it may have to go, from the Union Pacific to the Nevada Test Site.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. This line of consideration, while appropriate, is really part of the transportation plan which will come out of the licensing procedure. That is not what we are here for today. We are here to advance the process so the appropriate agencies can address whether they are going to issue a license. They might not issue a license. But what we are doing is giving the authority for the administration to proceed to try to obtain a license. That will be from the Department of Transportation, it will be from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and it will be from the Department of Energy. And they will address the questions of how access is provided, whether it be by rail or certainly truck is available as well; we can talk about these things, but these are all proposals that are going to be addressed in due course.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, if the Senator will continue to yield, the reason I brought it up and the reason I thought the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania was so appropriate is because this stuff that may be proposed is very important, first of all, because the cost of rail is not included in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act. The cost of the rail into the Nevada Test Site is not in the budgetary projections.

The second thing is that if a Senator is voting on whether this thing is going through—in other words, if I am a Senator from Pennsylvania, and I have a couple of nuclear powerplants, but I know I have a lot more shipments may be coming through my State—if I think there are only going to be 20 shipments a year through my State versus maybe 1,000 shipments through my State, that may make a difference on how I would vote.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, if I could point out, I do not mind responding to questions, but we are dividing time here. It is important, if the Senator from Nevada wants to speak, it is on his time.

Mr. ENSIGN. That is fine. If Senator REID has control of the time, it is fine with us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, Senator BOXER is due here any minute. I was waiting for her to speak. She is not here. I ask my friend from Nevada if he wants an extra 5 minutes now, or would he rather wait.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, 5 minutes now I would really appreciate.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from Idaho that I hope the Senator from California will be here at that time. If she is not, I will yield. But Senator MURKOWSKI could yield some time. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, what is the remaining time on either side so we can start off anew relative to where we are?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska controls 106 minutes, and the Senator from Nevada controls 125 minutes.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I understand that after the Senator from Nevada speaks, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. REID. When the Senator from California is here, I have explained to the Senator from Idaho that she would go first.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. That is fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Alaska would engage, I think it is an important part of our discussion.

The point I was making was that if a Senator were worried about transportation coming through their State—it seems to be one of the biggest issues, and I think it should be one of the biggest issues, if people are thinking about the way to vote on this issue—it is important to know how many shipments, or approximately how many shipments, or the types of shipments that are going to be coming through the State.

As the Senator from Alaska has said, that is going to be determined in the future. But as was pointed out, the only chance for the Senator from Pennsylvania to vote is today. Today is the only chance to vote on whether or not I have 20 shipments coming through my State or whether I may have 100 shipments coming through my State. The numbers can be that different.

Once again, based on table J-1 on page J-11, in the final EIS report, if we have a mostly truck scenario just on one of those proposed actions, we would have 52,000 shipments over the period of time that Yucca Mountain is open. Under mostly rail, we would have around 11,000 shipments. When we have dedicated trains, the numbers go way down. But these aren't dealing with dedicated trains. In fact, the final EIS Department of Energy report did not contain dedicated trains.

That is the reason I was asking the question and why I wanted to get it cleared up. If we don't know we are going to be using dedicated trains, how can the Senator from Alaska and others, including the Senator from Pennsylvania, say there are 175 shipments per year? We toss that number around as if it is a fact when, in fact, it is not a fact. It is something that is conjecture, pure conjecture, from the Department of Energy based on dedicated trains when they are not even putting that in their final EIS report.

The Senator can answer it on my time. If the Senator from Alaska would like to comment on that, I think it is very important to try to clear this up, because when the Department of Energy testified, they certainly didn't clear this up in the committee.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. This is an estimate. It is all it can possibly be at this time because, clearly, we do not ship this material. We have had experience in shipping in the United States. We had 2,996 shipments of spent fuel under the authority of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission from 1964 to the year 2000. We have shipped that waste 1.7 million miles. There it is on the chart. Low-level radioactive waste—you can see it on the chart—896 shipments. That is what we have done in the past.

I cannot in good conscience do anything more than submit what we have been given as an estimate of the number of shipments. I will not make a determination as to whether that is factual, but it is their best estimate. There is no reason to believe it should not be relatively accurate.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, reclaiming my time, the Senator said there were the 175 shipments as a statement of fact. He said, as a matter of fact, he is relatively sure of that statement. Because he said he was relatively sure of that statement—

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I think in this interpretation I used the word "estimate"—an estimate. It is all it can possibly be. It couldn't be anything else other than an estimate because it is has not shipped.

Mr. ENSIGN. Except, according to the EIS—and I don't know whether the Senator will address the EIS—on dedicated rail, it is around 175 shipments per year. According to their EIS, they don't use 175. That is only if it is dedicated rail.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. If I may respond to the Senator from Nevada, that may be only dedicated rail. There are other alternatives other than rail.

Mr. ENSIGN. Correct.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. What those might will be determined by the licensing process. But I would encourage my colleagues to recognize the reality here: Do we want this waste to stay where it is or do we want to move it to one central repository? You don't get it to a central repository and out of the States unless you move it.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I understand my time is up. I think this is an important question which we will have to deal with a little more this afternoon. I yield the floor so the Senator from Idaho can be recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senator from California is not here. I ask the Senator from Alaska to yield time to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, might I ask how much time the Senator from Idaho is going to require?

Mr. CRAIG. I will consume the remainder of the time.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I yield the remainder of the time for this morning to the Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, already this morning we have seen an example of the kind of record that is attempting to be made in part by the Senator from Nevada who would, first, argue a procedural issue that I and others, including renown Parliamentarians, argue does not exist. Clearly, the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 established an extraordinary procedure—not a precedent-setting procedure. Parliamentarians have agreed that is the case.

But even today, as the Senator from Alaska has mentioned, we have been willing to shape that to accommodate the Senators from Nevada to allow debate on a motion to proceed prior to that vote. Clearly, the majority leader was not engaged on the floor. He already engaged us by saying he would not schedule a vote. He has walked away from his responsibility, if in fact it was there. I would argue that it was not there. Any Senator, by an act of Congress and by the law of the United States, could have done this.

When we talk about precedent-setting action on the floor of the Senate as it relates to the rules of the Senate, we talk about the normal processes of configuring the schedule. I agree with the junior Senator from Nevada on that statement. This is not a precedent-setting action today. In fact, I think those who have observed it have recognized the kind of flexibility and give and take and the responsibility that this Senate had to take under the 1982 law.

I believe the record will be complete. I do not believe that complete record in any way can or will demonstrate that future Parliamentarians would argue that a precedent has been set. Quite the opposite has happened. The Senate of the United States voted in 1982 to establish a process. Therefore, the Senate collectively spoke. It was clear in its speaking that a motion could be placed. And the reason they did that was very clear. They did not want a single person, a majority leader, Democrat or Republican, blocking the responsibility of the Federal Government as it related to a necessary step in the process of determining whether this Nation would establish a deep geologic, high-level waste nuclear repository; that it was more important than one Senator, in that case the majority leader.

It set in place a time schedule. It even gave the State of Nevada—the two Senators are on the floor speaking in behalf of phenomenal power—the power to veto. They have vetoed this. But even in that case, it did not allow a total State prerogative because this is a national issue of very real importance. And that is why we are on the floor today.

We can debate procedure, if we want. But I think that is clear and it has been well established, and several Parliamentarians argue on either side of the case.

What is clear is a law, and a law clearly stating and a law being passed by the Congress itself and signed by a President. That is what is important. It is from that law that we act today. But because, as the Senator from Nevada has spoken, we wanted and we believed it most important to accommodate my colleagues from Nevada—as I would want to be accommodated if this were happening in my State—we have given that kind of flexibility inside the law by a unanimous consent. And it is under that action that we are currently debating Senate Joint Resolution 34.

What are we doing today? We are taking another step forward. This action today does not, in itself, establish a deep geologic repository for high-level nuclear waste at Yucca Mountain in Nevada. It says that we, the Senate, agree with the Department of Energy that a certification process has gone forward to determine the minimum standards and capabilities of geology and water tables and all of those kinds of things to meet tremendously high level protocol, and now we hand it forth into the next step, and that is licensure.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is concerned about transportation, as he should be. But the Senator from Alaska responded appropriately. That is part of a very meticulous effort at licensing a facility, how it will be constructed, under what conditions it will be constructed, how the waste will move from the State of Pennsylvania or from the State of Idaho to that facility.

Yes, we have ample oversight capacity and capability, and we ought to exercise it. I serve on the Energy Committee from which this resolution came. I want to make sure the Nuclear Regulatory Commission handles that transportation portion of the licensing well. We also have multiple jurisdictions—the Department of Transportation. Therefore, Environment and Public Works will have some say in oversight.

Will there be another action or another vote? No. That is not prescribed within the law. But I also know the State of Nevada is not through either. They will exert phenomenal oversight, as they should, as this process goes forward if—the Nuclear Regulatory Commission determines that a license is appropriate for this facility under all of these kinds of conditions.

I would suggest that we have also spent $4 billion. And $4 billion is an important figure. It was not our money. It was not taxpayer money. It was ratepayers' money from the 39 States that have commercial nuclear reactors operating power-generating facilities who have paid into a fund to take us this far, a fund that continues to grow, and a fund that will, in large part, finance the construction and the operation of this facility.

So we are taking the next step, the important step. I must tell you, a vote today on a motion to proceed is a vote to take the step or to not step at all. If we do not, we step back 20 years—20 years—into a debate about how to manage high-level nuclear waste with commercial facilities, and temporary repositories filling up with waste as we speak.

Do we say, if we do not speak today, there will be no future for the nuclear industry in this country? Well, we certainly say we have no resolution of how to manage its high-level waste stream, except to leave it in well over 100 facilities spread across 39 States.

Will the States then respond by allowing additional repositories to be built in those States when they were promised that those were the only repositories and that high-level waste would move out and move to a permanent repository, as the Congress decided, in a single location? Those are the unknowns.

But what is known today is that the 20 percent of the electrical energy of this country that is generated through nuclear reactors is the cleanest electrical energy outside of hydro in the United States. Some who are concerned about climate change and want even cleaner energy—and this Nation demanding even higher volumes of high-quality electrical energy—are recognizing that, at least under current and immediate-future technology, the nuclear industry is the right industry to turn to for advanced generation.

So do we want to walk away from that industry today, as we will if we vote down a motion to proceed? Or do we want to take a step forward in a licensing process that says the whole industry can move to, potentially, a future opportunity of producing 25 or 30 or 40 percent of our electric energy needs of this country in a clean and responsible fashion?

Let me talk for a few moments about transportation. I do not fear transportation. The reason I do not fear transportation is the history of transportation of radioactive materials and high-level waste in this country. There have been 2,700 shipments, over the last 30 years, of spent nuclear fuel; some 300 million hazardous and radioactive shipments annually in this country; and there are currently about 3 million shipments annually of radioactive material in this country. So there is a lot of movement going on.

So why the alarm? It is a tactic. It is an alarmist political tactic to try to kill this very effort. Should we be concerned about transportation? You bet we should. But we have a very good record to date of a lot of movement of nuclear waste in this country and radioactive material in a safe and sound fashion.

The reason is quite clear: Because the Federal Government has demanded from day one that those shipments be done in extraordinary ways, extraordinary super-built containers, much of it traveling by rail. The high-level waste that comes to Idaho is naval waste. It comes by rail. But the low-level waste that leaves Idaho leaves by highways in very well designed, tremendously strong containers, and well-managed, selected routes, all of it guided and monitored by GPS. It is tremendously safe today as that waste goes from Idaho to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant in Carlsbad, NM.

Yes, we have a right to be concerned, but we do not have a right to use alarm and fear where they should not exist. But we have a right to do what is responsible to keep it out of our populated areas, to move it in appropriate fashions in less populated ways.

The Senator from Nevada speaks about rail and an appropriate and safe way to handle it, well demonstrated, well proved. And the Nuclear Regulatory Commission may well want even enhanced containers. But what I would suggest is that if we fail to act today to determine the next step, and many of these utilities go to a private location and establish a private repository—as some are now contemplating—then there is a strong possibility that, in a much less regulated way, in a much less orchestrated and monitored way, we will see nuclear waste moving across this country simply because we failed to act and failed to organize and failed to respond to a highly regulated, highly controlled, and highly monitored transportation system.

Those are the realities of where we are today with this industry and where we are today with the volume of nuclear waste, high-level spent fuel nuclear waste that is building up in repositories across the country. It isn't damned if you do and damned if you don't. It is a responsible and important step to take to move this resolution through to a licensing procedure which will then have full transparency, which will then have the ability of the Senate of the United States and the House to do the kind of oversight necessary to make sure that we can recognize what both Senators from Nevada, who are in the Chamber, need: The best assurance possible, in a zero sum game, if you can get there, that this has been done to the maximum capability of the engineering talent of the best we have to offer.

The 10,000-year protocol established all of those kinds of things that meet the standards that are so critically necessary to do what is right and responsible for this country: store our high-level waste in a deep geologic repository; cause the next step to happen; advance the future of the nuclear industry; advance clean electrical energy for our country well into the future.

It is a responsible act that the Senate undertakes today to allow that very kind of thing to happen. I hope this afternoon, when we have an opportunity to vote on the motion to proceed, which, in fact, is a vote on whether we will allow the process to go forward, a majority of the Senate will vote in favor of that motion to proceed.

I yield the floor.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, at 12:30 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:15 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Ms. STABENOW).

APPROVAL OF YUCCA MOUNTAIN REPOSITORY—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I yield myself 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, the Senate today is faced with an important decision about whether to ship extremely hazardous, high-level nuclear waste to a permanent repository in Yucca Mountain. Let there be no doubt in anyone's mind, I would like to see this nuclear waste shipped safely out of Minnesota. I wish I could responsibly vote to support this resolution. I regret that I cannot today vote in favor.

I have consistently said that before the Department of Energy and the Congress make a final judgment that we are ready to begin shipping high-level nuclear waste to a repository, there should be a carefully thought out, detailed plan in place, approved by the NRC and the DOE, to transport this radioactive waste and to manage all of the risks associated with that transportation.

Although it has had over 30 years to do so, the Department of Energy has failed to develop such a safe—I emphasize “safe”—waste transportation plan.

While I want this high-level nuclear waste out of our State and think Yucca Mountain may very well be the most sensible location, I don't think we should move forward and commit ourselves irrevocably until we have all of the transportation and security issues addressed.

Therefore, I have come to the conclusion, through a careful examination of congressional testimony, meetings with DOE officials, including the Secretary of Energy, State energy officials and local leaders, that there are too many uncertainties, too many unresolved issues, and the risks are simply too high for the citizens of Minnesota.

I cannot now support this resolution. We urgently need to develop a comprehensive waste transportation plan and policy that protects the health and safety of local communities and all Americans. We should have such a plan in place before moving forward on a permanent repository plan.

It is unacceptable to me as a Senator that the Department of Energy has ignored the very real and daunting task of developing a secure, comprehensive transportation plan before seeking to authorize the Yucca Mountain site.

The simple fact is, the Congress should not be considering nor should the DOE have recommended authorization of the Yucca Mountain site before State and local officials were consulted and a comprehensive transportation plan has been finalized which takes into account their concerns and the people they represent.

Madam President, even though the Department of Energy has had years to develop such a plan, they don't have one. By the way, I thank Secretary Abraham. I have talked with him over the phone. He has been very gracious, and I appreciate that. But when he testified May 16, 2002, that the “Department is just beginning to formulate its preliminary thoughts about a transportation plan,” to me, that is not enough for my State or the country.

The Department spent $7 billion looking into Yucca Mountain geology but less than $2 million on the transportation of the nuclear waste. That works out at less than $10 million a year for the last 20 years. This is a fundamental flaw in the Department's approach. So, to me, failing to plan for the safe and secure transport of nuclear waste before approving the repository site would be irresponsible.

I recognize the industry has had a generally safe record of transporting small amounts of nuclear waste over the last 35 years. But shipments to Yucca Mountain would be at an unprecedented level. The Department of Energy estimates that transportation to a central repository could involve the shipment of more than 46,000 tons of high-level radioactive nuclear waste across 40 States in 53,000 trucks or 20,000 railcars. It is worth noting that even if the shipments were to begin today, there are more than 200 million Americans living in the 700-plus counties that are traversed by DOE's potential roads and rail lines. The population is only going to grow, and grow more quickly, during the time DOE needs to move nuclear waste across the country.

Beginning in 2010, the DOE estimates that over 1,000 truck and rail shipments of nuclear waste could well travel through Minnesota, through our most populated cities and towns such as Minneapolis-St. Paul, Mankato, Rochester, and the Twin City suburbs. So 683,000—looking at the proposed route—Minnesotans would live within 1 mile; 2,213,612 Minnesotans would live within 5 miles; 3,121,718 Minnesotans would live within 20 miles. That is about half of the State's population.

This raises a very important and yet unanswered set of questions about the risks of possible accidents or terrorist attacks, and how local communities through which the waste would travel would manage the risk. That is why the Conference of Mayors passed a resolution just this past June expressing serious concerns about the issue and urging the Congress to prohibit the transport of waste until all cities—I include Minnesota cities and towns—along the proposed transportation route have been consulted and have received adequate training and equipment to protect the public health and safety of the citizens in the event of an accident.

Again, I thank the Department of Energy and I thank the Secretary for his graciousness. Unfortunately, DOE has yet to hold any public meetings in recent years in Minnesota on the topic of, again, where is this going to go, what kind of training is there going to be, and how are we going to prevent an accident? To me, this is a key issue.

Example: The DOE environmental impact statement maintains that shipping high-level spent fuel casks on mixed general freight trains is acceptable. This would permit casks of high-level nuclear waste to be mixed among cars of corn, soybeans, autoparts, and other goods. I am concerned that the DOE's regulations appear to be market driven; mixed freight trains are cheaper than dedicated trains.

As the American Association of Railroads testified, DOE's position is “driven, no doubt, by economic consideration.” But the safe transportation of these highly toxic materials must take precedence over any cost considerations. I agree with the American Association of Railroads that dedicated trains would be a safer and more prudent alternative. I would like to have that laid out for me before we have a final vote on the repository.

Madam President, I believe a transportation plan for nuclear waste shipments should have a “zero accident” goal, but as yet the DOE doesn't even have a plan. A zero accident goal would reflect a culture in which safety is paramount and drives all aspects of the transportation system. That goal encourages a culture of safety.

I know there are safety concerns about these materials being stored where they are. The Department of Energy has argued that we need to consolidate this waste in one location. But that argument overlooks the fact that authorization of Yucca Mountain as a permanent repository doesn't solve these concerns. The only reactors that will get rid of their waste completely, according to the DOE, are those that are closed today—and those are not in Minnesota.

According to the draft environmental impact statement prepared by DOE, the Monticello and Prairie Island reactors will still have 111 and 344 metric tons of high-level nuclear waste, respectively, onsite when Yucca Mountain is full.

Despite what the proponents would have us believe, the DOE's proposal fails to eliminate Minnesota's nuclear waste. Nationwide, when the Yucca Mountain project is completed, there will roughly be the same amount of high-level nuclear waste at powerplants across the country as there is today. We simply cannot afford to overlook the real and pressing security concerns inherent with the transportation of this fuel, nor can we ignore the fact that the next generation will still be left with similar problems of what to do with the waste.

I will conclude this way. We urgently need to achieve a real solution to our storage problem with high-level nuclear waste, as opposed to forcing authorization of Yucca Mountain before there is a comprehensive plan for transporting the waste safely and securely before it is in place.

I believe the Department of Energy needs to immediately begin a true collaborative process, seeking broad-based stakeholder input on the real challenges of transportation safety and emergency preparedness. While the Department of Energy has elected to proceed with significant questions remaining unresolved, a comprehensive transportation plan developed through a consultative process would give DOE's proposal for Yucca Mountain the credibility it now lacks. The DOE should immediately organize a stakeholder task force to develop transportation recommendations that include the experts on the ground, such as Governors and their safety agencies, local elected officials of the large and small towns where the waste will travel, emergency preparedness experts, and public health and safety officials, and develop a responsible plan that would transport this waste safely before a final decision is made.

I believe there are a whole host of issues surrounding the transportation of nuclear waste material that must be addressed before final decisions are made on Yucca Mountain. We can make the decision next year or the year after. That would be fine with me—if these concerns can be met first.
